Mr. RABAUT. I want to ask my colleague the chairman of this committee, how it is that on two occasions, last year and this year, first in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and then in the full Committee on Appropriations, the House both times approved the language exempting heads of families 45 years of age or older, with either a dependent spouse or one or more dependent parents or minor children, from the lay-off provision of the bill, but the humanitarian provision has been stricken out in conference.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] that the House committee insisted strenuously on that provision, a very salutary provision, which was inserted in the bill by the gentleman from Michigan, and one of the very few amendments adopted after the bill was on the floor. It is one of the last amendments on which the House receded. The gentleman understands that necessarily in a conference we must both give and take. We can understand how tenaciously the House conferees insisted on adherence to the House provisions when we note that while the House receded on only $45,000,000, the Senate receded on $67,000,000. I may add that I think every Member of the House committee would have kept this provision in the bill had it been possible to do it.

Mr. RABAUT. Then it was impossible to hold it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. As wholeheartedly as we approved it, we just could not do it.

Mr. RABAUT. I feel some relief, so far as the treatment of the House is concerned, but I do not feel it is proper treatment for these older workers who cannot find a place in industry. The W. P. A. ought to be a port in a storm for young men who are without employment, but for people actually denied employment in industry because of their age, the W. P. A. ought to be a place to which they may go for steady employment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman, and I think every member of the committee of conference felt the same way.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Just to ask the gentleman in connection with this 18 months' rule which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] asked about. As I read the statement here on page 12, amendment No. 50, do I understand that the bill as finally agreed upon by the conference committee provides that workers who have made reasonable effort and have been unable to secure private employment are exempt from the 18 months' provision?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Both provisions were stricken out. The Senate insisted on one and the House insisted on the other, and in the end both had to recede to avoid a stalemate.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Therefore, all we have is the hard-and-fast 18-month provision.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Exactly the proposition as submitted by the House, with the exception of the 45-year provision.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I refer to Senate amendment No. 43, which has to do with the $40,000,000 and the $20,000,000 items for Federal agencies.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am very glad to say that we were able to go along with the gentleman. The Senate finally yielded and we were able to retain the House figure.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Briefly. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. During the debate on this measure we reached an agreement between the National Park Service and the W. P. A. concerning recreation areas. Does the gentleman know whether or not in the Senate any change was made?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No change was made. I am glad to apprise the gentleman and the House that ample provision is made for that Service.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it left the House provided for $1,111,764,916. As it comes back from the conference, including the funds provided for out of the R. F. C., it carries $1,282,000,000, about $171,000,000 more than it did when it left the House. The amendments that have been adopted have all been to make the bill a little worse. The limitations which were put on on pages 2 and 3, of the number who might be employed monthly through the month of November have been removed so that it could be more of a political racket than a relief bill. An addition of better than $70,000,000 has been provided for loans under the Farm Security Administration, when the only thing they do that should in any way be permitted to continue is in the matter of direct grants to farmers in distress.

Amendments have been adopted, in Puerto Rico, increasing the amount $500,000 for the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration, and permitting them to go into activities, which the House did not permit. This made it a little worse. On top of that, without regard to the interest of those workers in the United States who are embarrassed by the Wages and Hours Act, we have waived its provisions with reference to Puerto Rico—all for the benefit of a group of a certain type of racketeers in New York City, according to what I understand; and I think that is bad.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And this same gang of racketeers has been one of the active lobbies right from the Washington Hotel, in order to get this exemption.

Mr. TABER. I am surprised that the other body should be so susceptible. They have added $250,000 for the political propaganda bureau under Lowell Mellett, which should not be done. About the only thing we saved was an amendment prohibiting the theater racket—$50,000,000 has been added for the relief of those who have been rendered homeless or in distress as the result of military operations abroad. They have added $50,000,000 to the Surplus Commodity Corporation for the purchase of surplus commodities, which makes about $50,000,000 more than was available this current year. I have been unable to see any excuse for any of these things.

There will be presented to you in disagreement of the Senate authorizing payments up to 10 percent of the total revenues of the T. V. A. to different States in lieu of taxes. Under the organic act 5 percent was to be allowed. This is an outright hand-out where those folks are getting rates which costs 2¼ mills under reclamation projects, where they say that is the lowest they can allow and get by, and here they are selling it for an average of 1.69 mills. Lower rates; and they want the Government of the United States to pay the taxes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Under section 7, amendment No. 42, appropriations for the Executive Office of the President, there is an appropriation of $330,000 to take care of efficiency and savings under Reorganization Plan No. II. I thought we were going to have some efficiency in Government and savings as a result of the President's reorganization, but here is an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. TABER. The conference report calls for an increase of $250,000. This is that racket that has been going on in the President's office, writing political speeches during campaigns. It is absolutely useless and inefficient. The salary roll is away up in the air, and in my opinion it is without authority of law.

Personally I cannot go along with this report myself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EMERGENCY DEFENSE APPROPRIATION

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the emergency defense bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am going to take just 5 minutes in order to keep the record straight; not to comment in detail on the conference report.

I voted against the relief bill, as it may be recalled, when it passed the House. I expect to vote for this conference report, not because I have changed my attitude in any way on the fundamental question involved in the relief bill, but because if we must have this kind of relief bill, and apparently we do at the present time, I think the conferees have worked out the situation about as well as it could be done.

The bill is much more than it was when it passed the House, as bills always are. Gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol proceed to load up appropriation bills that come over there with everything they can think of. After they do that they go into a huddle to see if there is not somebody who can take it out of the bill again. There is only one way to cut down appropriations and that is to quit appropriating money. All this business of resurveying and cutting off after we put it into the bill is nothing but a lot of hot air and gestures. If we do not stop these appropriations when they go through here they will not be stopped anywhere.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes, I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I know the gentleman does not intend to cast any reflections upon the other body, but it is my opinion that under the Constitution they were to be a check on the House of Representatives. What kind of a check does the gentleman think they have been?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It has been a sort of blank check most of the way down the line. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in January the Budget estimate for W. P. A. was $1,000,000,000. Some of us had high hopes that the time had come when we were going to try to pull in on the relief burden, but those hopes were shortly dissipated when the estimate came back requesting permission to use that $1,000,000,000 in 8 months. In other words, a 33⅓ percent "hike" in the relief expenditures. The reason given for it was that there had been a slight drop in the production index and a slight recession in business, and therefore there should be a 33⅓-percent increase in the relief bill. Since the House passed that bill we have appropriated more than $5,000,000,000 for a defense program, speeding up industry everywhere. There is no earthly justification in sound logic or reason for this relief load costing this Government a billion and a half dollars in the next fiscal year. I want to express the very earnest hope and prayer that the President and the W. P. A. will spread this $975,000,000 over the full fiscal year and not come back to Congress for another appropriation.

The morning paper carries the news that 1,000 W. P. A. workers in Washington, in the District of Columbia, which is not an industrial city—you would not expect this industrial upswing on account of this to affect Washington—yet in the city of Washington 1,000 W. P. A. workers are taken off of W. P. A. rolls and put on the defense program.

That should, and indeed will, happen all over the length and breadth of this country. There is no excuse today for an able-bodied man not going to work in private employment, in private industry; and private industry in conjunction with this defense program should see to it that every able-bodied, competent person is employed and taken off W. P. A. I want to express the hope that in carrying out this program during the coming year, while Congress has permitted the use of these funds in 8 months, those in charge will take advantage of these substantial sums we are spending for defense and make the W. P. A. program less so they will not come back for more money.

We are spending a great deal preparing this country against invasion from foreign countries, but we are woefully lacking in an economic defense right here in our own country. We have already appropriated more than $5,000,000,000 for national defense and another $4,000,000,000 program is yet to come. We ought to have under consideration right now ways and means of raising the revenue to pay for the cost of this defense of America and the Western Hemisphere. The American people are willing to do it. They know they have got to meet this proposition some time or other, and that they will have to pay the bill. But at the time we are preparing our boundary defenses we must at the same time not overlook the economic and fiscal defenses of this country.

I hope the W. P. A. program will be spread over the year and that we shall not be asked for a deficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report.

The Senate added 70 amendments to the bill as passed by the House. I think it is a fair statement to say that almost without exception the House conferees have surrendered on every amendment of importance. I call your attention to the first amendment in this bill.

Colonel Harrington assured the House committee that he wanted to take politics out of W. P. A. He voluntarily gave us figures for maximum employment in the months of July to November, inclusive. The House inserted these figures in the bill with a view to the elimination of politics. The Senate struck the figures out of the bill, and the House conferees yielded to the Senate. Why? Mr. Speaker, I submit there is no logical reason in the world for that action except the desire to place the funds provided for those in need in a position to be utilized for political purposes in the campaign of 1940 as they were in the campaigns of 1938 and 1936. Actions speak louder than words.

I call your attention to amendments 31 to 34. The House conferees again yielded to the Senate. As a result, a precedent is established for undermining the national wage and hour legislation on our books at this time. The provisions of that law insofar as they apply to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are eliminated.

I call your attention to amendment No. 50 which eliminates the liberalization which the House provided in respect to the 18 months' provision. Under the House liberalization, those 45 years of age or more with dependents were excluded from the terms of the 18 months' provision. The Senate eliminated the liberalization. The House conferees again yielded.

Amendments 6 and 7 undermine materially the principle of local contribution and provide that $25,000,000 may be taken away from those in need and applied to costs other than labor costs. The House conferees again yielded.

The bill when it passed the House carried appropriations totaling about $1,111,755,916. It returns to the House as a result of concessions by the House conferees carrying approximately $171,000,000 more than when it went to the Senate.

The bill carries an additional $69,000,000 for relief and rehabilitation loans, bringing the total up to $184,000,000. It carries an additional $50,000,000 for surplus commodities on top of the $185,000,000 already appropriated for that purpose. It carries an increase of $500,000 for the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration in the face of testimony before your committee indicating most scandalous conditions in Puerto Rico under that Administration. It carries an increase of $250,000 for the office of Government Reports in spite of the lamentably weak justification of that agency before your committee. It takes $100,000 away from those in need and makes it available for broadcasting purposes. It takes another $2,200,000 away from those in need and makes it available for increased administrative expenditure. It carries an increase of $1,200,000 for expenses of the administrative agencies under this program other than W. P. A. All this due to surrender by the House conferees.

Time does not permit going into the T. V. A. amendment, which is in dispute, and which will be taken up separately on its own merits. I am opposed to that amendment and shall vote against it.

I am also opposed, Mr. Speaker, to this conference report. It is not possible for me to go along with it. I shall vote against its adoption. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the statement made by our distinguished majority leader just a short time ago in which he made the declaration that the Republican Party was trying to make the Democratic Party the war party of the country. May I say to the distinguished majority leader that the present administration is doing that so effectively itself that any efforts on our part are entirely unnecessary. I feel that the Republicans in no way need give aid or assistance to the methods of the present administration to impress upon the country that the administration now in power is the war-minded administration and that the party responsible for the administration is the war party of the country.

If anything were needed to confirm this declaration, the appointments of yesterday are certainly complete confirmation. The distinguished majority leader said that the Republican Party had been hunting for issues. I want to correct that statement. The Democratic Party has given us all the issues that a party might need, and no better issue could be had than the conference report that is now before us.

I want to remind the majority leader that the management of relief is certainly a real issue today. I want to remind the majority that from the majority side and under the direction of the majority investigating committee, the management of the relief has been branded with political corruption, with extravagance, and with admitted inefficiency. Instead of those who were in need receiving relief which they should have, they have been exploited in a most shameless manner. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I want to remind the distinguished majority leader that the Republican Party has an issue in the continued war that has been carried on by the present administration against private enterprise. I want to remind the majority that the difficulties which appear as industry must be geared to a preparedness machine are due entirely to the continued warfare carried on by the present administration against private enterprise, private capital, and private industry. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I want to remind the distinguished majority leader that all of the collectivist tendencies of this present administration in power is a real issue that the Republican Party accepts today. No better evidence of those collectivist tendencies could be presented than appear at this time in connection with the Puerto Rican program, which is a part of this relief bill. Lip service to constitutional government is what we have had in the last 7 years. Collectivism and constitutional representative government have nothing in common. The one is the antithesis of the other. Collectivism is the product of totalitarianism. Defending democracy cannot contemplate a series of experiments in collectivism such as the present administration has resorted to in the last 7 years. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I want to remind the majority leader that the spend-for-prosperity program of the administration is an issue which concerns the welfare and security of the American people. Day by day it is becoming increasingly evident to people in all walks of life that the pay day for the profligacy of the last 7 years is at hand. With the boosting of the debt limit, and the increasing of an already heavy tax burden, the people are painfully conscious that the more abundant life has turned out to be the deadening despair of debt and disillusionment. Day by day it is becoming increasingly evident, as the startling disclosures of unpreparedness are made, that the wealth of the Nation has been wasted in the wildest orgy of spending we have ever known, an orgy of spending which has been frowned upon by many outstanding Democrats and denounced by every Republican. Billions have been spent with an eye on ballots which might well be used today for battleships. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I need not dwell at length on the details of the financial fallacies of the last 7 years, nor attempt to emphasize the perilous position in which we find ourselves as a result of those fallacies. The figures speak for themselves. The majority might well examine the costs of a multitude of projects—Florida ship canal, harnessing the tides at Passamaquody, the experiments in resettlements, the wide variety of extended W. P. A. excursion, and many, many more, and then figure for itself what the cost of these expenditures might buy today in the shape of instruments of preparedness. No one could state more forcefully the peril of our financial position today than did the Secretary of the Treasury in his appearance before the Congress in connection with the new tax measure.

None of the explanations or excuses that debts are not debts and that spending is a new streamlined system of saving will pay for 1 hour's work on a battleship or buy 1 pound of metal for an airplane. The American people know that, and know it only too well. As they are faced with the necessity of providing a national defense, they realize fully and in a very practical way that extravagant social experiments, wasteful political excursions, and unsound financial practices have seriously impaired our strength. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I want to remind the distinguished majority leader that the policy of a party purge is a real issue; in fact, an issue in which some of his own party stalwarts may still be much interested. To many of them, it is probably a very delicate issue. To many it is undoubtedly a taunting memory. To the American people generally it smacks of foreign philosophies not altogether democratic. Its victims have not likely endorsed it. Its survivors can hardly be said to be reconciled to it. The American people reject it. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I want to remind the distinguished majority leader that the Court-packing program of the administration is still a live issue with the American people. They have not forgotten the attack on the independence of the judiciary. They still remember the tactics resorted to and the stern commands which were issued to ride roughshod over judicial strongholds. Even the emphasis on foreign affairs has not blotted out the memory of the attempted ruthless ravage of Court interpretations. The defense of the independence of the Court is a very fundamental part of the defense of democracy.

And, Mr. Speaker, by the same token, that which would destroy such independence must inevitably weaken one of the foundations, and a most important foundation, upon which the whole citadel of free institutions is built. Need I remind the majority leader of the denunciation of the purposes of that program so eloquently voiced by an able and fearless son of Texas here in this House? Can it be that the distinguished majority leader has forgotten that memorable occasion? Is it possible that the courageous stand of his colleague from Texas made no impression upon him? It cannot be. Surely my suggestion is all that is needed to refresh the mind of the distinguished majority leader of the method of attack and the necessity of defense at that time. The court-packing program failed, but the purposes have not been forgotten. That is an issue made for us by the Democratic Party.

I might go on, Mr. Speaker, for an extended time reciting live issues made for the minority by the practices, the policies, the purposes of the party in power. No good could come of such a recital at this time. It inevitably would tend to embarrass my friends on the majority side who have sponsored, supported, and defended the philosophy responsible for the whole program. I have no such purpose in mind. Had not the majority leader suggested the absence of issues I would have refrained from even this casual reminder of things which may be painful to many.

Let me assure my friend for whom I have a real respect, the able and distinguished majority leader, that the Republican Party welcomes the opportunity to meet the issues made for it by the Democratic Party—issues which we believe are fundamental, issues which go to the heart of our system of government and our way of life, issues that are of vital importance today as the Nation faces the sterner tasks of tomorrow, issues that will determine the destiny of the substantial spirit even more than the superficial form of democracy, issues which will command the attention, inspire the zeal, and challenge the devotion of men and women throughout the land—men and women committed to the cause of constitutional government and enlisted for the defense of the heritages which they treasure. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, in these 3 short minutes there are two protests I would like to register with regard to this conference report. The first is that through appropriations and authorizations there will have been taken out of the Treasury by our action this year over $10,000,000,000 for war purposes. For relief and for the unemployed we appropriate only $975,650,000. This conference report still retains the 18 months' clause, discriminates against the foreign-born, continues the drastic wage cuts, violates the Bill of Rights, does not restore the prevailing wage, and in general crucifies the W. P. A. worker. The workers throughout the country are receiving discharge notices every day. However, as the program is uniforms and not overalls, this conference report is in line with it.

The second protest I now register against this conference report is the manner in which they put over the amendment exempting labor exploiters in Puerto Rico from the provisions of the wage-hour law. After we committed the wage-hour amendments in this House, Senator KING, of Utah, took a District of Columbia bill, providing for the hospitalization of Virgin Islanders in the District of Columbia, and added to that bill this amendment exempting labor exploiters in Puerto Rico from the provisions of the wage-hour law. Failing to get action over here on that bill, he then takes this relief bill and he adds the same amendment excluding the Puerto Rican workers from the protection of the wage-hour law. It is most unfortunate, and I certainly deplore the fact that the majority of the House conferees permitted the amendment to go into this conference report without any protest and without any fight.

The fact that this unusual and inordinate procedure was resorted to demonstrates conclusively the weakness of the case of the labor exploiters who were behind this amendment. Before the present session is over I shall introduce a resolution to investigate the vicious lobby that put this thing over on the Congress of the United States by this most fantastic procedure. In my investigation request I shall reveal all of the facts. I am going to state who is who and what is what, and give the details of the vicious lobby that operated to put this thing over.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This Puerto Rican situation has been terrible for a long time. The Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration and the way it has been operated has been awful. This latest performance of discriminating between the people down there and the people up here is ridiculous.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. We are not doing anything for the people of Puerto Rico. By this amendment we are aiding and abetting their exploiters, a gang of chiselers who are unscrupulous and parasitical. The leader of this needle-industry lobby was a Mr. Schweitzer, who was assisted by a Mr. James Lanzetta, who received $10,000 a year from the treasury of Puerto Rico and at the same time comes down here and lobbys against the best interests of the Puerto Rican people.

What consideration are we giving to the people of Puerto Rico? In this relief bill we have cut Puerto Rico from $7,000,000 to $5,000,000 for relief purposes. On the other hand, we give the vilest gang of labor exploiters from New York City, who exploit those women and children in Puerto Rico, particularly in the needle trade, by virtue of this relief bill, relief from the provisions of the wage-hour law. What a mockery. There is dirty business behind this thing and I am going to prove it to the Congress before we adjourn. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I want to confine my remarks to section 40 on page 47, which provides for an appropriation of $50,000,000 for purposes of relief. It practically turns this money over to the President to distribute through the American Red Cross or any other agency he designates.

I am in favor of the amendment and the proposal, but I wish to make the prediction that this is just the start of what America will probably have to do in the next few years. As most Members of the House know, I am an isolationist from foreign wars, but I am not an isolationist from arbitration and peaceful methods, and particularly from humanitarian efforts on the part of the United States of America. I believe we have a great moral duty toward the world, first, to keep out of European and Asiatic wars; and, second, because we are the richest nation in the world, with great surpluses of wheat, corn, and cotton, that we will have either to give or loan those farm surpluses for the next 2 or 3 years to these war-ridden countries. In my judgment, we should not loan them but give them outright and ask nothing in return and expect nothing in return; not even thanks.

Mr. Speaker, we may even have to revise our whole agricultural program. Why give the farmers a billion dollars a year to destroy their crops of wheat, corn, and cotton, and so on? We may have to let the farmers grow all they want and buy those crops for a billion dollars, and then give this surplus to the European countries which have been invaded, and where women and children will be starving to death within 6 months' time, or by next winter.

This $50,000,000 contribution originated in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when we authorized the $15,000,000 loan to Poland, which was reported almost unanimously. I said at that time—and I offered an amendment to that effect—that it ought to apply to similarly afflicted nations. It should now apply not only to Poland but to Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Holland, and France, because if this European war continues for the next 6 months or so and into the next winter there will be 50,000,000 people starving in Europe.

We cannot hold up our heads if we destroy our crops and destroy foodstuffs and let these people starve to death, when we could have a surplus by letting our farmers grow what they have a right to grow, and take the same amount of money and buy those crops from the farmers and give them to these destitute nations for their starving women and children.

So I submit, Mr. Speaker, this $50,000,000 is just a drop in the bucket. It is not meant merely for the Red Cross, because the Red Cross only distributes medical supplies, not foodstuffs. These foodstuffs must go through a separate agency, an agency such as we created during the World War under Herbert Hoover for the relief of the Belgians. Seven hundred million dollars was spent in 4 years to keep the Belgian people alive. I predict that we will have to spend a billion dollars within the next few years to keep the people of Europe alive. I believe this great country of ours has that moral obligation.

Some may say to me as they have in the past that I am an isolationist, but I am only an isolationist from war, not from peace, not from good will, not from arbitration, and not from feeding starving people in foreign lands. I believe that is exactly what we will have to do. This $50,000,000 is the first step. It may have to be duplicated within 6 months, but in the meanwhile, we may have to change our whole program of scarcity and have a program of abundance for the farmers of this country. [Applause.]

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense.

RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I like what the gentleman from New York said about making constructive use of everything that America can produce. And I agree with him about our doing everything we can for peace and for the relief of suffering everywhere. We should certainly encourage our farmers to produce all they can and, of course, the way to do that is to assure them that what they produce will be purchased from them at a fair price. To purchase it and relieve suffering abroad is one good thing to do. I should like to point out, however, that we already have a program for the constructive use of our farm products by our own people. That program, which should be expanded, is in the form of the stamp plan of the Surplus Commodities Corporation. I am very much in favor of its use to get food into the hands of the American people who are in need of it, as they are today, as well as to relieve the needs of other nations. There is added to this bill $50,000,000 for that purpose. I wish it had been $100,000,000. I wish the conferees had agreed on the Senate figure in that respect, especially in view of the loss of foreign markets for so many of our farm commodities and in view of the great importance of having a well-nourished Nation as we face these trying times.

I also wish that we could find out what the true relationship is between money as entitlement to buy and wealth produced as real purchasing power. It is not necessary to go into debt in order to provide the means of putting that wealth produced into the hands of the people who are in need of it. As long as the price level for farm commodities is below parity we should be purchasing from the farmer, or enabling our needy people to purchase from him with new money or credit created for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a very brief paragraph from an article by Mr. Willis Overholser appearing in the Waukegan News-Sun, that illustrates the point I have just made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

We develop surpluses and then, instead of paying pensions and relief wages with those surpluses, we plow them under, destroy them, and shut down factories until the surpluses disappear. Instead of just asking the question, "Where are we going to get the money?" we should ask ourselves, "How are we going to make adjustments in our outmoded financial system which will enable us to pay pensions, relief needs, etc., with these so-called surpluses and the potential products of closed-down factories?"

Thus we should quit trying to cut down our badly needed production to the size of an outmoded pocketbook. We should get rid of some of our stubbornness and should develop enough imagination and ingenuity to modernize the pocketbook.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in the next place, I am extremely regretful that the conferees were not able to hold the provision we put into this bill to protect people 45 years of age and older who are heads of families from the application of the 18-month rule. I think it works an injustice on those people to have that rule applied to them. I do not think it should be applied to them. They are the people to whom a W. P. A. job means the difference between self-respecting work and direct relief.

In the next place, it is important for us to consider just as carefully, if not more so, than we ever have, our public works employment program, provided for in part in this bill. America needs every person in this country to be at work at things she needs to get done. We cannot afford to have people unemployed in this country now. We need to make constructive use of the labor of everybody. When you consider the amount of money we have appropriated for defense—and I voted for every dollar of it—it seems to me that we must realize that to provide funds as we are doing in this conference report for the purpose of putting our people to work at constructive jobs is a matter of certainly equal importance from the standpoint of national defense. Our Nation will be strong to the extent that all of us are at work.

I should also like to see the program for preventing farm tenancy broadened more than it is now. I only ask you to consider the difference in feeling and attitude between the man who owns his modest acres of good American soil and the man who must see his family driven from pillar to post in search of an odd job here and there. Now, we have $1,682,000,000 of silver seigniorage lying idle in the Treasury of the United States right now. You could turn back the tide of increasing farm tenancy, and you can help solve this urgent problem if you would make use of some of that, for the purpose of making it possible for these migrant people, farm labor, and farm tenants, to become owners of farms. Rome fell because she did not do that very thing. May I say that America's strength is increased every time that is done. At this point, I want to call attention of the House to a very simple, one-page bill which I have introduced on this very matter of turning our tenants and migrant farm laborers into farm owners. The text of that bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes set forth in section 2 of this act the sum of $1,000,000,000 by the issue of silver certificates in the aggregate amount of $1,000,000,000 pursuant to section 5 of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

SEC. 2. The amounts appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary) by section 1 of this act shall be available for the making of loans to farm tenants, farm laborers, and sharecroppers for the acquisition of farms under the terms and provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That if as to any county the Secretary shall find that individual family-sized farms meeting the requirements of said act are not available for purchase by individual borrowers and that the purposes of said act can best be effectuated by the purchase and subdivision of large tracts, the Secretary shall be authorized to acquire such tracts, to make necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and to enter into contracts for the sale thereof to such applicants as are certified by the county committee established under said act as being eligible for the benefits thereof and upon terms conforming with the conditions set forth in said act.

America's strength for national-defense purposes is increased to the extent that the people of this country know that their Congress is going to see to it that every person in this country has the best possible stake in the ideals this country stands for.

TRIBUTE TO THE SPEAKER

May I say in conclusion on quite a different subject that a new Member of this House, and a young Member, operates under certain disabilities. I did not believe I ever felt that disability quite so much as I did today, when I wanted so badly, although I knew it was not in place for me to do so, to ask for at least a minute in which I might have had an opportunity to pay tribute to the Speaker of the House, as was done so beautifully by some of the older Members. I should just like to say that to me he has been a real inspiration, and that the years I have spent under his Speakership will be something I will cherish as long as I live, whatever the future may hold.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with my remarks I may be permitted to include the text of a very short bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this opportunity to address the House with reference to amendment No. 68, which proposes to amend section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Act. Section 13 of this act is the section in which provision is made to pay to the States of Alabama and Tennessee 5 percent of the gross proceeds of the T. V. A. for tax-replacement purposes. This amendment now proposes to amend section 13 for two purposes: First, to provide an equitable distribution of the money which is now authorized by this provision, and, then to increase the amount for a period of 8 years, at the end of which time it would be reduced to the 5 percent now provided in section 13, so as to take care of the requirements of the counties which are so seriously affected by the power property which has been acquired by the T. V. A. and thereby removed from taxation. Some of the counties affected have lost as much as 70 percent of their revenue. Seventy of the ninety-five counties in Tennessee are affected. Some of these counties have lost as much as 42 percent of their revenue, and there is no provision in the constitution of the State of Tennessee by which any of this 5 percent now being paid may be redistributed to the counties of the State. Unless some provision is made for these counties, they will default upon their bonds and other obligations, and will be forced to close their school.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has placed in the rate base 12½ percent for tax purposes, which is added to the cost of the power to the consumers and which is held as a trust fund for the purpose of repaying these taxes to the counties involved, but it is without authority to make the payment to the counties unless this amendment is adopted.

It is a matter of the gravest concern to the people of Tennessee and the other States affected that this amendment be adopted, and I think it is in accordance with sound principles of legislation that it be adopted. When the Federal Government goes into a private operation in competition with private enterprise, I think there should be a provision for payment of taxes or payment of money in lieu of taxes, and, in keeping with that policy, the T. V. A. has included in its rate base 12½ percent for this purpose, and unless we give it authority to disburse this money to the counties involved, these counties are going into liquidation, their schools will be closed, and it is almost a matter of life and death to these counties and the people who live in them. A great injustice will be done unless this provision is included in the bill, and, since the money for these payments is received from an increase in wholesale power rates for this purpose, it will not cost the United States Treasury one cent.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMASON). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DWORSHAK) there were—ayes 76, noes 46.

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the conference report and all who will speak on the one amendment in disagreement may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and seventy-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 159]

Blackney	Drewry	Lemke	Sheridan
Boehne	Durham	Maas	South
Bolton	Halleck	Merritt	Thomas of N. J.
Burgin	Harter of Ohio	Mitchell	White of Idaho
Chiperfield	Horton	Monroney	Wood
Cluett	Keller	Mundt
Darrow	Kirwan	Romjue

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and ninety-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein figures relating to the Treasury general-fund balance, supplied me by the General Accounting Office and the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment in disagreement.

Senate amendment No. 68: Page 42, after line 23, insert:

"SEC. 39. Section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 13. In order to render financial assistance to those States and local governments in which the power operations of the Corporation are carried on and in which the Corporation has acquired properties previously subject to State and local taxation, the board is authorized and directed to pay to said States and the counties therein, for each fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1940, the following percentages of the gross proceeds derived from the sale of power by the Corporation for the preceding fiscal year as hereinafter provided, together with such additional amounts as may be payable pursuant to the provisions hereinafter set forth, said payments to constitute a charge against the power operations of the Corporation: For the fiscal year (beginning July 1) 1940, 10 percent; 1941, 9 percent; 1942, 8 percent; 1943, 7½ percent; 1944, 7 percent; 1945, 6½ percent; 1946, 6 percent; 1947, 5½ percent; 1948 and each fiscal year thereafter, 5 percent. "Gross proceeds," as used in this section, is defined as the total gross proceeds derived by the Corporation from the sale of power for the preceding fiscal year, excluding power used by the Corporation or sold or delivered to any other department or agency of the Government of the United States for any purpose other than the resale thereof. The payments herein authorized are in lieu of taxation, and the Corporation, its property, franchises, and income are hereby expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form by any State, county, municipality, or any subdivision or district thereof.

" 'The payment for each fiscal year shall be apportioned among said States in the following manner: One-half of said payment shall be apportioned by paying to each State the percentage thereof which the gross proceeds of the power sales by the Corporation within said State during the preceding fiscal year bears to the total gross proceeds from all power sales by the Corporation during the preceding fiscal year; the remaining one-half of said payment shall be apportioned by paying to each State the percentage thereof which the book value of the power property held by the Corporation within said State at the end of the preceding fiscal year bears to the total book value of all such property held by the Corporation on the same date. The book value of power property shall include that portion of the investment allocated or estimated to be allocable to power: Provided, That the minimum annual payment to each State (including payments to counties therein) shall not be less than an amount equal to the 2-year average of the State and local ad valorem property taxes levied against power property purchased and operated by the Corporation in said State and against that portion of reservoir lands related to dams constructed by or on behalf of the United States Government and held or operated by the Corporation and allocated or estimated to be allocable to power. The said 2-year average shall be calculated for the last 2 tax years during which said property was privately owned and operated or said land was privately owned: Provided further, That the minimum annual payment to each State in which the Corporation owns and operates power property (including payments to counties therein) shall not be less than $10,000 in any case: Provided further, That the Corporation shall pay directly to the respective counties the 2-year average of county ad valorem property taxes (including taxes levied by taxing districts within the respective counties) upon power property and reservoir lands allocable to power, determined as above provided, and all payments to any such county within a State shall be deducted from the payment otherwise due to such State under the provisions of this section. The determination of the board of the amounts due hereunder to the respective States and counties shall be final.

" 'The payments above provided shall in each case be made to the State or county in equal monthly installments beginning not later than July 31, 1940.

" 'Nothing herein shall be construed to limit the authority of the Corporation in its contracts for the sale of power to municipalities, to permit or provide for the resale of power at rates which may include an amount to cover tax-equivalent payments to the municipality in lieu of State, county, and municipal taxes upon any distribution system or property owned by the municipality, or any agency thereof, conditioned upon a proper distribution by the municipality of any amounts collected by it in lieu of State or county taxes upon any such distribution system or property; it being the intention of Congress that either the municipality or the State in which the municipality is situated shall provide for the proper distribution to the State and county of any portion of tax equivalent so collected by the municipality in lieu of State or county taxes upon any such distribution system or property.

" 'The Corporation shall, not later than January 1, 1945, submit to the Congress a report on the operation of the provisions of this section, including a statement of the distribution to the various States and counties hereunder; the effect of the operation of the provisions of this section on State and local finances; an appraisal of the benefits of the program of the Corporation to the States and counties receiving payments hereunder, and the effect of such benefits in increasing taxable values within such States and counties; and such other data, information, and recommendations as may be pertinent to future legislation.' "

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 68 and concur in the same.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted me I shall endeavor to explain briefly what this proposition is. This is commonly known as the T. V. A. tax amendment, and it has been put on as a rider in the Senate. All of you are probably aware of the fact that in the T. V. A. Act as originally passed, and as it stands today, in section 13 provision is made for the payment of 5 percent of the revenues from power to the States of Alabama and Tennessee, based upon the amount of power generated in each one of those States. This bill simply seeks to change this section 13 in two respects. First, it changes the amount immediately to 10 percent of the power revenues for the first year and then drops to 9 percent, and continues to drop until 1948, when it gets back to the present level of 5 percent, and then it levels it off at 5 percent for all time thereafter; and in that connection let me say that under the section as it exists now the 5 percent is not fixed by statute. The Board may at 5-year intervals, with the approval of the President, change that amount upward. While this bill would give a temporary increase, at the end of the time during which that temporary increase works it would level it off and thereafter there would be no flexibility in it. The other respect in which it is changed is the method of distribution.

The present 5 percent is payable to only two States, Alabama and Tennessee, but dams have been built and waters impounded in the States of North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Kentucky, making six States that are vitally concerned. About a year ago we bought considerable properties from the Tennessee Electric Power Co. That has produced an acute tax situation. This bill would change the provision regarding payments to be made to two States and permit payments to all six States. Then, instead of making payments based upon the place where the power is generated, it would set up a formula so that one-half of the amount to be paid would be paid to these States according to the amount of power sales in those respective States and the other half in accordance with the amount of property owned by the T. V. A. in that State allocated to power. When I say payments to the States I mean to the States and the counties thereof, because the bill does carry a provision to allow payments directly to the counties up to the amount of the ad valorem tax loss from the property allotted to power.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The amendment as proposed instead of carrying 5 percent of the gross revenue carries 10 percent, with a gradual scaling down over a period of years.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes. I have just explained that—until 1948 when it goes back to 5 percent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Could the gentleman give us the assessed valuation of counties that will benefit under this, previous to the enactment of the clause, and at the time the public utilities were taken out of taxation. That would be the fair basis to find out the loss.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have only about a minute left and I could not do it in that time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I asked the chairman of the committee to furnish me that. I am sympathetic with the idea. I wanted that information and they promised to send it to me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is available, and I hope it will be put in the RECORD. May I go on for a minute to say something to you about the reason this comes up in this form? I realize that this is irregular. This bill was introduced in the House in July 1939. We started hearings on the 23d of January of this year and continued them through the 20th of February.

I have here the printed hearings on this bill—544 pages—without one single word of opposition to it. The plan was worked out by the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Governors of the States concerned, with tax experts, and it came in and there was not one single word of opposition to it. Yet when the vote was taken in our committee the vote stood 12 to 12 on a motion to table the bill. Finally it was tabled by a vote of 12 to 10, with 2 members absent and the chairman not voting. So the vote in the committee really stood 13 to 12 to table this bill. It became necessary, in order for the House to have the privilege of voting on it, to bring it in as a rider on this report. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed, astounded, and indeed alarmed to see a matter as revolutionary and far-reaching as this injected into a bill in this fashion. I am quite sure that if the American people were aware of what is going on they would be alarmed also to see one of the great bodies of this Congress, which is popularly supposed to be deliberative in its actions, try to inject a far-reaching change in our legislative procedure in a bill of this kind.

Here is a matter that reverses our entire system of administering Federal property injected into a relief bill; injected into it in a manner which, if the relief bill were before the House, could not by any stretch of the imagination be considered as being germane.

Now what are the facts in connection with this matter? They are simply these: After the Tennessee Valley Authority purchased the Tennessee Electric Power Co. they removed from the field of taxation throughout the State of Tennessee the properties of that corporation. They took from counties anywhere from 42 to 70 percent of their taxable assets. Now they have come to realize that they cannot have their cake and eat it, too. They are back to the Congress asking us to take from the General Treasury of the United States money to reimburse them for the taxes they have lost. I feel genuinely sorry for these small counties in Tennessee, but I submit to this House in all fairness that the General Treasury of the United States should not be penalized because four localities in the State of Tennessee are benefiting greatly at the expense of some 70 other counties. If this matter is to be adjusted, certainly in all fairness, both to the counties concerned and to the taxpayers of the United States, these 4 municipalities, 4 large centers in Tennessee—Knoxville, Chattanooga, Memphis, and Nashville—should make up the deficiency in the small counties, because those localities alone are securing the benefit. They are benefiting in excess of $4,000,000 each year through the retail of power purchased from the Tennessee Valley Authority wholesale.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman explain to me why it is these four particular localities are benefited at the expense of other counties in the State?

Mr. FADDIS. I just explained it. They are purchasing power from the Tennessee Valley Authority at wholesale rates, and they are retailing it to their subscribers in other localities and making over $4,000,000 a year by doing so.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Does not the gentleman realize that there are many counties in northern Michigan and Wisconsin that have had their lands taken for national-forest purposes and thereby lost a great deal of revenue?

Mr. FADDIS. That is quite true. There are many examples of the same kind all over the United States. In the city of Hoboken, N. J., the Federal Government took the docks of the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. during the World War, which has taken that property out of the field of taxation. This municipality has lost a great deal of revenue from this source. There are many places throughout the United States that are laboring under just such disadvantage because the Federal Government has acquired properties which have been subject to taxation by localities, and in no case have those localities come to Washington asking that the Congress of the United States take from the Federal Treasury money to reimburse them for the taxes lost.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman referred to the taking of land for forest purposes. Does not the gentleman know that under a statute that has been passed by the Congress these many years, 25 percent of the revenues from the sale of public lands devoted to forest purposes is paid to the States from which the land is taken?

Mr. FADDIS. That is not a comparable case. The Federal ownership and control of these forest lands does not bring direct financial assistance to the localities in which these lands are located. Neither has such ownership resulted in lower utility rates or enabled populous centers to make considerable revenue from the retailing of power.

Mr. Speaker, the acceptance of this Senate amendment to this appropriation bill will create a dangerous precedent, and I hope the House will refuse to accept it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, this amendment to section 13 of the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act——

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield, but I do not want this taken out of my time.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. It will just take a second. I just want to call attention to the fact that none of those counties will get revenue from the forests after 25 years.

T. V. A. TAX REPLACEMENT

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not make an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury for the relief of these counties in Tennessee or for any of the counties in other States where the Tennessee Valley Authority is operating, which have lost taxes by virtue of the T. V. A. purchases of reservoir lands and utility properties therein.

This amendment simply provides that from the gross receipts from the sale of electricity made by the Tennessee Valley Authority in these various States there shall be paid back to the States and counties in which property has been acquired by the Tennessee Valley Authority and which is thereby withdrawn from taxation a certain amount in lieu of the taxes these States and counties have lost. The money this amendment proposes to pay to these States and counties is included within the wholesale rates at which the Tennessee Valley Authority sells this power. In the original act 5 percent of the gross proceeds of the sale of power by the Tennessee Valley Authority goes wholly to the States of Tennessee and Alabama. The States of Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, and Mississippi now get nothing. The counties in these States receive no replacement for the taxes they have lost and will continue to lose. In my congressional district alone the Tennessee Valley Authority has acquired rich farming lands and power-company properties that formerly paid taxes to these counties in the amount of more than $250,000. Thus, by these properties being purchased by the United States Government they have been withdrawn from the taxing power of the counties in which they are located..

If this amendment is not adopted, many counties in my State, and especially those in my congressional district, will default in their bonded indebtedness and in the payment of interest thereon. They will not be able to maintain their schools and roads.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Twelve and one-half percent is added to a wholesale rate for this purpose. This does not take a penny out of the Federal Treasury. If this amendment fails, that 12½ percent will be taken off and it will go to these big cities instead of the small counties.

Mr. JENNINGS. In other words, if this amendment is not adopted, there is frozen in the original act 5 percent of the gross income. This year the 5 percent amounted to $560,000. This sum is divided between the States of Alabama and Tennessee. None of it goes to the counties. This amendment distributes among the States affected and among the counties affected a percent of the gross revenues of the Tennessee Valley Authority from the sale of power as follows: For the fiscal year 1940, 10 percent; 1941, 9 percent; 1942, 8 percent; 1943, 7¼ percent; 1944, 7 percent; 1945, 6½ percent; 1946, 6 percent; 1947, 5½ percent; 1948 and each fiscal year thereafter, 5 percent.

These payments are included in the rates at which the Authority is now selling power. In law, in equity, and in good conscience these payments that are to be made under this amendment belong to the people of these States and counties. The Government has acquired title to these properties, it has withdrawn them from taxation, and it should make this provision for the relief of these States and counties.

I ask my Republican friends to remember that the people for whom I speak have sent a Republican to this House since 1858, and that the failure to adopt this amendment means their ruin and the ruin of 58 other counties in Tennessee. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] 5 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, in these few remarks on this important amendment I should like to call attention to a few fundamental facts that are easily overlooked because they are right under our respective noses. When you stop to consider it, you must acknowledge that in a sense every business is a tax-collecting agency for Government and its multitudinous subdivisions. Business collects taxes from the people in the price of sales to the people, and then, in turn, pays them to governments and their subdivisions.

Taxes go into the cost of manufacture, the cost of sales, and the cost of transportation and all of the myriad of costs that make up the total price which the consumer pays. In fact, taxes constitute a prior lien against earnings and against the physical assets of every business. Taxes must be paid. They cannot be avoided. Every business, in figuring its overhead, adds in the taxes that must be paid to cities, counties, and States; and the Federal income tax is generally allowed for in the percent of profit added to the final cost. At least, one may safely say that every business hopes that it will make a profit, and expects to pay a Federal income tax if it does so—and in many States a State income tax, too.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it may truthfully be said that every business is a tax-collecting agency for government, whether it wills it or no.

In the case of a utility property, taxes are paid based upon the value of its real, its tangible, property and other assets. Taxes are paid upon or for its franchise, its right to do business, and to use public alleys, streets, and so forth, and to have the exclusive privilege of doing so, and taxes are paid for its privilege of being a body corporate, for the privilege of dividing its ownership through shares of stock, and so forth. Taxes are paid upon the value of the product sold; and, finally, if anything is left, it pays a tax upon the interest paid on its bonds and then it pays income taxes if a profit remains.

Where do these taxes go? They go to support county and city governments and to States to help pay the firemen, policemen, school teachers, and public hospitals, and for roads and bridges and armies and navies, and all those things our people have come to look upon as the necessary services of government.

Where do the tax moneys come from? They come from the pockets of the people who use the electric light, heat, and power, the gas or water or telephone service furnished by the utility. If, by any miracle the utilities were relieved of the obligation, for such it really is, to collect these taxes from the people and pay them to municipalities, counties, and States, then these subdivisions of Government would have to either seek other means of raising that revenue from the people or abandon many of the services their citizens demand.

If the utilities were relieved of collecting these sums and paying them in the form of taxes, it would be possible for them to reduce their rates for electricity, gas, water, or telephone service by from 12 to 20 percent, according to the tax load they bear. But the people would have to raise that revenue from some other source. So they continue to tax the utilities which in turn must pass the burden right back to them in their monthly bills. However, in the case of utilities, those who pay these taxes in their monthly bills, and not many of them realize it, are those who use the services, and it is considered right and just that those who use the services should so contribute to taxes in their proportion of the services used. It amounts to a flock of hidden sales taxes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the pending amendment, it is provided that the Tennessee Valley Authority, a Government-owned utility, shall pay out of its gross revenues a modest proportion to counties and States in lieu of the ad valorum and other taxes which the Tennessee Valley Authority would have to pay were it privately owned. These percentages, on the whole, are a lot lower than the percent of its gross revenue that is ordinarily paid by a privately owned utility. A privately owned public utility would pay twice as much, at least, and more if corporate and security owners' income taxes were to be added.

Therefore, let me say right here to my colleagues who may be foes of Government ownership of utilities: If you want to see Tennessee Valley Authority rates established that are comparable to private-utility rates, you should not only vote for this amendment, but you should be in favor of doubling the amounts to be paid to the counties and States, in lieu of taxes, in order that Tennessee Valley Authority rates may be forced into a comparative and competitive condition. To vote this amendment down would defeat your own purpose.

I have no personal interest in this amendment whatever, but I think it would be a shame to deprive these counties of the revenue which some of them need to avoid bankruptcy. After all, the people pay the rates and the Tennessee Valley Authority will pay it back to them through their local government services.

I therefore suggest to my colleagues that whatever may be said against the T. V. A. as a project, this amendment should be supported in fairness to the people of the T. V. A. area, for they are not responsible for historical acts of the Congress. I have read a good part of the hearings on this question, and while I agree that the T. V. A. Act is very loose in certain important respects, that is the fault of the act itself. These amendments intend to correct one of the faults.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If the Government gets into all kinds of business——

Mr. HINSHAW. I am making no support of that thesis, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. RICH. If the Government goes into business because the people of the States want them to get in, does the gentleman think it is right to tax the people of California to pay for losses by such Government operations?

Mr. HINSHAW. The people of California are not being taxed through this amendment, but the people of my district are paying enough for Boulder Canyon power so that a portion of it is paid to certain other States in lieu of taxes, in almost the same way as is provided in this amendment for the T. V. A. to pay in lieu of taxes.

Mr. RICH. Indeed they are paying for T. V. A. because their expenses are greater than their receipts, considering capital invested and amortization. This is socialism in my judgment.

Mr. HINSHAW. These taxes come out of the original charge by T. V. A. for electric energy which is paid by the electric consumers. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take these 2 minutes to record my protest against the Government's giving $50,000,000 to the American Red Cross to expend in Europe.

I was a member of the Committee on the Library for 14 years, and part of that time was its chairman. Our committee considered all matters relating to the American Red Cross. In that time, with the exception, if it can be called such, of money for another headquarters building, which was outside the scope of charity, it never asked the Government for a dollar. Indeed, in 1931, Chairman John Barton Payne, of the Red Cross, went before subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations and stoutly objected to receiving from the Government any money for the drought-stricken areas, and said the central committee could not accept the administration of funds for general relief purposes. He read the vote of the 11 members of that committee to such effect.

Further he said it was his conviction this would to a large extent destroy voluntary giving.

There lies the great danger of the proposal that we give $50,000,000 to the Red Cross for the terrible need abroad. Knowing that this money has been given by the Government, many thousands of our people will decline to make any direct contribution. Public charity will replace private charity. The values of personal sacrifice will disappear.

I cannot find that the American Red Cross has ever been willing to receive any money from the Government for purposes of charity. Why? Because it would mean the destruction of the American Red Cross.

A few days ago I sent to my own home chapter a check several times larger than will be the increase in my income tax if this bill becomes law unamended. I was happier that night. I sent it without being asked to send it. It was not a large check, but it was at least 10 times as much as I would give by taxation.

Let the precedent be established that we will here dispense charity and there will be no end to the demand for giving out of the Public Treasury. Private benevolence will wane. All the benefit that comes to each one of us by following the example of the good Samaritan will in the end disappear.

Therefore I object to ruining the American Red Cross. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, we are approving more than an amount of money today in the amendment that is before us. If this is approved, it will be approval for a principle that is going to plague us for a long time. The theory is that where government makes a venture into a proprietary field as distinguished from a field that is absolutely essential to articulating the functions of government, and we adopt this principle, it can well be applied to every proprietary activity of the Government.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry; I have only 5 minutes.

That might be true in the case of the acquisition of forest lands when the lands are eliminated as revenue producers. That might be true of the merchant marine if any tax problem were involved. Once the precedent is established it will eventually be established to every proprietary function in years hence. We are going to be plagued by the brigade that will come and ask for reimbursement after the largesse and generosity of the Federal Government has been enjoyed.

The best instance in point is that after the expenditure of $7,000,000 to eradicate and control the Mediterranean fruitfly in the orange groves of Florida, there was an estimate made by a special board only a year ago for $7,000,000 in damages by those who sprayed the trees—who went down there to conduct the control program in the tangerine and fruit groves. There was reported out of the Rules Committee a rule that now exists and will be brought before the attention of this House seeking indemnification after the Government has been so generous to the people down there and preserved their groves and incidentally made them more fruitful in producing a better kind of fruit. If you are going to establish this principle, make up your mind that in every proprietary field, States, counties, and cities will be back here when taxes are lost, when revenues are dissipated, or damage has been done asking for reimbursement. I do not know how big the burden will be upon the Federal Treasury, but it will certainly reach staggering proportions.

It has been said that this is not an appropriation out of the Treasury. That is quite true. They provide for an increase in the gross rates of T. V. A. All the users of electricity who have been promised rock-bottom rates will be apprised of the fact that to meet these situations now arising as a result all T. V. A. rates must go up 12½ percent. If that 12½ percent were available for the purposes contemplated in the original act, we could more speedily amortize the navigation and flood-control expenditures of T. V. A., thereby more speedily benefiting the taxpayers of the country.

So do not be deluded by that chimerical and tenuous argument that this is not an appropriation, because in one way or another the taxpayers of the country must pay the bill. And finally this principle must logically be extended and applied to Bonneville, Fort Peck, Grand Coulee, Boulder Canyon, and to all the other proprietary electrical undertakings of the Government and wherever private distribution lines have been placed, wherever revenues have been lost. I do not say in all cases there will be loss of revenue, but wherever there are losses how can the Congress in all conscience then refuse to deal with those situations even as it is proposed to deal with them here today? Truly we assume a tremendous and continuing responsibility in the provision before us.

Finally, I want to say this. I was here in 1933, when the T. V. A. Act was passed. I heard all these plausible representations about rates. I heard them say how the T. V. A. was going to amortize itself. I heard them say how that country would be made to blossom as the rose and that ultimately, in fact in a short period of time, the whole project would be amortized. By raising rates, there are possible revenues that, instead of being devoted to amortization, will be devoted to reimbursing the treasuries of counties, States, school districts, and States where the benefits are already enormous. Let us not forget that $505,000,000 of the American taxpayers' money has been invested there for localized benefits. Most people receive none of it. So we look at this as the establishment of a principle that, like the ghost of Banquo, may one day rise to smite the conscience of every Member of this House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, in appearance this amendment is innocent enough. Actually it is one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation this Congress has considered. It is repetition of a bill which passed the Senate almost 2 months ago. It was then known as the Norris bill and bore the number S. 2925. After passing the Senate on April 30 of this year it was considered by the House Military Affairs Committee along with an identical bill which had been introduced in the House known as the Sparkman bill. Hearings upon these bills before the full committee occupied 10 days and the reported hearings cover 544 pages. In addition to the open hearings the bills, together with all suggested amendments, were considered by the committee in executive session with the result that all proposed legislation on the subject was tabled.

Notwithstanding the unusual amount of consideration given this matter by the Military Affairs Committee, we now find the original bill tacked on to a relief appropriation bill and we are limited in its consideration to a period of 1 hour. Although that type of procedure may be technically proper, does anyone believe it would be advisable with only 1 hour's discussion to pass upon a subject which occupied the attention of a House committee for a period of more than 10 days? In the limited time I have I could not hope to more than begin a discussion of the provisions of the bill.

Last year you will recall this Congress authorized the issuance by T. V. A. of bonds in the sum of $61,500,000 to buy out the properties of the private utilities with which T. V. A. had been competing in the Tennessee Valley area. By reason of the purchase of these properties by T. V. A. the property of the private utilities was no longer taxable in the jurisdictions in which it was located. Immediately the affected States and counties turned to Congress for relief and the bills to which I have referred constituted their appeal. In some instances it was discovered that more than half of all of the taxes of the county had been derived from the private utilities that had been driven out of business by T. V. A.

Section 13 of the original act provided that 5 percent of the gross revenue of T. V. A. should be paid to the States of Tennessee and Alabama. It may be argued to you that this 5 percent was in lieu of taxes but that is not the case. It is the fundamental law of the land that a State has a property right in its natural resources. In this case it was the Tennessee River and the 5 percent was to compensate the States for the use of the river by T. V. A. for power purposes. This percent is now sought to be stepped up to 10 percent of the gross proceeds of T. V. A. for the year 1940. Thereafter it is to be gradually reduced until it again reaches 5 percent in 1949. Out of the revenue thus derived, both the cities and the affected counties will be paid something in lieu of taxes. For the first time we find these payments referred to as being in lieu of taxes and for the first time we find an effort being made to make payments direct to the counties. This, I submit, is without precedent, and is violative of that very fundamental principle that Federal instrumentalities cannot and should not be taxed. In other words, the amendment before us today is purely a tax-replacement measure.

It will be contended that on other occasions the Federal Government has made payment to States in lieu of taxes, but you will find that in each and every one of those instances payments were made to the States only, and they were made because of the fact that the State had a property right in the natural resources which had been taken over by the Federal Government—for example, in the case of forestry and grazing lands. A county, of course, has no such property right, and I am sure no one will point out to you a single case in which payments have ever been made by the Federal Government to a county; yet we find that this bill provides for direct payments to counties and no attempt is made to even make it appear that the payments are anything but taxes. Let me direct your attention to this language, on page 45, beginning on line 10:

Provided further, That the Corporation shall pay directly to the respective counties the 2-year average of county ad valorem property taxes (including taxes levied by taxing districts within the respective counties) upon power property and reservoir lands allocable to power, determined as above provided, and all payments to any such county within a State shall be deducted from the payment otherwise due to such State under the provisions of this section. The determination of the board of the amounts due hereunder to the respective States and counties shall be final.

In passing, you will notice that the tax is upon reservoir lands, as well as upon power property.

Let us consider for a moment the far-reaching effect of legislation of this type even if we were to assume, for the sake of argument, that it is constitutional. If a county in Tennessee is entitled to taxes from the Federal Government because of the location within the county of a Government-owned generating plant, dam or reservoir lands, why is not every county in the United States entitled to taxes upon post-office property, upon lands used in connection with flood dams, Army posts, and the like? In this connection we might also include the vast properties that have been taken from the tax rolls in recent years by housing projects.

You will probably hear it said that a distinction should be made where the Government instrumentality is engaged in business for profit. I am sure you will find no exception in the lawbooks. Theoretically, I suppose, the Post Office Department is run for profit, or, at least, it endeavors to meet expenses. As a matter of fact, if a Government agency is engaged for profit, there is less reason to make payments in lieu of taxes to local communities. A flood dam, for example, brings no benefits to those who live near it. T. V. A., on the other hand, has brought great benefits to those who live within its area of operation in the form of reduced electric-power rates. The fact that they are made possible by Government subsidies, which means contributions from those who receive none of the benefits, is beside the point. In the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee it was testified by the Governor of Tennessee that the benefits derived by the people of that State through reduced electric-power rates were double the tax losses occasioned by the purchase of the properties of private utilities.

The point is made that the benefits are largely received by those who live in the larger cities, whereas the tax losses are more noticeable in the smaller counties. If that is true, I submit it is the problem of the State to adjust it through a consumer's tax on the users of the electric power or otherwise. I do not believe that the taxpayers in other States who can never receive any of the benefits of T. V. A. rates are going to be impressed with the argument that the constitution of the State would require the distribution of a consumers' tax to all counties of the State on the basis of population.

If you will refer to the amendment we have been asked to rush through in this eleventh-hour fashion, you will find other things which call for its defeat. For example, the percentages of payments provided for by the act are based upon gross proceeds—not net proceeds but gross proceeds. Therefore, whether T. V. A. makes any money or not, tax losses will be paid as provided for in this amendment, meaning that if net earnings are insufficient the loss will have to fall upon the Federal Treasury and Mr. Taxpayer, who may live thousands of miles away from the Tennessee Valley area, will be bearing his proportionate share of such tax losses.

If you had the time to examine the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee, and, of course, you have not in so short a space of time, you would find that some of the counties that will sustain the greatest losses, taxed the private utilities for all the traffic would bear when they had the opportunity to do so. A neighboring county, in which none of the property of the private utility was located, had to get along on much less. The passage of this amendment would perpetuate that inequality and injustice.

Through the press we are advised this morning that the National Defense Commission has approved plans for a $65,000,000 expansion in electric power-producing facilities of the T. V. A. to permit increased production in defense industries centered in Tennessee. Lest we forget, T. V. A. was created on the theory that it was a national-defense project. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been poured into the project and now that we need electric power-producing facilities in the interest of national defense, we will be asked to appropriate at least $65,000,000 more in order to build new plants. According to press accounts it will require 20 months to complete these plants after the funds become available. In other words, we build a project for national defense, but when we need it for national defense we have to appropriate billions of dollars for a new project and wait at least 20 months before the same can be used. Apparently the only contribution T. V. A. has made to national defense is a yardstick and there seems to be some doubt about the yardstick.

Perhaps we might summarize the purpose of this amendment by the question, Shall the taxpayers of the United States who do not live in the Tennessee Valley area and who receive none of the benefits of this huge Government subsidy, pay the taxes of those who receive the benefits? If we pass this amendment, that is what will occur. In the light of these facts you can readily understand why the Military Affairs Committee conducted hearings for more than 10 days on this proposed legislation. By the same token you can realize how unwise it would be to reverse that committee after only 1 hour of discussion.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, while I think it would have been better had this amendment been placed on some other bill, and while I know some Members have a fear that a far-reaching new policy is implied in this amendment which if adopted might plague us afterward, I have made up my own mind to vote for the amendment. It pertains to communities 2,000 miles from my home, and I have no other interest in it except that which every Member of this body should have, but its passage seems to me only a matter of fairness to all those States and communities immediately affected by the Tennessee Valley Authority. I think it very proper and generous of the representatives of Alabama and of the State of Tennessee that they are willing to support this measure which will deprive them of something according to the present provision of law and spread those payments around to several other States and communities.

As I understand it, the law originally provided that 5 percent of the revenue derived from the sale of T. V. A. power should be paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee, and that considerable revenue has already been collected. This revenue was payable to the States in lieu of taxes on such property as might be destroyed by inundation or private property taken off the tax rolls. I further understand that schools and other public functions have been seriously handicapped because of a reduction in tax revenue and to which payments in lieu of taxes have not been distributed by the present law. This amendment, if passed, takes no money out of the United States Treasury, because the consumers pay the whole bill, and if what they pay is not distributed to the half dozen States concerned by the adoption of this amendment, these benefits will be paid to the original States in a manifestly unequal proportion. I want the schools and other local functions of government in a half dozen States to receive their due share of benefits.

A few days ago when a bill to readjust power rates at Boulder Dam was being considered by the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, a change was made in the bill by which the States of Arizona and Nevada were to receive a fixed cash payment annually for a definite time in lieu of the provision in the present law of 18¾ percent of the surplus revenue derived from the sale of power. During the hearings the question arose concerning the payment of part of that sum annually to Mohave County, Ariz., and to Clark County, Nev., in which Boulder Dam is actually located. Although it was impossible to fix that matter rigidly, I had the feeling that justice requires the law to be so worded that Mohave County should receive special consideration in the division of the annual payment going to the State of Arizona. The same thing would apply to special consideration to Clark County, Nev., for a special portion of that revenue going to the State of Nevada because of sale of Boulder Dam power.

Is this a dangerous precedent? I think not, because of the fact that we are not appropriating money out of the Federal Treasury to make such payments. We are actually doing something like that in the far West in connection with the national forests and the grazing domain. A fraction, 25 percent I believe, of the revenue derived from the national forests and also the revenue derived from the grazing districts, although collected as Federal revenue, is paid in due proportions to the counties in which the same is located.

I think the same thing could be done with regard to the revenue derived from national parks and monuments. For instance, we have almost a score of national parks and monuments in Arizona; admission to them is charged and some revenue thus accumulated. I think it only fair that counties containing these parks and monuments should get, say, 25 percent of the revenue collected in such parks and monuments. Of course, opponents point out that the counties and towns and the State receive certain benefits from such parks and monuments and that they at the present time raise less revenue than it takes to support them. This may be true, but in addition there are some heavy local expenses incurred in road building and policing and the like because of the presence of these parks and monuments.

To my mind the T. V. A. represents a great conquest of Nature by the hydraulic engineer. However, I think that as this great work comes to maturity and more nearly completion we shall find it is a marvelous social experiment, more hopeful and significant in its meaning for human progress than it is wonderful as an accomplishment of science. In the T. V. A., man is conquering Nature and making a better region for millions of our citizens. It would be too bad, it would be a shame, if schools and good government in those communities touching the T. V. A. should be financially starved through lack of tax revenue because of this material progress. The consumers of T. V. A. power are paying and repaying the cost of its construction. Therefore the consumers of the power, not the United States Government, should also foot the bill in appropriate fashion for suitable schools and proper local costs of government in all those communities reached by T. V. A. power.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in supporting the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, I do so with the strong conviction and feeling that the equities involved warrant such action being taken. We have a situation where rural counties in the States affected have had a large part of their taxable area taken away for purposes in connection with the carrying out of the T. V. A. program. Whether or not one opposed originally the T. V. A. program, it seems to me, should not determine his mind as far as this particular question is concerned. This question should be decided by us upon the merits of the facts involved in the question itself without regard to our own feeling about whether or not the T. V. A. legislation should have been enacted into law. I have examined the evidence in this case, and the testimony shown by the report of the joint committee investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority shows that in fixing the Authority's wholesale rates 12½ percent of the Authority's wholesale revenue was included in order to produce an amount which, when added to the taxes actually paid by the Authority's distributors, would result in a percentage equivalent to that which was paid by private companies engaged in a similar operation. All these counties ask is the consideration that equity and justice call for under the circumstances.

In 3 minutes it is impossible to go into any detailed statement as to the effect of the taking away of such a large portion of the taxable area of the counties. They have to continue their responsibilities with respect to schools, roads, and the other responsibilities that devolve upon counties. The 5 percent as provided by present law should be increased to 10 percent in order to accomplish the objective which the provisions of the pending bill will accomplish if enacted into law. The counties are not receiving consideration now. Two States are, and four other States should. The cities are capable of obtaining compensation by way of taxation for that portion of the city property that is utilized in connection with the carrying out of the T. V. A. activities, but the rural counties are not. In all equity and justice, I respectfully submit that they are entitled to the consideration that is called for in the provisions in the pending bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, this back-door raid upon the Federal Treasury in which administration forces and T. V. A. advocates have tacked this measure upon a relief appropriation bill is, to say the least, extraordinary. I must admit, however, that it is not without an ironic sense of fitness. It is the studied judgment of the House Committee on Military Affairs, reached after 10 weeks of exhaustive hearings, that the measure is unsound and without merit. If this dole is to be granted, therefore, it is fitting that it should be tacked onto this relief appropriation bill, where it may properly stand as still another example of pauperization of a sovereign State by the Federal Government.

The gentlemen who have addressed the House in its favor have failed to advance a single argument today which has not been painstakingly examined by the committee. Neither have they altered the several reasons why this measure should not be enacted. To attempt to drive the measure through under circumstances which permit only 1 hour of consideration and debate is simply to flout the committee which has given its earnest efforts and much of its time before rejecting the proposal.

This is not a problem of the Federal Government. This Government has already lavished gifts out of all proper proportion upon the State of Tennessee and the T. V. A. area. The equitable distribution of those gifts is the problem solely of the State of Tennessee, which that State can solve if she wills to do it. We are told that the State is helpless because she has no right under the constitution to reimburse those few counties which have been ruined by the T. V. A. If that is the case, and if the State of Tennessee accepts this largess from the Federal Government, it is the clear responsibility of that State to amend its constitution and enact legislation which will enable it to rescue these ruined counties.

All the arguments presented to the committee and now briefed in this short debate do not convince me that there is justice and equity in this Treasury raid to reimburse a few counties which have been ruined by tax losses while other counties are reaping profits to the extent of $4,000,000 a year through the generosity of T. V. A. The cities of Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville, and Memphis are, so we are told, actually reaping this reward on the resale of power.

If such profits are accruing to favored communities, they obviously come at the expense of those counties which T. V. A. has forced into bankruptcy by the inundation of land, or by the purchase of private utilities properties, thus robbing these counties of tax revenues.

But if you will listen to the evidence, these are by no means the only profits accruing as a result of Federal generosity in the T. V. A. area. Read the report of Gordon R. Clapp, general manager of T. V. A., appearing at page 531 of the printed hearings on this subject before the House Committee on Military Affairs. Note this statement over Mr. Clapp's signature:

> The Authority has made no field check of new industries located in the valley. The list is therefore based upon secondary sources, * * * and is necessarily incomplete. * * * The list has been limited to industries having 10 or more employees. According to the Census of Manufactures, there was a net increase of 543 in the total number of manufacturing establishments in the valley counties in the period 1933–37.

Immediately following there is a partial list of 128 new industries, roughly two-fifths of the total, showing the mere new construction investment of some $15,000,000, and new employment estimates of some 15,000. Multiply that by 2½ and you have a rough idea of another source of huge profits to Tennessee accruing from T. V. A. largess to the State. Scan that list of industries new to the valley and you will not find a single new source of investment and employment in the lot. When I point out to you that this is not a net addition to our national production and employment, I do not begrudge the valley this improvement. In fact, I congratulate the country and the valley in this addition to our productive capacity. The fact remains that this additional huge profit to Tennessee comes largely at the expense of other industrial States just as surely as the profits to favored Tennessee communities come at the expense of the State's own ruined counties.

Look at T. V. A.'s own set of books for another interesting source of profit. If Tennessee has thus profited by T. V. A. power, think how Tennessee has profited by flood control and navigation. Since more than half of T. V. A. appropriations have gone for these purposes, then obviously the benefits to this area from flood control and improvements in navigation have even exceeded the direct profits from T. V. A. power.

Listen to the T. V. A. advocates still a moment longer. Listen to them extoll the recreational benefits accruing from this tremendous Federal largess. I am sure there are no dependable statistics on the subject, but at least let us consider these benefits real.

With these things in mind, is it not fair now to suggest that the State of Tennessee should find the means to distribute these benefits in a manner to meet its obvious responsibilities to its comparatively few ruined counties? Is it fair to the taxpayers of Indiana and the rest of the Nation to ask them to dig deeper into their pockets to discharge the responsibilities which this already overfavored State of Tennessee is shirking?

Although I am challenged on this question, there is grave doubt in my mind that this measure is even constitutional. This is the first time in our history, so I am informed, that the Congress has appropriated money for, or authorized money to be paid directly to counties. Certainly there is no way otherwise to force the State to distribute this money to its ruined counties.

I must remind you, also, of the future liabilities of the Federal Government implicit in the approval of this measure. There are literally hundreds of instances in which the Federal Government has taken millions of dollars of taxpaying property off of local and State tax duplicates. Our Federal housing projects are a notable example. If Tennessee counties, broken by T. V. A., may look for rescue by the Federal Treasury, then is it not fair and consistent for cities and counties all over the country to ask this Congress for full compensation for every cent of revenue of which this Federal Government has deprived them?

The question involved here is much larger than a mere dole in Tennessee, as important as that single question is. Even if this could be isolated as a single Treasury raid for the benefit of Tennessee, it could not be justified after a casual examination of the balance sheet. But the matter cannot be so isolated. If this measure is approved, the precedent will arise to plague and embarrass this body time after time in the future. If Tennessee ignores its immediate responsibilities in this instance on the shallow pretext of State constitutional limitations, why should not 47 other States find an equally shallow pretext for laying additional State burdens in the lap of Congress? Why should not the taxing units in my own State of Indiana find some pretext for asking Congress to reimburse them for the losses they have suffered at the hands of the United States Housing Authority, or some other New Deal agency which has complicated the local revenue problem by making serious inroads upon local sources of tax revenue?

The question is just that broad in its implications, and just that serious in its possibilities. Yet we are asked, during this utterly unthinking and shortsighted Treasury raid, in a single hour to approve a proposal which a competent committee has already rejected after hours and days of serious deliberation. I hope—I sincerely hope that this House will not be duped into approval of this measure at least until it has had an opportunity, certainly not available in this 1 hour, to understand fully the implications in the proposal.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, my district is the hardest hit of any in the Tennessee Valley by virtue of this acquirement of power-company properties. A large part of the property of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. was located in the 12 counties of my district. The power company paid from 12 to 42 percent of the taxes in these various counties. This Congress in its wisdom saw fit to authorize the purchase of this property by the Tennessee Valley Authority. If this amendment is not passed many counties in my district will be unable to carry on their schools and will default in the payment of bonds. They have for years collected taxes on this power-company property, which they had a right to expect to continue to remain there subject to taxation. Certainly no Member of this House will want to inflict this punishment upon the people, and especially the school children of these various counties, who through no fault of their own are placed in this pitiful plight.

The record shows—and there is no word of testimony to the contrary—that the Tennessee Valley Authority has added 12½ percent to its power rates as a tax fund. So the consumers of electricity are paying an additional amount which is in excess of the percentage that will be taken from the sales of electricity to replace county taxes. This payment is in the nature of a trust fund, and certainly an amount should be taken from it sufficient to at least meet the acute situation that these counties are confronted with.

I hope that no Member of the House thinks that this is full tax replacement. As a matter of fact, the State of Tennessee will still lose almost all of its business taxes on power utilities, and the counties will lose some taxes on personal property. I also want to call attention to the fact that in the counties having land covered by reservoirs resulting from dams built by the Tennessee Valley Authority, that the counties will receive replacement on only that part of the land allocated to power. The allocation now set up by the Tennessee Valley Authority on such land is 40 percent of its value. I feel that the whole tax loss on this land should be replaced and presented an amendment to the Military Affairs Committee for that purpose, but, of course, the Senate amendment under parliamentary procedure cannot be amended. So that, even if this bill is passed, the counties, unfortunately, will have to suffer that substantial loss.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is of great value in the national-defense program. It is earning, and will earn, enough money to amortize the power investment in 47 years, and in addition restore the taxes to the counties. Whether or not you agree with the Tennessee Valley Authority is not the issue now presented. The Tennessee Valley Authority is a reality and certainly you do not want to penalize the counties and people in the valley. The very fair attitude of Alabama demonstrates conclusively the justice of this proposal. The enactment of this legislation will reduce the amount that goes to Alabama, but the Representatives from Alabama, being statesmen and wanting to do the fair thing, favor this bill. I think it is a commendable attitude on their part.

I urge you, my colleagues, to place yourselves in the situation of the people of these counties. They are not responsible for the plight they are in. This amendment is fair, reasonable, and just. I hope that you will support it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it matters not whether some of us ever agreed that the Tennessee Valley Authority should be set up to do the work it is doing or not. The Congress by its action did set up the Tennessee Valley Authority. Congress did approve the building of these dams. Congress did appropriate the money to build them. They are there, and whether the individual community wanted the dam to cover up its property or not, the dam has been built and the property, so far as taxable purposes are concerned, has been destroyed to the local communities.

This is not a matter of the State of Tennessee alone; it is a matter of the little communities that are trying to survive in the counties that have had a great deal of their taxable values taken away from them by an agency that is making money out of having destroyed their taxable values.

It seems to me, after reading this proposed amendment or compromise that is now before the House, that it is nothing less than fair, nothing less than right, that for a few years to come this contribution to these communities to support their schools and their other institutions is not an unfair thing for them to ask or for the Congress of the United States to grant.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. If I have the time; yes.

Mr. RANKIN. This money is already collected from these consumers. There is 12½ percent added to the wholesale rate for this purpose, and if you kill this provision they will simply reduce the wholesale rate for the benefit of the whole area, and these little communities whose lands were flooded will be the ones that will have to suffer.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct, I think, and that is an added reason why these communities should be granted the relief sought by the amendment pending in the House at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] such time as he may require.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the Members on the other side of the House who have been clamoring for these consumers to pay taxes, have been sincere, they cannot afford to vote against this provision. Their vote will demonstrate just how serious they are in their demands for the consumers of T. V. A. power to pay taxes, because if this provision is defeated the T. V. A. will then reduce the wholesale rates by taking off the extra charge now collected to take care of these items. That would benefit the power consumers of the whole area at the expense of these small areas whose lands have been flooded and removed from the tax rolls.

This is a just proposition, and I hope it will be sustained by an overwhelming majority. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 68 of the pending relief bill, House Joint Resolution 544, in disagreement before the House seeks to amend section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 to provide that a part of the revenue received from the sale of power in the States invaded by the T. V. A. shall be returned and paid back to the school districts, cities, counties, and municipalities for taxable property lost or destroyed by the operations of the T. V. A.

This would establish one of the most dangerous precedents in the history of this Government. If the principle involved in the pending amendment was carried out and extended to all the operations of the Federal Government, it would mean that every municipality, every taxing unit, and every State in the Union ought to demand from the Government of the United States reimbursement for property taken in order to carry out the necessary functions of Federal authority. Every city that has a post office, every State that has a Federal highway, every water course that has a navigable channel which has been dredged from taxable property, should immediately file a claim with Congress to be reimbursed for taxable property taken from the tax rolls of such taxing units.

I have opposed the establishment of the T. V. A. from its very inception on the ground that it was extending the hand of the Federal Government into private business and in competition with private enterprise. Its plain import is nothing less than national socialism.

The T. V. A. is one of the greatest swindles ever perpetrated upon the American people and some day, when the full and complete truth becomes known and the ultimate results are made apparent to the people, those results will rival the Mississippi Bubble of more than two centuries ago.

Every good engineer in this country knows that with very few exceptions it costs less to generate electric energy by steam than by hydroelectric power. In order that the people might not know, and in order to deceive the American public, the program of the T. V. A. is to shift $215,000,000 of this gigantic scheme out of an estimated cost of more than $500,000,000 to flood control and navigation.

It is known that navigation on the Tennessee River costs twice as much as transportation by rail, and not including taxes.

Nearly 1,000,000 acres of the best agricultural land in Tennessee have actually been destroyed by this gigantic scheme, which represents an area double the acreage ever destroyed by floods by natural causes.

Strip this whole deceptive program of its trick bookkeeping and window dressing and the net result is a waste of public money, a destruction of free enterprise, thwarting of individual ownership, and a staggering blow to the economic system of the United States.

In 1933 the estimated value of the entire T. V. A. was $132,000,000. At the present time approximately $375,000,000 has been expended on the Tennessee River in furthering and expanding this national socialism. It was only spent as a power project and has very little use either for flood control or navigation. Commerce on the Tennessee River is negligible and the building of the vast dams for flood control is sheer hypocrisy, for if the dams are empty they cannot be used for power; if they are full, they are useless for flood control.

The actual income of the T. V. A. from the sale of power in 1937 was less than $2,000,000. The greater part of the huge investment of $375,000,000 has been expended for the purpose of developing hydroelectric power. The return on this enormous investment is less than one-half of 1 cent.

If the T. V. A. desired to present to the American people an honest picture of this foolish investment and tried to make income justify the enormous expenditure, it would have to increase its present rate nearly 2 cents per kilowatt-hour. That rate then would be higher than the average cost of electric energy throughout the entire country as now furnished by private enterprise.

For over 7 years I have listened to absurd and exaggerated statements made on this floor of the great possibilities of the T. V. A. I have, also, listened to the unbelievable and ridiculous statements made in this House that the American user of electric energy was being overcharged $1,000,000,000 annually by private enterprise.

If the reports of the Federal Power Commission are correct, and no one has ever challenged their accuracy, the total amount of electric energy, according to the latest report, used and paid for by the people of this Nation amounted to $2,000,000,000, from which private utilities were compelled to pay in taxes, cost of maintenance and operating, approximately $1,400,000,000, leaving $600,000,000 for other purposes.

The absurdity of the claim made that utilities are overcharging the users of electric energy $1,000,000,000 annually needs no further explanation from me.

The pending amendment should be defeated and the municipal tax units in the States affected, who clamored for this glorified project, should meet the problems which they themselves invited. The Federal Government has been a Santa Claus. Gentlemen, this amendment seeks another bag of gifts to be paid for by the taxpayers of my congressional district and throughout all the States in order to continue the expensive luxury of a Federal enterprise that cannot justify its economic position.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will be voted down and the people of the Nation spared the further humiliation of paying for a white elephant that should never have been born.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I have felt the vital importance of this matter so keenly that I regret exceedingly there is not opportunity for greater and more lengthy discussions. As said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], we are proposing here something altogether new in the system or form of the American Government under which we live.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I am sorry I cannot yield just now, and I hope my colleague will not interrupt me, for this is too important.

Let me say to begin with that this is a permanent tax. It is not only a permanent tax but it is a tax that will spread out over the country wherever the T. V. A. shall extend its operations, and it is now admitted that it is in seven States already, and probably, with the national-defense move under way and a Budget estimate and proposal sent here today to the Congress for $65,000,000 for the T. V. A. for the construction of dams and powerhouses, there is no telling where it will spread and there is no telling in what communities it will destroy tax values and schools and other governmental activities all over the country.

There is another vital matter involved here that I want to call to the attention of the House. The House itself is on trial in this matter. One of the major committees of the House is being tried today, because this is nothing more or less than a back-door form of effort on the part of another body to disregard and override the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, which it has already done on three different occasions. I am here today defending the jurisdiction and rights of a major committee of this House against the overriding and roundabout way of telling the House of Representatives that its committee cannot write legislation after 6 or 8 or 10 weeks of hearings, and then after many hours and weeks of consideration in executive session.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this time. There is another thing about it that I want you to catch, and that is this. The bill upon its face tells you that it ought to be defeated. Why? It starts out and says to you that it takes 10 percent of the gross receipts in 1940 to pay these tax bills, and then it tells you that 5 percent of them 8 years from now is enough. Why? Because there is going to be such an increase in business enterprise and manufacturing plants, 785 of which have already entered that valley, that they will have revenue enough to pay with a 5-percent tax.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on the question of tax?

Mr. MAY. I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I want to give the gentleman some facts about the matter.

Mr. MAY. I am sorry, I cannot yield. I know five times as much about this as the gentleman does. The proof before our committee shows that the people of Tennessee alone have made a saving of $7,600,000 in the rates, and their whole tax bill is only $3,500,000. In addition to that, when that good-looking, handsome, little Governor of Tennessee came before our committee and spent 3 hours on the witness stand singing the praises of the T. V. A. and we asked him about levying a sales tax in Tennessee to take care of this thing, he wilted and almost fainted, because he is a candidate for reelection and a sales tax is not popular. What else have they got? They have navigation for 650 miles on that river, and they have erosion prevention, and cheap fertilizer distributed all over that valley at cost, and yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the floor leader, talks about the equity of this thing, and the whole story is just like saying, Now we will build a great highway from the north to the south and we will improve the properties and the values of everything in every State, every county, and every municipality through which it goes, and because Uncle Sam, out of his Treasury and out of the pockets of his taxpayers all over America, does that he must be penalized to a further extent of creating a tax for all time to come, with business increasing and coming there every week and every day.

Someone said that there was not a man that ever appeared to oppose this measure. That is correct; and why? Because everybody in that area is getting something out of it, and that is the reason why nobody appeared in opposition to it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman will not say that Alabama is getting anything out of it.

Mr. MAY. I will say that Alabama is going to be hurt by it, because it will take away from Alabama some things she has now, and there are some little taxing districts and school districts and other organizations in that country that will suffer. But if we are going to have Government ownership, and Government operation of utilities, and Government competition with private industry, we might as well get our lesson now, so we will know hereafter what it is going to be. These people are getting a taste of it, and we might as well have a taste here and now and let us see what it is going to be. [Applause.] It is going to be a bitter dose in a vile form of state socialism like Russia and Germany.

In addition to that, I have a letter here from a man named John M. Carmody, Administrator of the Work Projects Administration and of the Public Works Administration, and he tells me that the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia, only four of the seven, have received already grants and gifts amounting to $46,000,000, and loans for $113,000,000. Stick that up on top of the hundreds of millions of dollars already spent, and then wait until under the name of national defense, under the cloak of defense of this country, Mr. Lilienthal comes to Washington and goes into conference with Mr. Stettinius, of the Defense Committee, and they talk of the necessity for another steam plant and another dam the Congress has not yet authorized, and want $65,000,000 for that. In the name of God, you men of the North and the South and the East and the West, how are you going to go home to your constituents and say that, in the face of a great peril that hangs over American liberty and freedom, in the face of a military despotism threatening over our heads, you voted to take money out of the Federal Treasury and give it to a group of people that has already had everything in the world that heart could wish? I have great sympathy for the suffering communities in that great section.

Do you know they have 8,000 miles of water shore lines when this thing is completed? They have millions of acres of playgrounds. They have flood control and navigation of the river. They have soil-erosion prevention. There have been planted millions of trees in the the State of Tennessee alone. They have soil-erosion prevention until the hillsides have been terraced, fertilized, and graded; until they are a green carpet, while in your State and my State soil erosion goes on with its vicious process of deterioration, destroying our farms. All paid from revenues contributed by American taxpayers.

Now, if you can justify further invasion of private industry, and allow the T. V. A. directors and other of their representatives to go out and say to the people of any and every community, whose schools and other public functions are paid for by the owner of private property of any kind, "The T. V. A. will pay your taxes. Do not worry about them. They will be paid by T. V. A." You thereby disarm every private owner of the last defense they have against being absorbed and taken over. You may rest assured that this thing will surely return to haunt this body. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] 2 minutes.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that, along with the feeling and prejudice that my good friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] manifests, he refused to yield for at least one or two questions, because I remember there is an old adage that "consistency is a jewel." The gentleman says he wishes we had more time to discuss this very important bill. That would have been very easy if, after several months of careful deliberation by the House Military Affairs Committee, that committee had not, by a tie vote, with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] voting against the bill, refused to even let the bill or anything akin to it come out here on the floor for full and fair discussion.

As the majority leader [Mr. RAYBURN] said, to my mind this is a question of justice and equity and of doing the right and fair thing by some innocent people and communities. It is not a question of how you felt when the T. V. A. was established, because my good friend from Kentucky helped to establish it and he now condemns the thing for which he voted. It is his child along with the balance of us. As the gentleman from Texas said, the dams are there; T. V. A. is a reality and we ought to do justice.

Last year when the question of the sale of the properties of the Commonwealth & Southern Electric Co. came up for consideration in this body, a man about whom we hear much now, Mr. Wendell Willkie, came here and urged the passage of that act. As a result of it, he sold the private companies of the Commonwealth & Southern in the State of Tennessee for a very handsome sum, as everybody admits, and to the satisfaction of every stockholder of that great company. As the result of that, every little county in the State of Tennessee where that company operated or had a plant has lost from its tax rolls its largest taxpayer. They were represented here at that time and begged for protection or replacement of taxes concurrent with the sale of the properties. One of the grandest men who ever sat in this House, Hon. Sam McReynolds, was then on his deathbed. He sent for me and pleaded for equity and justice for these small counties and communities. That bill had to come here as this one has done, as a rider on a Senate bill. That is not the proper way to legislate, but there is nothing else to be done when the appropriate committee refuses to report out anything so that we may have full and fair discussion. This will be no precedent. The Boulder Dam bill, passed by a Republican House, replaces taxes. The same is done in national forests and under the Taylor Grazing Act. Let us do justice in this matter.

I also rejoice that the National Defense Committee, headed by Mr. Stettinius and a great utility executive have asked for more money for T. V. A. The time is coming when T. V. A. will be one of our greatest assets for national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Pearson] 2 minutes.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could have the especial attention of my friends on the Republican side, who evidenced so much enthusiasm at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], particularly those of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] with reference to the principle which is being established in this bill. The gentleman from Illinois insists that this legislation will establish a new principle in taxation. I want to call their attention to the fact that there is no new principle involved in this measure, but that the principle was established when the Tennessee Valley Authority was created. At that time Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, on the floor of the Senate, moved to strike section 13 from the original act because it carried a provision for 5 percent to reimburse the States of Tennessee and Alabama for their lost revenues. At that time Senator NORRIS, who is the author of the act creating the Tennessee Valley Authority, fully and explicitly explained to the Senate and to the Congress that that 5 percent was being carried in the act for the express purpose of taking care of lost revenues brought about by acquisition of properties by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and which would work a hardship and injustice against the people of those States unless they were taken care of. After that explanation Congress deliberately approved of an assessment of 5 percent to cover tax losses.

This bill follows that principle. The only difference is that it provides for an increase of 5 percent, to be graduated over a period of 8 years and finally reduced to the original 5 percent. This increase is necessary because the tax losses are now far in excess of the amount contemplated when the Authority was created.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding about this measure and it seems to be in the minds of some that this is money which will come from the Federal Treasury, money which your constituents and mine will have to pay, when the truth of the matter is the entire sum comes from the pockets of the consumers of power in the Tennessee Valley area. They are paying it now. This bill is for the purpose of giving the Authority the legal right to pay this money which the consumers are paying now, back to the States and counties in order to preserve their very existence.

We urge and beg the Members of this House to give us this right, to the end that the 8,000,000 people of that area may have their rights, despite the fact that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of this House feels that the prerogatives of his committee are being invaded. Such an invasion is an insignificant incident when compared to the distress of the States and counties affected by this legislation. Past experience convinces us beyond question that we can expect no relief no matter how badly needed at the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] one-quarter of a minute.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a further quotation from Senator NORRIS:

> If the T. V. A. shall be subject to local taxation it would be out of business in 3 months (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 13, 1939).

Beautiful yardstick! Nakedness exposed! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the last speaker on the amendment, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], the 3 remaining minutes.

Mr. COOPER. The question here presented is not the general T. V. A. issue. This provision included in the bill now under consideration is based upon the essential elements of fairness and equity. I want to emphasize the point made by those who have preceded me by saying that this question simply presents this issue to the House today, whether the people of the Tennessee Valley area who are now paying this money that is included in the rate structure of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall receive some of it back in the form of tax replacement. The only purpose of this provision is to take that money paid in by these users of electrical energy and pay it to these counties and local subdivisions of government.

The original Tennessee Valley Authority Act provided, in section 13, that 5 percent of the gross proceeds from power should go to the States of Tennessee and Alabama. Now this has spread over four other States to some extent. The States of North Carolina, Mississippi, Kentucky, and Georgia do not get anything at all under the act as it now stands. This amendment will make it possible for them to receive their proportionate share of this amount of money that is paid in by the consumers of electrical energy and can be distributed to the counties and the local subdivisions to provide some of the tax replacement necessary for them to maintain their solvency.

This is based upon the essential elements of fairness and equity and should receive the overwhelming approval of the House.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Does not the State of Alabama actually lose considerable revenue by the enactment of this amendment?

Mr. COOPER. That is true; there is no question about that.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. As I understand this legislation, it does not even delay the retirement of the Tennessee Valley's obligation to the Federal Treasury because gross receipts have increased substantially beyond original calculations, and no money comes out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. COOPER. That is absolutely true. Not one dollar of it comes out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I regret I cannot yield.

There is not one dollar that comes out of the Federal Treasury. All this money is paid in by the consumers of the electrical energy they purchase from the T. V. A. This amendment is simply to make it possible for the money that is paid in by the people themselves to be paid back to the counties or local taxing subdivisions to protect their school systems and provide for other expenses that they have to incur to maintain their local government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the parliamentary situation, a vote "aye" on the motion to recede and concur means that the amendment will be agreed to and the vote "no" is a vote against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is a correct statement of the parliamentary situation.

Without objection, the previous question will be ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 154, noes 155.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 179, answered "present" 1, not voting 46, as follows:

Mr. Johnson of West Virginia with Mr. Taylor.
Mr. White of Idaho with Mr. Mitchell.

Messrs. EBERHARTER and SCHWERT changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I have an active pair with the gentlewoman from Ohio, Mrs. BOLTON, which I am under obligation to respect. I ask that I may be permitted to withdraw my vote "yea" and to be recorded as voting "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the various motions was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to announce to the House that at 4 o'clock, in the Ways and Means Committee room of the new House Office Building, there will be moving pictures of the recent experiments of the new explosive glmite shown for the benefit of the Members. I may say I have known Mr. Lester P. Barlow for 20 years. He is the gentleman who has perfected this explosive.

I understand the Bureau of Standards has pronounced glmite to be 30 percent more powerful than TNT. With that in mind, and also having in mind the reluctance of the War Department to proceed further with these experiments, I ask the Members of the House to go to the Ways and Means Committee room at 4 o'clock and see for themselves just what this explosive is and what it can do to help meet the serious condition now confronting the country in its efforts to provide a proper national defense.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 8202, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and ask for the immediate consideration of the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Senate amendment No. 65: Page 60, line 18, strike out "$5,644,801" and insert "$6,773,093."

Senate amendment No. 66: Page 58, line 16, strike out "$867,648" and insert "$878,168."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the same severally with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 65 and 66 and agree to the same severally with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment No. 65, insert "$5,733,217"; and in lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment No. 66 insert "$868,458."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this merely corrects totals in the bill. When the bill passed the Senate there still remained two totals to which the House had not agreed.

Mr. TABER. May I ask whether there is anything in here except a correction of totals?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Nothing at all except the correction of two totals.

Mr. TABER. Does this conclude the consideration of the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is the final action on the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO COVER ADVANCES FOR CROP INSURANCE

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9594) to amend section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the transfer of funds to cover advances for crop insurance.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9594) to amend section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the transfer of funds to cover advances for crop insurance, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "to make grants of aid" in such amendment and insert in lieu thereof "to make advances"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. BANKHEAD,
CARL A. HATCH,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9594) to amend section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the transfer of funds to cover advances for crop insurance, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill amends section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the Secretary to transfer to the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, prior to the execution of applications for insurance or requests for advances by producers, the funds estimated as necessary to cover advances which will be requested for the payment of premiums under the crop-insurance program. Any portion of such funds not used for advances to producers under such program is to be returned to the Secretary by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. The amendments of the Senate add to the provisions of the House bill nine new sections:

On Senate amendment No. 1: Amends section 8 (c) (5) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to provide that normal yield per acre for any county in the case of corn or wheat need be redetermined only when the actual average yield for the 10 calendar years immediately preceding the calendar year in which such yield is being reconsidered differs by at least 5 percent from the actual average yield for the 10 years upon which the existing normal yield per acre for the county was based. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 2: Amends section 301 (b) (6) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to redefine the term "market" so as to have a general definition of this term applicable to all of the commodities to which such act applies and to include involuntary sales and gifts inter vivos within the meaning of such term; and, in the case of wheat as well as corn to include feeding to poultry or livestock. In the case of all the commodities to which such act applies, the disposing of any such commodity as premium to the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation is not deemed marketing. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 3: Amends section 301 (b) (13) (A) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to make the definition of "normal yield" for any county, in the case of corn or wheat, in such act conform to the definition thereof in section 8 (c) (5) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended by Senate amendment No. 1. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 4: Amends section 301 (b) (13) (B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 so as to limit the definition of "normal yield" for any county, as defined therein, to cotton. This is a technical amendment made necessary by the preceding amendment. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 5: Amends section 372 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to extend from 1 to 2 years the time within which claims may be filed with the Secretary for the refund of penalties for excess marketings wrongfully collected, and by limiting the refund thereof to claimants who bore the burden of the payment of such penalty. It also provides that receipts of penalties may be handled on a farm basis rather than on the basis of individual producers, in order to save expense and simplify procedure in the collection of refund or penalties. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 6: Amends section 385 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by providing that in case any person who is entitled to receive any payment referred to in such section dies, becomes incompetent, or disappears before receiving such payment, or is succeeded by another who renders or completes the required performance, the payment shall, without regard to any other provisions of law, be made as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances and provide by regulations. The House recedes.

On Senate amendment No. 7: Amends section 391 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by authorizing the Commodity Credit Corporation to loan to the Secretary in each fiscal year such sums, not to exceed $50,000,000, as he estimates will be required during such fiscal year to make crop-insurance-premium advances and to make grants of aid pursuant to the applicable provisions of sections 8 and 12 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, in connection with programs applicable to crops harvested in the calendar year in which such fiscal year ends, and to pay administrative expenses of county agricultural conservation associations for the calendar year in which such fiscal year ends. Provision is made for interest, and for repayment from the appropriation for the succeeding fiscal year or from any unobligated balance of the appropriation for any other year. The conference report recommends the striking out of the words "to make grants of aid" and inserting in lieu thereof "to make advances." The "grants of aid" to which the Senate amendment has reference is the furnishing of lime, fertilizer, seed, and other farming materials to farmers for use in accordance with the soil-conservation program. Inasmuch as these materials are furnished as advances on and are deducted from the soil-conservation payments, it was thought that "advances" more accurately describes what was contemplated in the Senate amendment.

On Senate amendment No. 8: Makes it possible, where the United States has demanded and collected the refund of any agricultural adjustment or conservation payment for any year prior to 1940 because the performance on account of which such payment was made was rendered in whole or in part by another person, to repay the amount so refunded to the person who rendered such performance. It also provides that where the person who did not render the whole performance has turned over to the person who did render the whole or part of the performance a share of the payment earned, refund thereof will not be required. The House recedes.

The Senate amendment to the title amends the title of the bill so as to read: "An act to amend the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes." The House recedes.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment involved here is intended primarily to simplify the administration of some of the A. A. A. program.

For instance, in making payments in cases where the beneficiaries have died, some of the payments are small, and under the present law they are required to institute administration proceedings and determine according to the laws of the State the distribution of the estate. Frequently the proceedings are more expensive than the amount of the payment. This simply permits the payment to be adjusted in a natural and normal way.

It also permits the payments to be made earlier by virtue of permitting the Commodity Credit Corporation to advance the payments before the funds are available.

It also provides that unless there is a change in allotment to any county of more than 5 percent, it is not necessary to rerate and reschedule the county allotments. This saves considerable time in making out the allotments each year and saves a good deal of irritation that the continuing changes cause.

We have eliminated from the amendments all the controversial items, and this is a unanimous report of the conference groups of both the House and the Senate.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not correct to say that none of the provisions that were added by the Senate add any more control to the agricultural program?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is correct. They do not add any control, nor do they add any expense. They simply, in practically all the instances except the one I mentioned about the case of death, simplify the administration. As a matter of fact, as the gentleman knows, I have never been very strong on the penalty provisions anyway, and think they should be simplified to meet more nearly the soil-conservation program.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY PROVISION FOR VESSELS AFFECTED BY NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 260) to make emergency provision for the maintenance of essential vessels affected by the Neutrality Act of 1939, and for adjustment of obligations with respect to such vessels, be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. BLAND. The bill grows out of the conditions existing by reason of the Neutrality Act and the proclamations thereunder whereby ships cannot enter combat areas. It endeavors to preserve for use and make available those ships that are deemed to be essential so that they may be available at any minute. It gives the Maritime Commission the right to place them in routes. I may say that the joint resolution comes here with a unanimous report and has the endorsement of both sides of the committee.

Any vessel is an essential vessel which is security for any mortgage indebtedness to the United States or constructed under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 or required by the terms of a contract under such act to be operated on a certain essential foreign trade route, and which it is necessary in the interests of commerce and national defense to maintain in condition for prompt use.

May I cite as examples particularly of vessels that would be affected the America, which has just been constructed and is ready for delivery, the Washington and the Manhattan, which have been operating first to the British Isles and then to the Mediterranean. These and other vessels are now taken out of those areas by reason of the neutrality proclamations of the President. It is desired that arrangements may be made whereby those vessels can be preserved, possibly by operation or possibly lay-up, and their condition looked after by the Maritime Commission so that they may be available at all times. There is no intent of using them in any way in violation or in contravention of the Neutrality Act.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is there any intent and any provision in the bill whereby some administrative brain truster may be able to place these ships in the service of foreign belligerent countries, in the same manner the Navy Department has placed the mosquito boats of our Navy in the service of a belligerent nation in violation of the law of the land?

Mr. BLAND. There is no authority for any person to do any such thing, but it is entirely contemplated and provided that they shall be otherwise used.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This does not insure foreign ships?

Mr. BLAND. No; it does not. If the gentlewoman will pardon me, she has reference to another bill that I have here dealing with marine insurance. That is an entirely different bill. This is an emergency bill that deals with conditions where contracts have been entered into with certain companies for the operation of these ships in particular routes where they cannot be operated now. It gives the Maritime Commission an opportunity to lay them up in such a way that they may be available at any minute for use or, if by reason of change of conditions they can be otherwise used, to be then used in commerce.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. If this joint resolution is placed on the statute books, will it not permit the use of these vessels in intercoastal trade?

Mr. BLAND. It will permit the use of the vessels in any trade in which they may now be used. Of course, men engaged in the intercoastal trade and men engaged on the high seas must necessarily expect if the commerce should be so great that it cannot be met by those vessels that are now being used there, that they, too, must accommodate themselves to the emergency that is contemplated by this act.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that these Government-subsidized vessels will compete with private shipping interests as well as the transcontinental railroads?

Mr. BLAND. There will be no subsidy paid when in this domestic service. They will only be used where the commerce is sufficient to justify it. No man knows now what the commerce will be if present conditions continue.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not the interests of the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. and the other labor unions have been considered in connection with this proposed legislation?

Mr. BLAND. They have known about it, and there has been no objection. Yesterday I had the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. in my office dealing with the marine-insurance bill as to some objections they had, and I expect to offer on that bill an amendment today to take care of their objections.

They are all agreed, and they have raised no objection to this measure, because this, to some extent, helps them, in that it preserves an opportunity for their men.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. It will continue these boats in service?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Is it not a fact that our Government has a substantial interest in these ships now by virtue of subsidies or mortgages?

Mr. BLAND. In a substantial manner, but that is not the question here. The question here is that there is a condition attached that these vessels that will be needed or may be needed for national defense shall be preserved in such a way that they shall be available at any instant for national defense, and if you tie a vessel up and allow it to deteriorate, you may be unable to get it out and use it just when you want it. That is the essential and crucial point in this emergency legislation.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. O'LEARY. As a matter of fact, this bill simply gives the Maritime Commission discretionary power to work out this situation during an emergency.

Mr. BLAND. In the interest of the contractors and in the interest of the people of the United States.

Mr. O'LEARY. And it does not in any way affect the Neutrality Act as it is now?

Mr. BLAND. Not in the slightest.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it not a fact that the Maritime Commission will put these vessels in operation where they lack an excess of tonnage at this time?

Mr. BLAND. That is contemplated; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand there is an amendment to be offered and, as I understand, the gentleman will have an opportunity to offer that amendment.

Mr. BLAND. The bill is called up in this way in order to give the gentleman an opportunity to offer his amendment which, of course, will be opposed by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) when used in this joint resolution the term "essential vessel" means any vessel (1) which is (A) security for any mortgage indebtedness to the United States or (B) constructed under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, or required by the terms of a contract under such act to be operated on a certain essential foreign trade route, and (2) which it is necessary in the interests of commerce and national defense to maintain in condition for prompt use.

(b) For the purposes of preserving in the national interest the full availability and usefulness of essential vessels, which, under the provisions of the Neutrality Act of 1939 (or any proclamation issued thereunder), or compatibly with the national interest, cannot be operated in the service, route, or line to which such vessels are assigned pursuant to the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, or in which they would otherwise be operated, the United States Maritime Commission is authorized to make adjustments of obligations in respect of such vessels and to make arrangements for the maintenance of such vessels, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution and to such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe as necessary or appropriate for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this joint resolution. If the Commission, upon written application in respect of any essential vessel, determines after such examination, investigation, and proceedings as it deems desirable that (1) the operation of such vessel in the service, route, or line to which such vessel is assigned pursuant to the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, or in which it would otherwise be operated, is either (A) not lawful under the Neutrality Act of 1939 (or any proclamation issued thereunder), or (B) not compatible with the maintenance of availability of such vessel for purposes of national defense and commerce, (2) it is not feasible under existing law to employ such vessel in any other service or operation in either the foreign or domestic trades (except temporary or emergency operation under subsection (c) (5) hereof, and (3) the applicant, by reason of the restrictions of the Neutrality Act of 1939, or the withdrawal of vessels for national-defense purposes under clause (1) hereof, is not earning or will not earn a fair and reasonable return on the capital necessarily employed in its business, the Commission may make adjustments and arrangements with the applicant as provided in subsection (c) hereof, which shall continue in effect only during the circumstances above described.

(c) Such adjustments and arrangements shall include suspension of the requirement to operate such vessel in foreign trade under the applicable operating-differential or construction-differential subsidy contract or mortgage or other agreement, and of the right to operating-differential subsidy in respect of such vessel, and may include any one or more of the following provisions, in whole or in part, as, and to the extent that, the Commission may deem to be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, or the purposes and provisions of this joint resolution:

(1) Lay-up of the vessel by the owner or, at the option of the Commission, in the custody of the Commission, with payment or reimbursement by the Commission of necessary and proper expenses thereof (including reasonable overhead and insurance), or in lieu of such payment or reimbursement, a fixed periodic allowance therefor;

(2) Postponement, for a period not in excess of the period or periods of lay-up, of the maturity date of each installment on account of the principal of obligations to the United States in respect of the vessel (whether or not such maturity date shall fall within such period or periods), or rearrangement of such maturities;

(3) Postponement or cancelation of interest accruing on such obligations during such period or periods of lay-up;

(4) Extension for a period not in excess of the period or periods of lay-up, of the 20-year life limitation in respect of the vessel, and of the period or periods of other limitations and provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, insofar as they are based upon a 20-year life;

(5) Provisions for such temporary or emergency employment of the vessel in lieu of lay-up as may be practicable, with such arrangements for management of the vessel, payment of expenses, and application of the proceeds of such employment, as the Commission may approve, the period or periods of such operation being included as part of the period or periods of lay-up;

(6) The payment to the Commission, upon termination of the arrangements with the applicant hereunder, out of the applicant's net profits, earned while such arrangements were in effect, in excess of 10 percent per annum on the capital necessarily employed in the applicant's business, in reimbursement, to the extent that the Commission shall deem it necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution, on account of obligations postponed or canceled and expenses incurred or paid by the Commission under this subsection. For the purposes of this paragraph capital of the applicant represented by vessels of the applicant laid up or operated under this joint resolution shall not be excluded from capital necessarily employed in the applicant's business. The Commission may require that the vessels so laid up or operated be security for reimbursement hereunder.

(d) The adjustments and arrangements made under subsection (c) in respect of any vessel shall be subject to such readjustment or modification from time to time as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to carry out the purposes and provisions of this joint resolution.

(e) Moneys in the construction fund of the Commission shall be available for expenses of the Commission incurred in adjustments or arrangements made under this joint resolution.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 5, line 22, after the word "resolution," add a new paragraph, as follows:

"(f) No vessel to which this resolution relates shall be operated at Government expense or with Government aid, in competition in interstate commerce with privately owned, unsubsidized water carriers engaged in such commerce."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, the sale of Government ships after the World War for operation in domestic commerce at prices representing a small fraction of the cost of construction created substantial additional competition not only for privately owned steamship lines operating in these trades, but also for rail transportation. Most of the war-built vessels sold by the Government for domestic operation have operated in the trade between the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of the United States. As a result of the competition thus created, intercoastal rates were demoralized, and substantial losses were inflicted on intercoastal lines whose vessels had been built and paid for by private enterprise. It has also resulted in the lowering of the transcontinental and other related rail rates to meet this unregulated competition, so that rail transportation has likewise suffered severely from competition with transportation, most of whose cost was absorbed as a public expense by the Federal Government.

Seeking to prevent a repetition of the losses inflicted on private shipowners through the sale of Government tonnage, at low prices, and hoping to create conditions which would encourage the replacement of existing fleets, the United States Maritime Commission recommended the enactment of legislation in 1938:

First. To prohibit the sale or charter of new ships for domestic operation except at prices based upon the full domestic construction cost.

Second. To prohibit the use for commercial operation of vessels over 20 years of age in the Commission's laid-up fleet except during an emergency declared by the President.

These provisions were enacted into law as recommended by the Commission as amendments to the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and are relied upon by those who have invested in domestic transportation facilities to protect their investment from unfair competition from publicly owned facilities.

House Joint Resolution 519 and Senate Joint Resolution 260 would suspend the prohibition against commercial operation of the vessels in the Government laid-up fleet during the period of the present European war. In other words, if this resolution is adopted the Commission would be authorized to sell or charter all of the vessels in its laid-up fleet for operation in the domestic trades without any determination that an emergency requiring their use in these trades existed. Ample authority is vested in the President and in the United States Maritime Commission under existing law to deal with any emergency that might arise. This resolution, however, permits the Commission to sell or charter for commercial operation, in competition with existing steamship lines and the railroads, ship tonnage equaling about two-thirds that now employed in the intercoastal trade, without any determination that existing transportation facilities are inadequate or that an emergency requiring the use of these facilities exists. The adoption of this resolution under these circumstances can only be construed by the Commission as an expression of the desire by Congress that these ships be thus sold or chartered.

Why is the adoption of this resolution sought at this time? The answer seems clear that large shipper interests hope in this way to continue to enjoy the use of water-transportation facilities at less than the reasonable cost of such transportation based upon the cost of construction of such facilities in American yards with American labor. The sponsors of this legislation attempt to create the impression that an emergency exists in domestic transportation. If this were the case the authority vested by existing law would be ample. However, the Commission in its report on this resolution makes it clear that no such emergency exists. In this connection Chairman Land's letter of April 19, 1940, to Chairman BLAND of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries states as follows:

While the net diversion to tonnage from the intercoastal trade is considerable on the basis of tonnage figures alone, it must be remembered that up to the beginning of the war the tonnage was definitely in excess of needs. From the available data it does not appear that any emergency exists in the intercoastal trade so far as available space is concerned at this time. Insofar as there exist increased demands for cargo space in the intercoastal trade, this increase in considerable part is based on an anticipation of increased rates, possibly of shortage of space, and the desire to protect against possibilities of the future rather than present conditions. There has been a considerable amount of advanced booking, some for the protection against increased rates on future sales and some of which is wholly speculative in character. The complaint as to lack of cargo space must also, to some extent, be attributed to lack of space at the rates existing, rather than to an absolute lack of space. To offset possible adverse effects of the reduction in tonnage, the cargo-carrying capacity of the vessels remaining in the trade and the earning capacity of these vessels may well be increased by rearrangement and speeding up of schedules and by carrying fuller cargoes at remunerative rates. Steps to this end have been taken by some of the operators.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Speaker, I object; the gentleman would not yield to me.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I did not have the time.

Mr. O'LEARY. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, it should also be borne in mind that while the sponsors of this resolution ostensibly request relief only during the war emergency, as a matter of practical effect the additional facilities will undoubtedly be used principally after the war has terminated. It is recognized that because of the large amount of repairs needed by most of the units in the laid-up fleet the chartering of these ships for use only during the period of the war—the duration of which is highly uncertain—is impractical, and that the result which will more probably ensue from the adoption of the resolution, will be the sale of these ships for domestic use where they will compete with existing transportation facilities for many years to come.

The real issue presented by this resolution is therefore whether additional transportation facilities should be put into operation by the Government, to compete with existing water and rail facilities, so that certain large shipper interests might continue to receive the benefit of such transportation at less than the full cost thereof, without establishing the inadequacy of existing rail and water facilities and without demonstrating the existence of an emergency as is properly required under existing laws so as to afford reasonable protection to privately owned and operated facilities from unjustified Government competition.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'LEARY. The gentleman will agree that all we are asking in this resolution is to give the Maritime Commission discretionary power to work out a solution of this problem.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I agree with the gentleman; but, at the same time, I feel it is necessary to protect the private shipping interests of this country as well as the transcontinental railroads.

Mr. O'LEARY. Are any intercoastal lines or railroads affected by this legislation?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. They are.

Mr. O'LEARY. In what way?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Some few years ago long express and freight trains moved from coast to coast loaded with merchandise. Today Government subsidized intercoastal ships offering greatly reduced rates have taken this business from the railroads, which results in the loss of hundreds of railroaders' jobs.

Mr. O'LEARY. But there is nothing in this resolution that states that they are going into competition. The gentleman wants to tie the hands of the Maritime Commission, does he not?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. In reply to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY], it is not my intention to tie the hands of the merchant marine. I am simply trying to protect the interest of thousands of railroad employees.

Mr. WELCH. Does the gentleman know of any railroad in the United States that has entered an objection to this resolution?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The Association of American Railroads and the railway labor organizations always oppose legislation of this type.

Mr. WELCH. But no objection has been made to it, and I know the committee has not received any protest from the railroads.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. As a former railroad man, far be it for me to speak for all the railroads or railroad men of this country. However, I do insist it is legislation of this type which is destroying the jobs of railroad men.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN].

Mr. O'BRIEN. I realize the gentleman is a railroad man, and so am I; and I have never received a protest from any railroad in regard to this. In fact, I have received a slight amount of encouragement, inasmuch as it will loosen up some of these things.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I ask that the amendment be voted down. In the beginning of the gentleman's speech he showed that he is dealing with a situation that is not applicable here, because he dealt with sale and charter. Let us see what the Commission is to determine. First, that the operation of any such vessel in the service, route, or line in which such vessel is assigned pursuant to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, or in which it would be otherwise operated is either (a) not lawful under the Neutrality Act of 1939 (or any proclamation issued thereunder), or (b) not compatible with the maintenance of availability of such vessel for purposes of national defense and commerce; (2) that it is not feasible under existing law to employ such vessel in any other service or operation under subsection (c) (5) hereof; and (3) that the applicant, by reason of the restrictions of the Neutrality Act of 1939, or the withdrawal of vessels for national defense purposes under clause (1) hereof, is not earning or will not earn a fair and reasonable return on capital necessarily employed in its business, and the Commission may make adjustments and arrangements with the applicant as provided in subsection (c) hereof, which shall continue in effect only during the circumstances above described.

There is not a provision for sale, there is not a provision for long-time charter, it is only to deal with the ships during the lay-up period when they cannot serve on the lines where they are contracted to serve.

What can they do? They can lay up the ships, which may be by the owner or, at the option of the Commission, in the custody of the Commission, with payment or reimbursement by the Commission of necessary and proper expenses thereof, or in lieu of such payment or reimbursement, a fixed periodic allowance therefor. They may postpone the maturity date for each installment on account of principal, the postponement not to be in excess of the period or periods of lay-up, but they may not cancel any of the obligations, they may extend, postpone, or cancel the interest during the lay-up period, they may extend the 20-year limitation beyond the lay-up period, and now, what about the use of the ship? They expressly provided in the statute temporary or emergency employment in lieu of lay-up with such arrangement for management of vessel, payment of expenses, and application of the proceeds of such employment as the Commission may approve, the period of operation being part of the period of lay-up. Then if the company with which the contract is made makes on other operations more than a reasonable return, that company may be required to pay the expenses to the Maritime Commission. The bill provides that upon termination of arrangements payment out of applicant's net profits, earned while such arrangements were in effect, in excess of 10 percent per annum on the capital necessarily employed in the applicant's business, in reimbursement, to the extent that the Commission shall deem it necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution, on account of obligations postponed or canceled and expenses incurred or paid by the Commission under subsection (c).

Mr. Speaker, the condition before the country is such that we do not know what is going to happen, and ships may be taken off in other services. These ships ought to be used and these ships are being retained so that if we need them in an emergency we can use them. That is all it is, and I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was very carefully considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It is safe to say there is a railroad in every congressional district in the United States; but regardless of that fact I feel sure that not a Member of this body has received a protest from any railroad in the United States against the pending resolution.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELCH. In a moment I will yield.

It is the right of any Member to object to legislation which, in his opinion, is detrimental to certain private interests located in his district; but, Mr. Speaker, this is emergency legislation, and it applies to the security of our country and, therefore, should transcend private interests. The Navy is the first line of our national defense. The merchant marine is the right arm of the Navy, and the Commission in charge of our merchant marine should not be handicapped by restrictive legislation. The purpose of this bill is to remove certain minor restrictions giving the Maritime Commission a free hand in this time of national emergency to move our merchant marine, a great portion of which is now lying at anchor. Everyone knows that nothing deteriorates faster than a ship lying at anchor. This will permit the Maritime Commission to assign these ships to essential trade routes, where they will be kept in shape, so that if an emergency arises they will be ready for immediate use instead of having to be reconditioned when laid up for long periods. I sincerely hope the House will not give serious consideration to the pending amendment.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is seeing ghosts, not only one ghost but a multitude of ghosts. The gentleman said in response to a question that he was a railroad man. I have such a high regard for his intelligence and tried-and-true patriotism that I know he would not let that fact intervene between himself and his constitutional oath.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment comes almost within the category of being facetious. There is no actual competition between railroads and steamships. The interoceanic carriers are in the bulk line, and that is their exclusive line. Steamships carry these bulk commodities sometimes for one-twentieth what the railroads carry them for. The two types of transportation are not competitive. That is the answer to that question.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that that fact is said to be recognized in detail in the Wheeler-Lea bill, beloved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] but which I trust is now sleeping its last sleep in conference. Bulk commodities in any effective civilization are always carried by water when that is possible. The savings that come from that go direct to the consumer and to the American producer. There can be no question about that.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the very patriotic and distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. My distinguished friend of course is recognized not as a friend of the railroads. He is recognized as a friend of the inland waterway people.

Mr. CULKIN. I am a friend of both groups. I represent the people of the United States here and you represent the railroads. [Laughter.] That is the difference between you and me.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. May I say to the gentleman that a moment ago he mentioned the difference in rates. It is true the difference in rates does exist, but who pays the difference? The taxpayers of the country.

Mr. CULKIN. Now, that is a pure fiction. The two types of transportation are as distinct as the sun and the moon. Bulk commodities are carried by water at one-twentieth of the rail cost and these savings are passed back to the people. Each type of transportation is entitled to its place in the sun. I am eternally for that. I repeat that the usually able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is in this case seeing a multitude of ghosts. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota rose.

The SPEAKER. Debate on this amendment has been closed. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Are we not proceeding in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. We are.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Am I not entitled to recognition for a pro forma amendment? I was on my feet, as I think the Chair knows.

The SPEAKER. We are operating under the 5-minute rule, and there had been several speeches for and against the amendment. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to strike out the last word.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is the motion I wanted to offer, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSFER OF SHIPS TO BELLIGERENTS WOULD VIOLATE LONG-STANDING LAWS AND TREATIES

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill provides for the assignment or transfer of vessels, and in view of the fact that it has been demonstrated there has been a great deal of ignorance of the law in regard to the transfer of vessels, it seems to me appropriate at this time that there should be read into this debate the section of a long-standing law with regard to the transfer of vessels.

I understand that this afternoon the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs has announced that the proposed sale of the mosquito ships has been stopped because of the law to which I called attention in a 1-minute remark on the floor the other day.

As I think is well known, the discovery that 23 fighting boats that could not be replaced for many months or years were about to be transferred to a belligerent in a war where the United States is officially not engaged alarmed the Senate committee, as it did, indeed, people all over the country who had been told that we needed more boats and needed them badly and that it took years to build vessels of war.

If anyone has any doubt as to the alarm of the members of the Naval Affairs Committees, I trust he will read the remarks that have been made in another body this afternoon by the chairman of the Senate committee.

I understand Senator WALSH said that he was advised that those who were arranging the transfer were unaware of the law. He observed, however, that ignorance of the law does not excuse anybody, least of all those whose oath of office binds them to uphold the law.

I am not a lawyer and I make no claim to be particularly versed in the law. It simply happens that I read the statutes on neutrality during the debates on the question in the special session last fall, and went over this particular statute and its history in my remarks in the House, October 26, 1939. My remarks were not circulated particularly and I am not offended that they went unnoticed in certain quarters; yet, since the subject is so important at this time, for the purpose of the record in consideration of this bill, and for the related subject of the mosquito boats, I wish to read pertinent sections from chapter 2 on offenses against neutrality as given in title 18 of the Code of the United States—Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure:

SEC. 33. Sending out armed vessels with intent to deliver to belligerent nation: During a war in which the United States is a neutral Nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war, or converted from a private vessel into a vessel of war, with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation, or to an agent, officer, or citizen of such nation, or with reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States.

That law was approved on June 15, 1917. It was a reenactment of a section in the law of 1915, which was a reenactment of the 1909 law, which was based upon the Articles of Convention at The Hague in 1907.

In this connection I also call attention to the penalty section, which is section 36, chapter 2, title 18 of the Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure, which reads as follows:

Unlawful taking of vessel out of port. Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of sections 25, 27, and 31 to 38 of this title, shall take, or attempt or conspire to take, or authorize the taking of any such vessel, out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and her cargo shall be forfeited to the United States.

It is important to note in that connection that this section contemplates that it would be a private vessel; apparently no one ever thought the time would come when the Government itself would transfer a vessel of war to a belligerent directly or indirectly. The language of the two sections I have read and of the other sections in this chapter of the Code is broad, however, and covers every conceivable case. Not only those who take or transfer but those who conspire to take or send a vessel out of the jurisdiction of the United States for purposes of war are subject to the provisions of the penalty section and the vessel itself is forfeited to the United States. The penalty is a fine of not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years.

The statutory definition of a vessel in the code is:

Any contrivance capable of transportation on water.

Now this was no accidental legislation. It was passed as title V of the Espionage Act of 1917, adopted more than a month after we entered the World War, and was substantially identical with the acts of 1915 and 1909, and I call attention to the fact that the statute goes back even further than The Hague Conventions of 1907. Article VIII of the Conventions on Naval War adopted by The Hague International Conference said:

A neutral government is bound to use the means at its disposal to prevent, within its jurisdiction, the equipping or arming of any vessel which it has any reasonable suspicion of being destined to act as a cruiser or to join in hostile operations against a power with which it is at peace.

And further:

It is also bound to exercise the same surveillance to prevent the departure out of its jurisdiction of any vessel intending to act as a cruiser or take part in hostile operations, and which, within the said jurisdiction, may have been adapted wholly or in part to warlike purposes.

That principle goes back to the Treaty of Washington made in 1871 between the United States and Great Britain which, among other things, bound both parties to prevent—

The departure from their jurisdiction of any vessel having been especially adapted in whole or in part within such jurisdiction to warlike uses.

That in turn goes back to the Foreign Enlistment Act of August 9, 1870, a revision of the British Foreign Enlistment Act of 1819, which was minute in its provisions to prevent the enlisting or recruiting of men or the building or the equipping of vessels for the military service "of a foreign state at war with a friendly state."

Hence, Mr. Speaker, here we have a statute which runs back in our own history to a treaty adopted 70 years ago, and in principles of international law recognized for 120 years, between the two countries, presumably, who would now be conspiring to violate it. The principles of the statute, indeed, its very words have been enacted and reenacted and are the law of the land today.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the bill by its express provisions provides that after lay-up the time may be extended. It does not provide for any sales, but expressly contemplates the continuance under regular and usual circumstances of the original contract.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield briefly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I merely wish to say that I read the excerpts I did for the purpose of getting them in the RECORD, but I am not opposed to the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the Van Zandt amendment and shall support the bill as reported and championed on the floor of the House by the very distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]. I am, however, very pleased that the law with reference to the illegal sale and transfer of our American Navy vessels to foreign belligerents has been read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. I sincerely hope that a grand jury in the District of Columbia will take cognizance of the violations of these laws by those who would sabotage the defense of our country.

Our former Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, who is also Secretary of the Treasury, who approved of the sale and transfer and was responsible for the sale and transfer of the Navy's new mosquito boats to the British apparently did not know about or wilifully ignored the laws mentioned by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The Washington Post of June 19, 1940, quotes another New Deal Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Louis Compton, as stating that the New Deal Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, was the man behind the transfer, the illegal sale and transfer, of the Navy's new mosquito boats to the British Government. Now, in view of this willful violation of the law and sabotage of our country's national defense, I ask our New Deal President to practice what he preached about driving the money changers from the temple of the Government. We should call for the immediate resignation of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, who also appears to have been Acting Secretary of the Navy as well.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States should call for the immediate resignation of all Government officials who took part in the "fifth column" activity to place ships of our Navy in the hands of a foreign belligerent nation in violation of the laws of our land. Our New Deal President should demand that his Attorney General, Mr. Jackson, immediately place the case of these "fifth column" members before a grand jury. Let us have more action and less talk, Mr. President. As the late President Theodore Roosevelt said: "Speak softly but carry a big stick."

Mr. Speaker, the June 19, 1940, issue of the Washington Post states:

NAVY'S NEW MOSQUITO BOATS TO BE TRANSFERRED TO BRITISH

The Government is in process of releasing to the British 20 high-speed vessels now under construction on order for the United States Navy, it was learned yesterday.

This information was elicited from Louis Compton, Acting Secretary of the Navy, by members of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee in a stormy executive session of the committee last Friday.

Compton, when asked by what right this was done, under what law, and by whose instruction, took most of the responsibility himself, although saying that the transfer had been favored by Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury. He denied that President Roosevelt had been consulted.

This paper also states:

Apparently taking into consideration that point, Compton estimated that the release of the unfinished boats for delivery to the British would not delay the delivery of the 24 originally ordered by the United States Navy by more than 6 months.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that our Navy is now inadequate and the taxpayers are being called upon for billions of dollars to increase it, the illegal sale of 20 of our warships to the British is indefensible. This is particularly so in view of world conditions and the fact that these ships cannot be replaced within 6 months.

Mr. Speaker, I note pseudo-Republicans have now been appointed to the positions of Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy by our New Deal President. They will no doubt take orders from Mr. Morgenthau. The American people are indebted to Mr. Woodring for refusing to follow the directions of international bankers and foreign war interventionists and strip our own national defense and send its equipment abroad to foreign belligerent nations.

Mr. Speaker, our New Deal President said that "we cannot have our cake and eat it, too." This we were told by the President when he appeared before Congress to deliver a national-defense message. The President said: "You cannot have your cake and eat it, too." Our New Deal President and his New Deal Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, who up to a few days ago was the Acting Secretary of the Navy, apparently believe that we can have an adequate national defense, and also sell and send its implements 3,000 miles across the sea to foreign belligerent nations.

Mr. Speaker, the American people now know what is going on. With reference to national defense and peace the President's position reminds us of Isaac of old, who said: "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." The American people now realize that the New Deal is moving rapidly toward war, particularly since the President announced his universal compulsory military training program under which American boys and girls are to be regimented and put into New Deal concentration camps to goose step under the direction of Sidney Hillman, the notorious un-American, anti-Christian Communist, a main cog of the New Deal political machine. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 523, providing for the consideration of the bill just passed will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, H. R. 6572, to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, and I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am sorry I must object. I understand the gentleman has a rule for the consideration of this bill. There are quite a number of Members who want to speak on this bill, therefore I am obliged to object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman will give us time, if there are any objections which have been previously urged, they have been removed from the bill. I may say that we have taken out all provisions that would insure foreign ships. We have also met the wishes of the two great labor organizations, the American Federation of Labor and the National Maritime Union. I sat down with them yesterday around the table after we held a committee meeting and we agreed upon amendments that would meet their wishes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. You have taken out the amendment I objected to which would insure foreign vessels?

Mr. BLAND. That is an amendment to the bill. We do not insure foreign vessels under this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I objected very strongly to that.

Mr. BLAND. We do not insure anything but American vessels and cargoes in American vessels, with provision for reinsurance.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not like that provision himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

AMENDMENT TO MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 522 and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] withhold that for a minute?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Surely.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the calling up of House Resolution 522 at this time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE WASHINGTON NATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, S. 3927, to provide for the administration of the Washington National Airport, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that was on the calendar the other day and objected to. I am advised that those Members who objected have withdrawn their objections.

The principal object of the bill is to authorize the Administrator in the Civil Aeronautics Authority to make leases for the Washington Airport. The airport is expected to be opened in November and it is necessary to have this authority for leasing before it is opened.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act—

(a) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

(b) "Airport" means the Washington National Airport, which shall consist of, and include, the tract of land, together with all structures, improvements, and other facilities located thereon, lying partly in the District of Columbia and partly in the State of Virginia, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point of beginning, said point being the intersection of the property line of property owned by the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad Company, and dredging base line at station 0+18.99 referenced south 6,808.21, west 9,078.82, running in a southeasterly direction on a bearing of south 22°51'18" east a distance of 6,270.91 feet, more or less, to station 62+89.90 of said dredging base line. SEC. 3. The Administrator is empowered to lease, upon such terms as he may deem proper, space or property within or upon the airport for purposes essential or appropriate to the operation of the airport.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9899) extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority over certain air-mail services, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LEA. The practical purpose of this bill is to clarify the existing law. The Civil Aeronautics Act gives the Civil Aeronautics Authority authority to grant certificates of convenience and necessity for air transportation. A question arose as to whether or not the pick-up service by airplane is air transportation within the meaning of the Civil Aeronautics Act. The attorney's of the different departments disagreed about the question, so this is to clarify the situation so as to give unquestioned authority to the Civil Aeronautics Authority to grant certificates of convenience and necessity for the pick-up service.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does this have a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. LEA. It has a unanimous report by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (1) of section 405 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal in whole or in part the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for experimental air-mail service, to further develop safety, efficiency, economy, and for other purposes', approved April 15, 1938. The transportation of mail under contracts entered into under such section shall not, except for sections 401 (1) and 416 (b), be deemed to be 'air transportation' as used in this act, and the rates of compensation for such transportation of mail shall not be fixed under such act."

SEC. 2. Sections 1 and 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for experimental air-mail service, to further develop safety, efficiency, economy, and for other purposes", approved April 15, 1938, are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out "such" and insert "this."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALIENS ADMITTED TO UNITED STATES AS OFFICIALS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10112) to amend the Immigration Act of 1924 to require aliens admitted into the United States as officials of foreign governments either to maintain their status or to depart from the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of State.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, may the bill be reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first subdivision of section 3 of the Immigration Act approved May 26, 1924 (43 Stat. 153; U. S. C. Annotated, title 8, sec. 203), is hereby amended to read as follows: "(1) an accredited official of a foreign government recognized by the Government of the United States, his family, attendants, servants, and employees."

SEC. 2. That the first parenthetical clause in section 15 of the Immigration Act approved May 26, 1924 (U. S. C. Annotated, title 8, sec. 215), which reads "(except a Government official and his family)", is hereby repealed, and section 15 is hereby amended to read as follows: "The admission to the United States of an alien excepted from the class of immigrants by clause (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), or (6) of section 3, or declared to be a nonquota immigrant by subdivision (e) of section 4, shall be for such time and under such conditions as may be by regulations prescribed (including, when deemed necessary for the classes mentioned in clause (2), (3), (4), or (6) of section 3 and subdivision (e) of section 4, the giving of bond with sufficient surety, in such sum and containing such conditions as may be by regulations prescribed) to insure that, at the expiration of such time or upon failure to maintain the status under which admitted, he will depart from the United States: Provided, That no alien who has been, or who may hereafter be, admitted into the United States under clause (1) of section 3, as an official of a foreign government, or as a member of the family of such official, shall be required to depart from the United States without the approval of the Secretary of State."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may we have this bill explained? It is a long bill and it mentions various sections of the law. I should like to know what it accomplishes.

Mr. LESINSKI. The purpose of the bill is to require aliens who are admitted to the United States as officials of foreign governments to maintain their status or depart from the United States. That is all there is to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BELA KARLOVITZ

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of Bela Karlovitz.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. This gentleman is an inventor who was brought into this country by the Westinghouse Co. from Hungary. There is no fraud involved in the case. He is here on a regular visa, but his time is expiring. This gentleman is working on an invention to conserve fuel. The report reads as follows:

This alien is a native and citizen of Hungary and he has a wife and three children residing in that country. He is an electrical engineer and is working on the development of an invention for the generation of power. A large electrical manufacting company, having received information with reference to his work, sent a representative to Budapest, Hungary, and purchased from this alien the rights to the patent when it is perfected. They persuaded this alien to come to the United States and to their plant for the purpose of completing his invention. This company has already expended in the neighborhood of $50,000 in experiments and there was testimony to the effect that they are quite certain that this invention will prove successful.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws Bela Karlovitz, of Wilkinsburg, Pa., a research engineer temporarily in the United States as a visitor, shall be considered to have been lawfully admitted, at New York, N. Y., on September 1, 1938, to the United States for permanent residence.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, at the end of the bill add a new paragraph, as follows:

"Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the Hungarian quota for the first year that the said Hungarian quota is available."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN RED CROSS VESSELS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279) to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the joint resolution?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is an amendment of the Neutrality Act which permits Red Cross vessels to go into certain areas. I can explain the resolution better by reading what Secretary Hull says about it in this letter:

The Red Cross has dispatched to Europe the ship McKeesport, which it chartered for the purpose of carrying Red Cross supplies to France. The supplies were to be landed in Bordeaux. Under the neutrality law it was necessary to obtain safe conduct from the belligerent governments. This safe conduct was not forthcoming from all the necessary governments, and consequently the vessel was dispatched to Bilbao, Spain, with the expectation that its cargo might be landed there and transported into France. There seem to be pratical difficulties as far as that procedure is concerned, and the question now arises as to whether the vessel ought not be diverted from its course to one of the belligerent ports where the need is paramount.

This raises the question of the general applicability of the neutrality law to Red Cross shipments and has put the matter in the forefront of the Department's thought. After consultation with Mr. Norman Davis, of the Red Cross, we have come to the conclusion that it would be infinitely better if the Neutrality Act were amended to permit Red Cross ships on voyages of mercy to proceed simply after notification to belligerents that the specific vessel will go to a named port, it now being demonstrated that it is impracticable to operate under the present provisions of the law. Consequently we have thought that you might be willing to introduce a bill amending the Neutrality Act to that extent. A draft is enclosed for your consideration. If you feel that you can support this measure, I should be very glad if you would introduce it and expedite its passage to whatever extent possible, because it seems desirable in view of the unsettled situation in Europe to divert the McKeesport, which is now at sea, from its present run, to Bordeaux or some other belligerent port as conditions render advisable or expedient and where there is very great need for the cargo.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This joint resolution is applicable only to Red Cross vessels?

Mr. BLOOM. It is applicable only to Red Cross vessels, under charter or otherwise, and gives the Red Cross an opportunity to transport personnel and supplies for the relief of human suffering to Europe.

This joint resolution was considered in the Senate yesterday, and an amendment was added to clarify the situation and make it absolutely positive that such shipments would in no way involve this country. The joint resolution, containing this amendment, was considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs this morning and reported unanimously. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That where permission has not been given by the blockading power, no American Red Cross vessel shall enter a port where a blockade by aircraft, surface vessel, or submarine is being attempted through the destruction of vessels, or into a port of any country where such blockade of the whole country is being so attempted: Provided further, That such American Red Cross vessel shall be on a mission of mercy only and carrying only Red Cross materials and personnel.

This is the amendment adopted yesterday in the Senate, in addition to a small amendment adopted the other day, and it has the unanimous approval of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman feels this would not involve us in war in any way because the amendment safeguards the bill. It is a very very humane movement.

Mr. BLOOM. It is a humane provision that will permit the Red Cross vessels to go on their missions of mercy.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am in entire sympathy with the objective of the bill, but what I am concerned about is this: Are we going to have naval escorts for these ships?

Mr. BLOOM. There will be no escorts. They will not be convoyed, and they will not be escorted, and they have no right to go anywhere where there is even any kind of blockade attempted—not only a blockade but an attempted blockade.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And that would include an aerial blockade as well?

Mr. BLOOM. An aerial blockade or a submarine blockade or any other kind of blockade.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We understand that none of our American ships will act as an escort.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will it be possible for the Red Cross ships covered by this bill to be escorted as part of a convoy of another belligerent nation?

Mr. BLOOM. No; that is absolutely forbidden.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I would like to inquire if arrangements have been made with the State Department to notify the several combatants of the progress of the ship and the route of the ship?

Mr. BLOOM. Not only that, but the Red Cross is in direct communication with all the countries so as to be sure about it.

Mr. CULKIN. I am talking about the State Department.

Mr. BLOOM. I just read the letter of the State Department which covers that point very clearly.

Mr. CULKIN. The route will not be changed as it was in another instance; that is, in the case of the Washington?

Mr. BLOOM. If the ship should leave an American port and was on its way over there and it should then be found there was any kind of blockade at that point, the ship would be notified immediately and they would have to change their course.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman misses my point. I am wondering if the State Department is going to keep in touch with the governments of the several combatants as to the route or any change of route.

Mr. BLOOM. I do not know about the State Department.

Mr. CULKIN. I think that is very important.

Mr. BLOOM. May I answer the gentleman by stating that the proper departments of the Government will be in communication. If it is the State Department——

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman is not going to have the Labor Department, under Miss Perkins, communicate with Germany or England?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests" be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The provisions of section 2 (a) shall not prohibit the transportation by vessels, unarmed and not under convoy, under charter or other direction and control of the American Red Cross of officers and American Red Cross personnel, medical personnel, and medical supplies, food, and clothing, for the relief of human suffering: Provided, That where permission has not been given by the blockading power, no American Red Cross vessel shall enter a port where a blockade by aircraft, surface vessel, or submarine is being attempted through the destruction of vessels, or into a port of any country where such blockade of the whole country is being so attempted: Provided further, That such American Red Cross vessel shall be on a mission of mercy only and carrying only Red Cross materials and personnel."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I objected, or rather held up consideration of this bill a few days ago, because I thought there should be an amendment of this kind. This is a Senate amendment and evidently they thought likewise.

I want the House to realize that this is an amendment to the Neutrality Act and I think a very proper one, because I believe all the American people want our Red Cross ships to go on errands of mercy and on humanitarian errands to the other side. It has been the custom in the past to get safe conducts from the belligerent nations. There are so many belligerent nations, it is very difficult to get safe conducts from them all and therefore it was proposed in the original bill to send these ships over without such safe conducts. I thought it was a very dangerous procedure because these Red Cross ships might be torpedoed in the night or in a fog by being mistaken for other vessels and in this way we might become involved in war.

The amendment which the Senate has adopted and which the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], has just offered here is very drastic. It may in some respects go too far, if that is possible, because it states that when a blockade is attempted of any country the Red Cross vessels cannot go to that country. Certainly every Member of this House knows that within 48 hours, as soon as peace terms are arranged between Germany and France, Germany will proclaim a blockade of England, or attempt to proclaim a blockade of England. This bill contains words "attempted blockade," so that a Red Cross vessel could not go to England without getting safe conduct from Germany. This is a very, very drastic amendment. I had proposed an amendment that the Red Cross ships should go at their own risk, which is more flexible, but would also keep us from being involved in war.

In view of this amendment, which goes even further than that, I am willing to accept it and support it, but I think the House ought to know all the facts, first, that this is an amendment to the Neutrality Act, and that it is a proper amendment, that the bill originally came in without any of those safeguards, and that is why we held it up, and the Senate amended it by the amendment referred to.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Who is to determine whether a blockade exists? Our State Department?

Mr. FISH. No; the wording of the bill is comprehensive. It says even when a blockade is attempted—not to one port, but it goes even further and says when a blockade is attempted of a whole country.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. I forgot to mention this—that it is in the resolution that the boat must be unarmed and not under convoy.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman mentioned that.

Mr. BLOOM. I did not say unarmed.

Mr. FISH. They must be unarmed, and not under convoy; and I say to my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] that they must radio all belligerent governments exactly where they are during practically every hour of the day, otherwise they would be guilty of criminal negligence, and during the night they will have an American flag and a Red Cross flag with a spotlight. There will be no risk taken as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MILLER. Did the gentleman figure it would be safer to put in the bill the language that the ships must travel at their own risk?

Mr. FISH. I offered that amendment myself, that American Red Cross ships should make the trip at their own risk. I thought that would be a good amendment, but this is more drastic as it goes much further, and they will not even be permitted to go to those nations if there is an attempted blockade. I think my amendment, perhaps, would be more sensible and more flexible, that they should make the trip at their own risk. That would not involve us in war. This amendment is much more drastic. Mine would have been more flexible. I am sorry that I was not in the committee at the time, but someone offered the amendment for me and the committee decided on the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTINENTAL AEROSURVEYS CORPORATION

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10087) for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion by the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation, 90 Broad Street, New York City, N. Y., of its contract with the Department of Agriculture, dated June 29, 1938, for the furnishing by such corporation to such Department of aerial photographs of lands within certain counties in northwestern Pennsylvania, is hereby extended to and including November 15, 1940. Such contract expires by its terms on June 30, 1940, performance by the corporation under it has been virtually completed, and irreparable loss will result both to the corporation and the Department of Agriculture unless the time for its completion is extended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is merely extending the time for the completion of the work?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And there is no additional expense involved?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 522, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Resolution 522

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6572, a bill to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine-risk reinsurance, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing unusual about this rule. It is an open rule. It is for the consideration of H. R. 6572, to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine reinsurance, and for other purposes. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is well expressed in the report in these words:

The purpose of the legislation is to make sure that American water-borne commerce will be kept moving. The inability—which may arise overnight—to secure from the usual sources the necessary protection of insurance against marine perils and marine war risks for American ships and their cargoes and the crews thereon would seriously jeopardize that commerce. Under existing war conditions, such inability may arise on short notice without adequate opportunity for necessary readjustments because the American marine insurance market normally relies on support from the world insurance market. Under present international conditions it is doubtful whether any private national insurance market has sufficient capacity to protect the high values which may be exposed concurrently to war perils. While the American insurance market has been strengthened and increased since the World War and particularly since the outbreak of the present European war, the fact still obtains that the general or world insurance market may at any time under present conditions become inadequate or undesirable as a support for the American market, and then American shipping would lose the support of that market which has heretofore carried approximately one-half of the insurance necessary for American vessels and their cargoes. In fact, the American insurance market has been reinsuring in the world market part of the risks assumed by it. Under the circumstances, American commerce may be deprived overnight of part of the insurance protection needed to keep American commerce moving.

I wish to say to the House that marine insurance and war-risk insurance is the lifeblood of water transportation. When it stops, water-borne commerce will not move. When hearings were had on the original bill by the committee there was considerable opposition in which I shared. I felt that we should not insure foreign vessels and cargoes on foreign vessels. If you will refer to the bill you will find that every provision that was contained in the original bill providing for insurance of foreign vessels and cargoes in foreign vessels has been stricken from the bill. Those are the amendments that are contained in the original bill as it was reported to the House. I call attention to these words stricken from the bill:

Masters, officers, and crews of foreign vessels referred to in subsection (c) hereof against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government, except that the nation of the vessel or of the United States, following capture.

And so forth. I call attention to the following words:

Vessels of any foreign country not an enemy of the United States engaged in the foreign or domestic trade of the United States.

In the original bill foreign vessels and cargoes thereon would have been covered by insurance, but those features are now stricken from this bill. The bill we bring to you contains carefully drawn amendments expressly excluding all insurance of foreign vessels and cargoes in foreign vessels.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Is it not a fact that a number of representatives of private insurance businesses appeared before the committee and approved of the enactment of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; that is the fact.

Now, something was said about American insurance. This bill will help to build up American insurance. After we built up our merchant marine in 1916, and when we considered the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, there were on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries two members who are now here, the Speaker of the House and the gentleman from New York, Dr. CROWTHER. There was a careful study made then. We did not have much insurance in this country but with the building up of the American merchant marine there has been built up also marine insurance in this country, and those companies are taking a large part of the insurance now. Those companies have not reached the point where they can take all of the insurance, and, as a result, large coverages of marine insurance are reinsured in the markets of the world. Let the world market fail, and these companies have nowhere to go. The Government then steps in. If the competition that heretofore existed is destroyed, and the rates of an insurance company advance so that adequate insurance is not provided at reasonable rates, then the Government is able to take care of that situation and insure direct.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CROWE. Is it not a fact that there is need for this insurance, and the proof of that is that part of the insurance has been reinsured or carried in other markets, London and elsewhere, and now there is a possibility that that insurance may not be available?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and this is the finest opportunity to get the business for America that I have ever known, because it is provided that only in event it is necessary to do so does the Government come in and insure these risks. This does help to build up marine insurance by private companies.

Let me tell you this: When we had the hearings before our committee, in May 1939, there did not exist adequate protection in the American market for insurance on the seamen—casualty insurance—but it developed at the hearing that we held yesterday that that market has been materially increased since our hearings in May of last year. There is being made an effort to build up the insurance market in the United States. Please remember that Great Britain has been a maritime nation for years and these other nations of the world as well for years—yea, for centuries—and they have gradually gotten the marine-insurance business. Now we are getting it.

It has been shown in the past that one of the most important factors in practicing discriminations against American transportation has been through marine insurance. It was so shown by a study that was made in 1920. We have found that it was necessary to get marine insurance here. It has been pretty well covered, but all has not been covered, and if the markets in which we reinsure should fail, our commerce may stop; surely we do not care to have our steamers lying at the docks, to have our cargoes upon the wharves and to be unable to send our goods upon the high seas, not to combat zones but to other areas simply because we cannot insure the hulls and the cargoes and the lives of the officers and crews on the ships.

Again I say marine insurance is the lifeblood of water-borne transportation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any statement that he can give from an insurance company regarding this sort of insurance—this Government marine insurance?

Mr. BLAND. No. I have no statement from them. They have not opposed it.

They have all been in favor of it. They want us to reinsure, to be prepared to take care of this situation; and we want them to build up their business. The more they can build it up the better we shall like it. This bill will help private business.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad the gentleman took out the provision with reference to insuring foreign vessels, whether belligerents or not.

Mr. BLAND. That is absolutely out. That was in the original bill, but it has been stricken out to meet objections. I am not so sure that possibly later, if we should not have the ships to carry our cargoes, but that we may need to do that. However, this bill will not permit it, and if that condition arises, we shall have to come back here.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I am not as well informed on this bill as I should be, but I have had inquiries from Hartford insurance companies. Is this bill similar to S. 2566?

Mr. BLAND. I think it is, but I am not sure about the number.

Mr. MILLER. The question that has been asked me and which seems to be disturbing some people is the condition under which the Commission will take insurance. Under the terms of the bill the corporation or commission will take insurance only where it cannot be obtained at reasonable rates.

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

Mr. MILLER. The question that has been asked is, Who will determine the reasonableness of the rates?

Mr. BLAND. The Maritime Commission. The Commission determines that from the rates that are charged. There are no fixed rates that are controlled by the Commission or anything of that kind. London and the world markets have been the competitors. If those competitors are lost there may be a possibility that someone else would have to provide the reinsurance. It is the desire of the human heart, you know, to make money.

Mr. MILLER. I want to say that the letters I received from both these marine-insurance companies expressed confidence in the chairman of the committee who is now presenting this bill, and their question was for information and not in criticism. They indicated a desire to cooperate with the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. I thank the gentleman. That was the only reason for putting the language in there—to provide against the possible removal of competitors that might lead to insurance rates going too high.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. When we considered this bill in committee we assumed that the Neutrality Act of 1939 would remain on the books. Since then articles have appeared in the papers which state that perhaps the Neutrality Act might be suspended, and very recently we heard a statement made by the gentleman who has just been nominated to be Secretary of the Navy to the effect that he would advocate the shipment of munitions and other contraband of war to the Allies in their own ships if they had them available, or in American ships if they were not available even if he perhaps had to send a naval convoy with them. Now, I ask the gentleman, Does he not think it would be worth while to cover that eventuality in this bill? Or does the gentleman think we should insure those cargoes if they went deliberately into the danger zone?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think we should extend it to them. I do not think this bill ought to deal with insurance of that kind.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Transportation of contraband by water should be without insurance if neutrality is suspended.

Mr. BLAND. That is probably true, but that question has never risen.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Would the gentleman accept such an amendment?

Mr. BLAND. I do not want to delay the bill. I would have to see the amendment first.

Mr. Speaker, may I explain a few other amendments that have been prepared? When the first section of the bill is read I am going to offer an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, to make it a clean bill. I am going to tell you what amendments there are here. I want you to listen to this, because the only change that has been made since the bill was reported arises from the fact that when the bill was considered by the committee, for some reason the labor organizations did not appear either for or against it. In the bill as originally prepared is a provision that the maximum insurance for the death of a seaman would be $5,000 and the minimum $2,000, with certain percentages. Last Sunday I saw that the labor organizations had taken exception to that and said they wanted to come down and present their objections. I told them I would call the committee together and let them present their objections. They appeared, and the committee and I felt that there was some merit in the objections they presented. After the hearings yesterday morning the members of the committee asked us to sit around the table and see if we could not work out amendments that would be agreeable. They asked us to cut out any direct insurance, just to reinsure the usual rates. We found out that the insurance companies had materially increased their business in the United States on that kind of insurance, so we told them we would do that, that we would cut out direct insurance, but still we felt that there might not be sufficient business available in the United States to provide ample coverage. So we added this amendment, which appears in the clean draft. We first cut out any direct insurance and then to protect against any eventuality whereby there might be no opportunity to insure these seamen, the masters, and the crews, we put a new section 224 in, and this meets with their approval.

The new section 224 reads as follows:

> Whenever the Commission determines that insurance for masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture, arising from risks of war, cannot, with the aid of reinsurance provided for under this subtitle, be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, the Commission is authorized to provide such insurance on a basis corresponding to the war-risk insurance protection supplied, prior to such determination, for such personnel for companies authorized to do business in a State of the United States.

Mr. Standard, of the National Maritime Union, the C. I. O. members, the marine engineers, Mr. Scharenberg, representing the American Federation of Labor, all accepted this as satisfactory.

Then they had another fear. They were afraid that something in this bill might be designed to take away from them some of their rights under other laws of the United States. I do not think so. I could not see how it would. But if it did not and it was intended not to do so, I could not see how it would do any harm to say expressly that which we meant. So we added the following section:

> Nothing in this subtitle shall be deemed to affect the rights of seamen under any provision of existing law.

Under the circumstances I feel that with the one amendment I am going to offer which only makes these changes, that we have met all of the objections that have been interposed by Members of the House and by labor organizations. Though they came at the last minute we were willing to sit down with them around a table and they showed a splendid spirit in trying to reach an agreement.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the contemplation of the committee that the rates set up under this bill will at the outset be lower than the prevailing rates? The domestic and foreign rates run just about the same.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman mean insurance rates?

Mr. MILLER. Insurance rates.

Mr. BLAND. That is not contemplated. It is desired to have a stopgap there in the event we cannot move the commerce. I have not heard any suggestion up to the present time that there are unreasonable rates.

Mr. MILLER. This is to deal with an emergency. It is not contemplated to try to get any marine business today?

Mr. BLAND. That is correct. It is purely a stopgap.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that covers my explanation of the bill and this is also intended to cover my explanation if the rule is adopted.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to commend the members of the committee for their diligence, their intelligence, their sound common sense, and their careful action in the interest of the American people in rewriting this bill, because when it came to the committee from the administration the bill was a vicious proposal and one that would have involved us in war. It provided originally for the insurance of foreign vessels and for war material on foreign vessels. Many of those ships have already been sunk. We would have had an interest in the ships on account of having insured them and an interest in the war material. We would have been a party to the loss. But the committee carrying out the general good sense of the Congress, both on the Republican and Democratic side, has rendered a service to the country by repudiating this vicious proposal that came from some of the crackpots and brain trusters of the administration who would be only too glad to have us intervene and become involved in the present war overseas.

This is a very important bill and that is the reason I asked for consideration of it under a rule. There may be some amendments offered. We want to expedite debate. It is an American bill today. Originally it was a foreign bill. Now it is aimed to protect American interests. The private insurance companies are for the bill, I am informed. It makes it possible to cover the marine insurance in the American market. Hitherto we have been dependent for our marine insurance very largely on Lloyds in London, England. This provides the mechanism so that we can get adequate marine insurance in America for American vessels; therefore it is a sound American proposition instead of being a foreign proposal which it was originally and one that would have led us to war. It is now a measure for peace and Americanism.

Mr. Speaker, I believe an amendment will be offered to make sure that if the Neutrality Act is repealed or any part of it, and I do not believe it will be, it will not again provide for insurance on foreign vessels and war materials. If this bill had gone through in its original form we would have been involved in all kinds of difficulties by this time. I do not believe it would have carried insurance into foreign lands, but I see in the newspaper today that 400 brand new American airplanes were seized in France by the German armed forces. Whether we would have had insurance on those airplanes or not under the original bill I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox, the proposed new members of the Cabinet, have given voice to certain interventionist views recently. Mr. Stimson, who is about to be made Secretary of War, says that we should permit American vessels, in fact we should use all American vessels, to carry contraband to the belligerents. If this bill had come here in its original form it would be in accordance with that gentleman's views today. This former Republican, this interventionist, and internationalist, who has left our ranks, and you are welcome to him as you are welcome to all our interventionists. They do not belong to our party, but to the Democratic Party under President Roosevelt, which is now the war party in the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. I heard a statement this morning, I may say to the gentleman from New York, that Colonel Knox's speeches in 1936 cost the Republican Party 4,000,000 votes. I wonder if the gentleman would comment on that.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman underestimates it. I think that if these two distinguished and able gentlemen, Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson, internationalists and interventionists—and they are entitled to their views—who have just gone over to the party where they belong, had stayed in the Republican Party and we had followed their advice and written an internationalist and interventionist plank for our foreign policy, the Republicans would have had even less votes than in 1936. I do not believe the Republican Party would even carry Maine and Vermont. It is a godsend to the Republican Party that they have gone over where they belong, which assures our having an antiwar platform.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CLARK. I just want to inquire if the gentleman is still speaking on the rule.

Mr. FISH. I will come back to that rule in due course.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The Republican party has not lost anything because these two pseudo Republicans, these foreign-war interventionists have enlisted in the New Deal forces. They had already strayed in New Deal pastures, and their appointment merely gives the New Deal an absolute title to them, and they will no longer be able to fool Republicans who believe in preserving our American constitutional democracy and are opposed to New Deal-Soviet autocracy.

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman that, in my humble opinion, I believe it is the most fortunate thing and the best thing that could happen to the Republican Party that these internationalist and interventionist termites, able and distinguished men though they be, have left our party. I believe now that we will be able to elect a Republican President this fall on an antiwar platform.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. They have now deserted our party and have joined the hosts of third "term-ites," who are moving forward into the new European war under the smoke screen which covers the Roosevelt third-term "blitzkrieg."

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman mean the war party?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. The New Deal is the war party. They have now shown their hand.

Mr. FISH. We should take that issue right to the people on the basis of "'peace or war, which will you have?"

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Do I correctly understand the gentleman to say that the private insurance companies are satisfied with this bill?

Mr. FISH. Do not take my word for that, but I was told by a member of the committee that the private insurance companies are satisfied with it. It extends our American market to cover the kind of insurance we hitherto could not obtain in this country and had to go to Lloyds for. I think that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my distinguished friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am just wondering, inasmuch as the gentleman is now speaking of riddances from the Republican Party, if he feels much elated over the prospect of getting the platform which John L. Lewis is going to write for the gentleman's party.

Mr. FISH. I am talking not about the labor planks, I am talking about the program of peace or war. I want that issue taken to the American public, that is all. I would even like to have it decided in the Democratic State of Oklahoma, and I know what the result would be.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. BENDER rose.

Mr. FISH. I would rather not have too much politics. I would rather talk about the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a statement on the question asked by the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. With reference to the endorsement which has been given this legislation by representatives of private insurance interests, I would call the attention of the gentleman to the hearings on this bill as of last year, which carry a statement by Hendon Chubb, of the firm of Chubb & Son, of New York City, who endorses the bill.

Mr. FISH. That is one of the best firms in the country.

Mr. OLIVER. The hearings also contain the statement of William R. Hedge, president of the Boston Insurance Co., of Boston, Mass., a large underwriter of marine risks, who also endorses the bill. Other individuals representing private interests also appeared before the committee and made a similar endorsement.

Mr. FISH. I am very glad the gentleman has made that statement. This is an important measure. It is a good bill, and an American bill. It started out to be a vicious proposal, a foreign and an un-American bill.

I want to be sure that it has all the safeguards that will protect us from these former Republicans and interventionists who are about to go into the Cabinet, and who are not satisfied with turning over our American Merchant Marine to be used to carry contraband to the belligerent nations but even want to turn our Navy and our navy yards over to be used by belligerent nations. I think you Democrats had better be watchful of some of these former Republicans who are now in your ranks as they are the most ardent interventionists in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the committee for reporting this bill. It will be the beginning of a service we have needed in this country for many years. No one who has read the story, Lloyds of London, or has visited that institution in London can help but appreciate that marine insurance has been inseparable from commerce since the beginning of 1687. There is more romance and background to this form of insurance, dating back to 1687, than any other known type of insurance. With the organization of Lloyds in Lloyds Coffee House began the extension of the British merchant marine, circumventing the seven seas. Even to the present day the focal point of Lloyds is the "room," preserving in a remarkable degree the old traditions brought into conformity with modern requirements.

In the middle of the "room" is the world-famous rostrum, the successor of the old pulpit from which the coffee-house waiter used to read out the news of the day to the clients, and from which, subsequently, announcements of ships overdue or of sea disasters have been given out. Here is hung the world-renowned "Lutine Bell" which is sounded when one of these unhappy notices is made. The tolling of the bell, while bearing news of loss of vessel and/or cargo, also meant that any financial loss to ship or cargo would be paid by the underwriters at Lloyds, and as well—the successful expansion of the British merchant marine. Everything on a vessel may be covered. All sorts of hazards are underwritten. We know that in wartime the rates go skyrocketing because of the extra hazard involved.

Throughout the years the principal market for marine insurance has been in London and Japan. Other countries have groups but in those countries were located the two principal markets. It was rather interesting a short time ago, when Japan and England seemd to be at odds politically they were engaged in reinsuring each other's marine risks. The business interests of these countries had to set up a new insurance program to meet the situation. In our country vessels are worth millions of dollars, and until a few years ago it was practically impossible for the American underwriters to assume risks of such proportion. The laws of the various States have been amended so that more capital is now available in the marine market and as a result, we now operate a marine insurance pool in this country similar to the foreign pool known as Lloyd's of London. Our shipowners found it almost impossible to obtain a sufficient amount of coverage in the domestic market and were therefore compelled to use foreign markets. With present conditions, that foreign market will not be available. A great many of our American liners are now carrying their insurance with Lloyd's because of lower rates and those lower rates were possible by reason of taxation and other charges with which we are all familiar.

I believe that our Government, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], will offer substantial encouragement to our marine companies if this bill is passed. Our companies have long needed the encouragement and moral support that this bill will provide, because it will eliminate any possibility of an inadequate marine-insurance market.

For years Italy has required its shipowners to procure their insurance in the Italian market which is subsidized by the Government. Considerable of our premiums have been sent abroad, and this bill will keep a market open, stabilize rates, and retain the funds in the United States.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I simply wish to observe that I think the gentleman is making a very valuable contribution here, and it is especially valuable because he is one of the real intelligentsia and one of the seagoing figures in the insurance world.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I thank the gentleman for his compliment.

I believe we should adopt this rule and vote for the bill because, in my opinion, based on an experience in the insurance business of more than 25 years, this bill will provide a much-needed safeguard for shipowners and operators flying the American flag.

If we need any further reason for the passage of this bill we can find it in the following letter from President Roosevelt to the President of the Senate:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 20, 1940.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: There is a bill, S. 2566, now pending before the Committee of Commerce of the Senate, which I consider to be of such importance to the American merchant marine and to the national defense that its enactment at this session of Congress is highly desirable in the national public interest. An identical bill, H. R. 6572, is pending on the Union Calendar of the House of Representatives.

The bill (S. 2566) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, would make emergency provision for Government insurance against marine and marine war risks for American vessels, cargoes thereon, and crews thereof, when insurance protection cannot be supplied in the American insurance market on a basis adequate for the needs of such shipping. Marine insurance is an essential factor in our water-borne commerce. Under existing conditions such commerce may suddenly, by reason of the unavailability or undesirability of the world insurance market now resorted to, be unable to procure such protection on reasonable terms. The Government therefore must be in a position to supply the insurance protection necessary to keep American water-borne commerce moving in any such emergencies. I emphasize the need for prompt enactment of this legislation because the need therefor may become acute at any time, particularly in the cases of certain American vessels of such high value that the American insurance market is inadequate to cover the risks involved.

I believe you will agree with me that the prompt consideration and enactment of this measure is essential to the maintenance of our domestic and foreign commerce, and to our national economy. I will appreciate whatever steps you may deem it advisable to take in order to expedite the consideration of this measure by the Senate.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, you give either a girl or a dog—and I do not mean to put them on the same intellectual plane—but give either one of them a bad name, and it is very difficult for them to live it down.

This bill, as has already been suggested here, had some malformations at birth. Those have already been referred to by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. It purported to cover foreign ships and foreign sailors. May I say to the House that very early in the consideration of the bill little birds began to whisper to the members of the committee on this side of the aisle that there were some phases of this bill that were mistaken, unfortunate, and ill-timed. It was claimed that they had in themselves the seeds of intervention with resulting war. May I emphasize the fact that all those provisions over which there was so much stir and ado in the beginning have all been eliminated. Today, this bill is naked of any provision which would give comfort to any interventionist. It would not give comfort in any respect even to the new Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, or the new Secretary of the Navy, Colonel Knox, both of whom are ardent interventionists. Nor is there anything in this bill that should give pause to any nationalist. Some people call them isolationists, but I am pleased to call them nationalists.

This bill is a sound, rational bill, rational in every respect. It simply enables the American marine to keep on the sea. By reason of the tremendous overhead and overcharge or insurance charges incident to transportation on the sea in these troubled days, this type of insurance is necessary.

May I say also to certain gentlemen who were apprehensive about its effect on the Treasury, that in the World War the operation of this insurance after the corporation or the division was wound up, turned into the Treasury in good, round, American dollars, $17,500,000. I think it was the only branch of Government that actually paid a profit. This bill is necessary to implement our merchant marine.

As the distinguished chairman said, it is actually the lifeblood of our commerce. The passage of this bill is test of our ability to keep our ships on the sea. The committee is unanimously for it and I trust the House will pass it by a voice vote. The committee has gone over it with a fine-tooth comb. The committee heard these whisperings that came to us. We considered them, and as the bill is written, with the amendment that will be offered by the chairman, it will be a constructive law, with no phase of intervention or anything that will in any way limit or qualify the existing Neutrality Act.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman not agree that we ought to protect ourselves against the possible suspension of the Neutrality Act? I propose to offer an amendment when in Committee of the Whole to protect us against possible suspension of the Neutrality Act so that we will not insure cargoes of vessels that carry contraband.

Mr. CULKIN. I am not going to oppose that amendment. But there may be some ministerial phases of this insurance that might be complicated.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I feel certain that there would not be.

Mr. CULKIN. I mean phases of administration.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I am sure there would not.

Mr. CULKIN. I will be glad to support the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill was carefully considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Its purpose may be defined by two brief sections:

SEC. 221. (a) For the purpose of protecting the water-borne commerce of the United States from the impediments and burdens arising from the lack of adequate facilities for the insurance of such commerce. the Commission is authorized to provide marine insurance and reinsurance against loss or damage by the risks of war and reinsurance against loss or damage by marine risks, as prescribed in this subtitle, whenever it appears to the Commission that such insurance adequate for the needs of the water-borne commerce of the United States cannot be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions frcm companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States.

This section has been approved by the insurance interests of the country that appeared before our Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The second important section reads as follows:

SEC. 224. Whenever the Commission determines that insurance for masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture, arising from risks of war, cannot, with the aid of reinsurance provided for under this subtitle, be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, the Commission is authorized to provide such insurance on a basis corresponding to the war-risk insurance protection supplied, prior to such determination, for such personnel by companies authorized to do business in a State of the United States.

This section, covering the seamen, was approved by the groups representing the seamen. In order to remove any possible doubt as to their rights under what is known as the Jones Act of 1920, this concluding section was written into the proposed bill:

SEC. 227. Nothing in this subtitle shall be deemed to affect the rights of seamen under any provision of existing law.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, both the seamen and those who insure ships and cargoes are satisfied with the provisions of this bill, as amended. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I take this time is because I had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries when this bill in its original form came before the committee last May, and I was privileged to direct the attention not only of the committee but of the country to the very dangerous provisions found in that bill, which, in the face of threatened repeal of the arms embargo, would have permitted the insurance of not only American vessels but the insurance of foreign ships and their crews carrying contraband. The committee has done a fine job in striking out all of the obnoxious provisions of this bill, so that the bill as it now comes before the committee should not receive the adverse vote of any Member of this House. There is only one thing to which I want to direct the attention of the Committee, and that is the amendment which will be offered by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]. If you will refer to this bill, you will see that it authorizes the Commission to insure against loss or damage by risk of war. property, and person, as follows:

(1) American vessels, including vessels under construction, (2) cargoes shipped or to be shipped therein.

In view of the fact that the new Secretary of War who has recently been placed in the Cabinet and his interventionist partner, who has recently been made Secretary of the Navy, have been openly advocating the use of American ships in transportation of contraband abroad——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman wants that amendment accepted, does he?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I want it accepted. I understand the chairman of the committee will be pleased to accept such an amendment?

Mr. BLAND. I will.

Mr. KEEFE. That will definitely prohibit the insurance of ships or crews, in the event of a suspension or abandonment of the Neutrality Act, which are engaged in the business of carrying contraband. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In respect to the question of the use of shipping facilities of this country I am in possession of a letter from the United States Maritime Commission in which they cite an article in the New York Journal of Commerce of May 27, 1940, in which they say:

It would appear from the above that the Allies have sufficient merchant tonnage to move whatever war supplies, foodstuffs, and other essential materials that they may require from the United States.

So there is no occasion for lifting the ban and permitting our own ships to carry this stuff across the water.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, I know that the press have carried stories repeatedly, day after day, that ultimately there would be a proposal to suspend those provisions of the present Neutrality Act which prohibit the shipment of munitions of war in American bottoms, and if that is true I do not want the United States Government to be engaged in the business of insuring bottoms and crews and cargoes which are to be used for the shipment of munitions of war.

The chairman of the committee has indicated he is willing to accept the amendment that will be offered, and I do not care to take any more time on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill, notwithstanding the claim that it is emergency legislation.

I note that this so-called emergency legislation, H. R. 6572, was introduced in the House on May 31, 1939. At that time it included United States Government insurance for cargoes, vessels, and crews of foreign governments as well as our own. The overburdened taxpayers of the United States were going to hold the bag and foot the bill for this New Deal, socialistic Government in the insurance-business program.

It has been stated in debate on this bill that the bill was a reinsurance proposition. Subsection (a) of section 221, appearing at the top of page 2, reads as follows:

The Commission is authorized to provide marine insurance and reinsurance.

So this is not merely a reinsurance bill. This is a socialistic Government insurance program. The Government of the United States is going into subsidized competition with the private insurance corporations of the United States. This insurance underwriting Government agency will be subsidized from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury, notwithstanding the fact that the hearings, which I hold in my hand, page 8, indicate that Mr. B. K. Ogden, Insurance Director of the United States Maritime Commission, testified that our American insurance market had ample facilities to insure 95 percent of all our American vessels and all of our American cargoes.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. This measure is purely permissive. In the event the market is not available, the Maritime Commission may provide for the insurance.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I admit that, but when you give these New Deal bureaucrats authority to spend unlimited sums of public money to enter Government competition with private business institutions in the United States you and I know that they will operate in a big way. The sky is the limit, insofar as the amount of money which they can obtain and spend from our almost bankrupt Treasury, under subsection B of section 221 of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the House to hesitate before you vote for this socialistic bill, which has no doubt been imported direct from Moscow by our New Deal brethren, who believe that the Government should own and operate all business. Government subsidized competition with private business is unfair and destructive, and contrary to the principles of our American constitutional system of government.

Remember that there is no limitation on the amount of public funds which can be expended for this Government in the insurance-business program. Subsection B of section 221 of this bill authorizes the funds—an unlimited amount—for these New Deal bureaucrats to play with. There is no provision in this bill which sets up a yardstick for insurance-premium rates. The proponents of this bill tell us that nearly all of the private insurance underwriters in the country favor this bill. This notwithstanding the fact that the only persons who testified at the hearings in favor of this bill as representatives of insurance underwriters were William R. Hedge, president of the Boston Insurance Co., and Hendon Chubb, who represents foreign insurance corporations in the United States. Roosevelt & Sargeant, who now carry a great deal of the insurance on our American merchant marine, which is heavily subsidized from the Federal Treasury, and who also represent foreign insurance corporations, did not even appear, although this bill will be very helpful to them, as it will be to Mr. Hendon Chubb. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this un-American, socialistic Government in the insurance business bill will be defeated.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent Mr. THOMASON was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TO AMEND THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 543, Rept. No. 2693), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 543

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 10127, a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, I understand 10 minutes is required for general debate on this side. Will the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize Members under the 5-minute rule for that amount of time.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a subtitle, to read as follows:

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire—and this will be subject to amendment—to strike out the first section and to substitute with notice that I will strike out all other sections of the bill and ask that there be considered the amended bill which I send to the desk and which I will explain.

The Clerk read as follows:

That title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a subtitle, to read as follows:

"SUBTITLE—INSURANCE

"SEC. 221. (a) For the purpose of protecting the water-borne commerce of the United States from the impediments and burdens arising from the lack of adequate facilities for the insurance of such commerce, the Commission is authorized to provide marine insurance and reinsurance against loss or damage by the risks of war and reinsurance against loss or damage by marine risks, as prescribed in this subtitle, whenever it appears to the Commission that such insurance adequate for the needs of the water-borne commerce of the United States cannot be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States.

"(b) There shall be in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund to be known as the marine and war-risk insurance fund (hereinafter referred to as the fund), to be used for carrying out the provisions of this subtitle, and to be constituted of such sums as may be appropriated to such fund and of moneys and receipts credited thereto as herein provided. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to such fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subtitle. All moneys received from premiums and from salvage or other recoveries, and all receipts in connection with this subtitle shall be deposited to the credit of such fund. Payments of return premiums, losses, settlements, judgments, and all liabilities incurred by the United States under this subtitle shall be made from such fund.

"SEC. 222. The Commission may insure against loss or damage by the risks of war property, as follows:

"(a) (1) American vessels (including vessels under construction), (2) cargoes shipped or to be shipped therein, (3) their disbursements, and freight and passage moneys, and (4) personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews of such vessels.

"(b) (1) Commercial vessels (including vessels under construction) owned or controlled by the United States or any department or agency thereof, (2) cargoes owned by the Government or in which the Government has an insurable interest, to the extent of such interest, (3) their disbursements, and freight and passage moneys, and (4) personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews thereof.

"SEC. 223. (a) The Commission may reinsure any company authorized to do an insurance business in any State of the United States on account of marine and marine war risks, including protection and indemnity risks, assumed by any such company, on (1) property or interests as set forth in section 222 (a) and (b) of this subtitle, and (2) masters, officers, and crews of American vessels (including any such vessel owned or controlled by or chartered to the Commission) against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture.

"(b) The Commission may reinsure, in whole or in part, with companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, war risks assumed by the Commission under this subtitle.

"(c) Any department or agency of the United States is hereby authorized to procure insurance from the Commission as provided for in section 222 (b) of this subtitle, except as provided in the Government Losses in Shipment Act, approved July 8, 1937 (50 Stat. 479).

"SEC. 224. Whenever the Commission determines that insurance for masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture, arising from risks of war, cannot, with the aid of reinsurance provided for under this subtitle, be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, the Commission is authorized to provide such insurance on a basis corresponding to the war risk insurance protection supplied, prior to such determination, for such personnel by companies authorized to do business in a State of the United States.

"SEC. 226. (a) The Commission in the administration of this subtitle is authorized to adjust and pay losses, compromise and settle claims whether in favor of or against the Government, and to pay the amount of any judgment rendered in respect of any suit or settlement agreed upon in respect of any claim. The determinations of the Commission with respect to adjustments, compromises, settlements, and payments hereunder shall not be subject to review by any other executive or accounting officer of the Government.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to prescribe such forms and policies, to change or modify such forms and policies as may be necessary or appropriate under the circumstances, and to fix and adjust, as may be required by circumstances, the rates and changes of rates of insurance provided for in this subtitle.

"(c) The Commission is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subtitle. The Commission is authorized, in administering the provisions of this subtitle, to exercise its powers, perform its duties and functions, and make its expenditures, in accordance with commercial practice in the marine insurance business.

"(d) The Commission, without regard to the laws, rules, or regulations relating to the employment of employees of the United States, may appoint and prescribe the duties of such number of experts in marine insurance as the Commission may deem necessary in carrying out the provisions of this subtitle. The Commission, with the consent of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this subtitle.

"(e) The Commission shall include in the annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all activities and of all expenditures and receipts under this subtitle for the period covered by such report.

"(f) When used in this subtitle the term 'American vessels' means vessels registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 227. Nothing in this subtitle shall be deemed to affect the rights of seamen under any provision of existing law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in this bill which I have sent to the Clerk's desk in section 221 of the original bill.

Section 222 of the bill which I have sent to the Clerk's desk strikes out the words "and persons," in line 2. This was desired by the labor people.

This is the place, I think, where the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] should come. Then it reads as follows:

(a) (1) American vessels (including vessels under construction), (2) cargoes shipped or to be shipped therein, (3) their disbursements, and freight and passage moneys, and (4) personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews of such vessels.

We struck out lines 8 to 13 which were objected to by the labor people; and there had already been stricken out the remainder of the bill down to and including line 24.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. The amendment I propose to offer should go in at the end of line 4, after the word "therein", as the bill now appears.

Mr. BLAND. That will be line 21, page 2, of the amendment. Here is the way it reads. Line 20:

(a) (1) American vessels (including vessels under construction), (2) cargoes shipped or to be shipped therein—

And so forth. So the gentleman's amendment will come on page 2, line 21.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. Then comes the provision with reference to commercial vessels, including vessels under construction, owned or controlled by the United States or any department or agency thereof; and there was stricken out any seamen's insurance for the masters, officers, and crews of such vessels subject to the provisions of section 224 of this subtitle. That was agreed to with the labor organizations yesterday. I think that explains the entire subsection 222, and the gentleman's amendment would be in order.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan: On page 2, line 21 of the amendment, after the word "therein", strike out the comma and insert: "Provided, That in the event of the suspension of the present neutrality law no vessel, or officers, or crew carrying contraband, and no cargo of contraband shall be insured under any provision of this act."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. As to section 223 of the original bill the only change in the amended bill is by inserting after subtitle (c):

And (2), masters, officers, and crews of American vessels including any such vessel owned or controlled by or chartered to the Commission against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture.

That is inserted, and the reason for that is that it was desired by the labor organizations. They felt it would be well to have reinsurance by the Government in the event that the insurance companies needed it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have a high regard for the members of the Merchant Marine Committee and for Admiral Land, yet I cannot see how I can support this legislation which is war legislation rather than peace or neutrality legislation.

In 1914 when we had similar legislation we were demanding freedom of the seas, and we finally went into a war over that issue among others. Last year we adopted a Neutrality Act which gave the President power to create or destroy combat areas and to permit shipping to go under just such circumstances as he desired any place on earth or to keep out of any place on earth. If he is exercising that power as he has so far, then I cannot see how there is any war risk for American shipping. The committee report does not say that any of this legislation or this insurance is needed at the present time. It merely says that it may be needed. I can conceive of no circumstance under which it would be needed except that the President, without repeal of any neutrality law, would simply do as he has the power to do, change entirely his idea of combat areas and permit our ships to go places where they would actually be subject to war risks. We have in this bill on page 6, for instance, reference to paying the wages of the crew during detention following capture. Peaceful, neutral ships are not captured. Ships are captured when a nation is at war or when they are going into dangerous places.

This insurance does not go into effect except when such insurance cannot be obtained from private sources or when the Commission thinks private insurance is not adequate, so that unless it is contemplated strictly as a war measure, or there is contemplated a change in our neutrality policy, this is not needed.

We have had open announcements, however, that our neutrality policy is being changed by the President. Of course, if that is the object of this bill, that would be a reason for its going into effect; otherwise, it goes into effect when the Commission thinks that the rates which are available are not adequate. This would then put the Government into competition, not as a substitute for private insurance when private insurance is not available, but would permit the Government to go into competition whenever the Government thought that private insurance was inadequate.

Colonel Knox, in 1936, during the campaign, made a statement in which he said that if the New Deal were reelected insurance would not be safe in this country. That was embarrassing to both Republicans and Democrats at that time because it was felt the statement was not true. I wonder if the new Secretary of the Navy feels that if the New Deal goes in for 4 more years marine insurance will not be safe?

This report states that there is no present need for the insurance, merely that private insurance may be unavailable or inadequate. Therefore, feeling as I do, that this can only be necessary in case of an entire change in the policy of administering our neutrality law—and it can be done without any repeal of the law—I cannot see how I could support this legislation.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. Can the gentleman conceive of any situation arising from military developments where the London market may not be available for reinsurance?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Should not some means be established whereby the situation can be taken care of?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is not a governmental affair over there. Lloyds is a private institution and I think we should continue to have insurance from private sources.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, section 224 of the present bill is entirely stricken and there is substituted for section 224 the section, which I read when I addressed the House before, as follows:

SEC. 224. Whenever the Commission determines that insurance for masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture, arising from risks of war, cannot, with the aid of reinsurance provided for under this subtitle, be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, the Commission is authorized to provide such insurance on a basis corresponding to the war-risk insurance protection supplied, prior to such determination, for such personnel by companies authorized to do business in a State of the United States.

The labor people want it. They feel there may be such a condition, though very remote, and I felt so, too. That is to be taken care of by this amendment.

In section 226 the only change is at the bottom of page 9, where the quotation marks are stricken out because there has been added a new section, section (f). Then after that there is a new section added, No. 227, requested by the labor people, as follows:

SEC. 227. Nothing in this subtitle shall be deemed to affect the rights of seamen under any provision of exiting law.

Mr. Speaker, those are all the changes that have been made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 9381) entitled "An act to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House on a reconsideration of the same, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 65 and 66 to the bill (H. R. 8202) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of the Interior.
2. Department of Justice.
3. Department of the Navy.
4. Department of the Treasury.
5. Department of War.
6. Federal Reserve System.
7. Federal Works Agency.
8. Veterans' Administration.

TO DIVEST PRIZE-FIGHT FILMS OF THEIR CHARACTER AS SUBJECTS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2047, to divest prize-fight films of their character as subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill repeals existing law which prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of prize-fight films. It has the approval of the Attorney General, and it is deemed advisable at this time because the newspapers carry pictures of prize fights and frequently they are shipped in interstate commerce with impunity. The radio also broadcasts prize fights, and it is felt that all this has made unnecessary the statute which prohibits the shipment of films in interstate commerce.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The present law prohibits the shipment of prize-fight films from one State to another?

Mr. PEARSON. That is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How have they been shipped?

Mr. PEARSON. It has been done in violation of the law, but apparently with impunity, because so far as I know, no indictments have been brought to prohibit transportation of the films. In other words, it is a law which does not have the support of the public and, as I say, the broadcasting of prize fights has really made this law an innocuous thing.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the committee reported this unanimously?

Mr. PEARSON. This has the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every film or other pictorial representation of any prize fight or encounter of pugilists, under whatever name, transported into any State, Territory, or possession, for use, sale, storage, exhibition, or other disposition therein is hereby divested of its character as a subject of interstate or foreign commerce to the extent that it shall upon crossing the boundary of such State, Territory, or possession, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State, Territory, or possession enacted in the exercise of its police power.

SEC. 2. The act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and the interstate transportation of films or other pictorial representations of prize fights, and for other purposes", approved July 31, 1912 (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 405–407), is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 524 will be laid on the table. This provided for the consideration of the bill just passed.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TARVER submitted the following conference report on the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

M. C. TARVER,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
BUTLER B. HARE,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
FRANK B. KEEFE,
Managers on the part of the House.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
PAT MCCARRAN,
JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
H. C. LODGE, JR.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 9007, the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill, 1941.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the conference report.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate amendments Nos. 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39, which are the only amendments remaining in disagreement, be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 35: Page 63, line 3, strike out all of section 702.

Amendment No. 36: Page 63, line 14, strike out "703" and insert "702."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is the Labor-Federal Security Agency appropriation bill, and, of course, it is highly important that this bill be enacted into law prior to any recess that may occur tomorrow night, as I understand is contemplated.

There is only one item in disagreement, the conference report on all the other items having been agreed to several days ago. The one substantial item in disagreement is Senate amendment No. 35, which struck out section 702 of the bill. I desire to read that section for your information in the event you do not have a copy of the bill before you:

None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the salary of any person appointed to a non-civil-service position, under the appropriations in the respective titles in this act, if the effect of such appointment is to increase the number of non-civil-service employees from the State of residence of any such non-civil-service appointee beyond the number of non-civil-service employees to which such State is entitled, under the appropriations in the respective titles of this act, on a basis of population: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any position, the appointment of which is made by the President.

You will note that the language in question, which has been stricken out by the Senate, does not affect the tenure of service of any present employee of any of the several agencies whose activities are provided for in this bill. It simply provides that in making future appointments, appointments shall not be made from States which now have more than their quota upon the basis of population until appointments from other States which are under their quota shall have them brought up to their proportionate quota level.

The manifest justice of this provision was so apparent upon the consideration of the bill in the House that when the amendment offering this language for insertion in the bill was offered no single objection was made to its insertion.

There are 41 States which would be benefited by the language contained in this section. There are seven States which would be adversely affected, States which have more than their quota according to population of non-civil-service employees in these various organizations. The District of Columbia would also be adversely affected. In the National Labor Relations Board alone it appears that of 66 attorneys in the legal division 21 came from 1 State, and some States were not so fortunate as to have even a single appointee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman name the State that has the 21 appointees?

Mr. TARVER. The State is the State of New York.

The Senate conferees, or at least a majority of them, in my judgment, have recognized the wisdom of the provision contained in section 702. This being true, of course, you will be interested to know why the Senate has not agreed to recede from its amendment striking this language out of the bill. I think it my duty to be perfectly frank with you about that matter. The Senate conferees have expressed a reluctance to recede from their amendment, not so much because of any meritorious objection to the provision, but because to do so would not be satisfactory to a certain distinguished Senator who is not a member of the conference committee and whose State would be adversely affected by the adoption of the language contained in section 702.

The conferees on the part of the House have been perfectly willing to listen to any objection which might be urged upon the basis of justice and merit, to any objection based on principle to the language contained in this section, but I feel that my fellow conferees will support me in the statement that no such objection has been urged. Under these circumstances the six conferees on the part of the House, four Democrats and two Republicans, are unanimous in the opinion that the House ought not to recede from its position.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes in order to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. As I understand the gentleman's position, it is that we ought to insist on the language that is in the bill that would limit the number of appointees coming from the different States?

Mr. TARVER. It is my position that we ought to insist upon disagreement to the Senate amendment, which struck out section 702 of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The gentleman's claim is that we ought to insist on it?

Mr. TARVER. That is right.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Does not the gentleman believe that in view of the national emergency it is unwise for us to insist at this time on that sort of provision, because the Civil Service Commission will be called upon for all sorts of things and with this limitation in the bill they may not be able to supply the people necessary. I believe that if the gentleman will submit that to the House, the House will be inclined to recede and allow that proposition to go over to the next year. I do not believe this is a matter of life and death.

Mr. TARVER. I believe the gentleman's statement indicates that he has not clearly understood the language of the section. It has no reference whatever to civil-service employees. It has reference entirely to non-civil-service employees. It does not have any reference to any employees who are already in the service. It has reference only to the appointment of future employees.

And may I say to the gentleman that in a time of national emergency when numerous employees are to be selected, undoubtedly, not under civil service, for various departments of the Government, I do not think it would be inappropriate for the Congress to serve notice upon administrative authorities that they feel that such employees should be selected, as nearly as possible, upon a proportionate basis of population and therefore I cannot see any basis for the objection urged by the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Does not the gentleman think it would be possible to work out this difficulty, if there is a difficulty, with the executive departments? I think they know our attitude, and they will be glad to comply. I know that if you refer to my State, while I do not know the gentlemen who are working there any more than the gentleman does, yet we have these big centers of population and a number of workers there, and it seems a logical thing to go to those places for these men.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is correct in stating that he has the big centers of population. Therefore, on the basis of population, his State is entitled to a far greater number of these employees than would be one of the smaller States of the Union; but what the gentleman is insisting upon is a greater number, a far greater number, than he would be entitled to or his State would be entitled to even upon the basis of its very much larger population, and that, in my judgment, is unfair.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Do I understand by the pending motion of the gentleman from Georgia that we are to vote upon the question of insisting upon the House language at this time?

The SPEAKER. Insisting on disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 142, noes 5.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Under the rules may I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present at this time; if so, I would like to object on that ground.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I withdraw that, Mr. Speaker.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 2695), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 544

Resolved, That immediately, upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9980, a bill to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code. That, after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill upon which a rule has just been filed is a bill to recodify certain laws. The bill comes from a standing committee of the House, but not from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, which is charged with the responsibility of codifying the laws that are enacted. My parliamentary inquiry is whether a point of order is in order with reference to the reference of this bill to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to raise that point of order. If the question had been raised in timely fashion, it could have been considered by the House, but it has been waived by failure to raise the question at the proper time.

Mr. KEOGH. May I submit a further parliamentary inquiry as to when such a point of order would be timely?

The SPEAKER. It is always up to the committees, of course, to make a motion to change the reference of bills if they are improperly referred under the provisions of the rule.

STRENGTHENING NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That (a) in order to expedite the building up of the national defense, the Secretary of War is authorized, out of the moneys appropriated for the War Department for national-defense purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, with or without advertising, (1) to provide for the necessary construction, rehabilitation, conversion, and installation at military posts, depots, stations, or other localities, of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants, and the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures, as may be necessary), for the development, manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter; (2) to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary; and (3) to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders, and for the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other military equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage), and to amend or supplement such existing contracts, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes specified in this section: Provided, That the limitations contained in sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction, shall be suspended until and including June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by this Act: Provided further, That no contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section which would otherwise be subject to the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), shall be exempt from the provisions of such act solely because of being entered into without advertising pursuant to the provisions of this section: Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under this section; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of War.

"(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when he deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

"(c) Whenever, prior to July 1, 1942, the Secretary of War deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, he is authorized, from appropriations available therefor, to advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction for the War Department in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price of such supplies or construction. Such advances shall be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. (a) During the fiscal year 1941, all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets in the Army Air Corps, and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps, shall be suspended.

"(b) The President may, during the fiscal year 1941, assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary, irrespective of the limitations on the strength of any particular branch of the Army set forth in the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended: Provided, That no Negro, because of race, shall be excluded from enlistment in the Army for service with colored military units now organized or to be organized for such service.

"SEC. 3. All existing limitations with respect to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained shall be suspended during the fiscal year 1941.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War is further authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, That until December 31, 1941, the Secretary of War may, if he finds it to be necessary for national-defense purposes, authorize the employment of supervising or construction engineers without regard to the requirements of civil-service laws, rules, or regulations: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C. title 5, sec. 652), the Secretary of War may remove from the classified civil service of the United States any employee of the Military Establishment forthwith upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program of the United States and upon the giving of notice to such person of such charges: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal such person shall have an opportunity personally to answer such charges in writing and to submit affidavits in support of such answer.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of laborers and mechanics employed by the War Department, who are engaged in the manufacture or production of military equipment, munitions, or supplies shall be 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, such hours may be exceeded, but compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any workweek, computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate, shall be paid to such laborers and mechanics.

"SEC. 5. The President is authorized, with or without advertising, through the appropriate agencies of the Government (1) to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including all of the objects and purposes specified under any appropriation available or to be made available to the War Department for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941; (2) to provide for the furnishing of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants; (3) to provide for the procurement and training of civilian personnel necessary in connection with the protection of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use or operation thereof; and (4) to provide for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the act of June 7, 1939, but the aggregate amount to be used by the President for all such purposes shall not exceed $66,000,000. The President is further authorized, through such agencies, to enter into contracts for such purposes in an aggregate amount not exceeding $66,000,000. An account shall be kept of all expenditures made or authorized under this section, and a report thereon shall be submitted to the Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress: Provided, That no contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section which would otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), shall be exempt from the provisions of such act solely because of being entered into without advertising pursuant to the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 6. Whenever the President determines that it is necessary in the interest of national defense to prohibit or curtail the exportation of any military equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or material, or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof, he may by proclamation prohibit or curtail such exportation, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Any such proclamation shall describe the articles or materials included in the prohibition or curtailment contained therein. In case of the violation of any provision of any proclamation, or of any rule or regulation, issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The authority granted in this section shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1 of the House bill provided for expediting the national-defense program by authorizing the Secretary of War to provide necessary construction, rehabilitation, and installation of military posts, depots, stations, and other localities of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto, including the acquisition of land for the manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies. This section also provided for suspending until June 30, 1942, the provisions of any statute imposing a monetary limitation on any individual construction project.

Section 1 of the Senate amendment expanded this authority of the Secretary of War so as to include the making of contracts, with or without advertising, for the purposes outlined in the House bill, extended the authority so as to include the conversion of such plants, buildings, etc., and the installation of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants, the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures as may be necessary for the purposes specified in the House bill. This section also authorized the Secretary of War, with or without advertising, to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary and to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders and for the exchange of certain surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other such equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage). The limitations of sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction were suspended until June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by the act and it was provided in substance that all contracts entered into by the Secretary of War under the section should be subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act of June 30, 1936.

The Secretary of War was prohibited under the Senate amendment from using what is known as the cost-plus system of contract but the Secretary of War was authorized with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances constructed pursuant to the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War (or the President under sec. 5 of the Senate amendment) by Government personnel or through the agency of selecting qualified manufacturers under contracts and to provide for leasing of any such plants, etc., under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War deemed advisable and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932. The Secretary of War was further authorized to make advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price, such advances to be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War prescribes.

The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with certain clarifying changes, authorizes the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of any such plants, buildings, etc., as well as to lease them and substitutes for the limitation upon the use of the cost-plus system of contracting a provision which bars the use of the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system but allows the Secretary of War, when he deems it necessary, to use the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract. The conference agreement also provides that instead of all contracts under the section being subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, no such contract which would otherwise be subject to such act should be exempt from its provisions solely because it was entered into without advertising.

The second proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided that during the fiscal year 1941 the average number of flying cadets should not exceed 8,500 and that an average of 6,000 Reserve Air Corps officers might be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps. Section 2 (a) of the Senate amendment provided that during the fiscal year 1941 all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps should be suspended. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Section 2 (b) of the Senate amendment provided that the President during the fiscal year 1941 might assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary and contained a limitation that no person was to be excluded from enlistment in any branch of the Military Establishment on account of race, creed, or color. The sixth proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided for the assignment of enlisted men only and did not contain the limitation in the Senate amendment with respect to enlistment. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision with respect to assignment of officers and enlisted men, but modifies the limitation in the Senate amendment with respect to enlistment so as to provide that no Negro because of race shall be excluded from enlistment in the Army for service with colored military units now or hereafter organized for such service.

The third proviso of section 1 of the House bill provided that during the fiscal year 1941 all existing limitations as to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained should be suspended. Section 3 of the Senate amendment contained a similar provision which the conference agreement adopts. The fourth and fifth provisos of section 1 of the House bill authorized the Secretary of War to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere and to provide for such printing and binding, etc., as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of the act, and authorized him to waive the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912, in connection with the defense program of the United States in any case. Section 4 (a) of the Senate amendment contained a similar provision with respect to employment of personnel, but modified the provision authorizing the Secretary to waive the provisions of such section 6 so as to provide that the Secretary of War might remove from the classified civil service, notwithstanding the provisions of such section 6, any employee of the Military Establishment upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program and upon giving notice to such person. An opportunity was also to be afforded any person so removed to answer the charges against him in writing and to submit affidavits in support of the answer within 30 days after such removal. This section of the Senate amendment also provided that the Secretary of War, until December 31, 1941, might employ supervising and construction engineers without regard to the civil-service laws if he found it to be necessary for national-defense purposes. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Senate amendment.

Section 4 (b) of the Senate amendment provided that the regular working hours of employees of the War Department and field service should be 8 hours a day and 40 hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President and made provision for overtime payment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision but modifies it so that it is applicable only to laborers and mechanics employed by the War Department who are engaged in the manufacture or production of military equipment, munitions, or supplies.

Section 2 of the House bill contained authority for the President to use $132,000,000 during the fiscal years 1941 and 1942 in emergencies affecting the national security and defense for the objects and purposes specified in any appropriation for the War Department for military purposes for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, for furnishing Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants, for procuring and training civilian personnel necessary in connection with the production of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use and operation thereof, and for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the act of June 7, 1939. It was also provided that an account should be kept of all such expenditures and that reports should be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. There was also a limitation that none of the money so authorized should be used to pay salaries to any Communist, Nazi, or Fascist. Section 5 of the Senate amendment contained a similar authorization but did not have the limitation last mentioned. A report of expenditures was to be submitted to Congress on or before June 30, 1942, under the Senate amendment, and there was also a provision that all contracts entered into under the section should be subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act of June 30, 1936. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 5 of the Senate amendment with certain clarifying changes and provides for submitting a report of the expenditures under the section at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, as provided in the House bill. The conference agreement also provides that instead of all contracts under the section being subject to the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, no such contract which would otherwise be subject to such act should be exempt from its provisions solely because it was entered into without advertising.

Section 3 of the House bill and section 6 of the Senate amendment both authorized the President by proclamation to prohibit or curtail the exportation of military equipment and munitions and certain machinery and material necessary for their manufacture or servicing wherever he determines that it was necessary in the interest of national defense. The Senate amendment included operation as well as maintenance and servicing of such machinery. Under the House bill the authority granted under the section was to terminate on June 30, 1942, unless the Congress otherwise provided, but under the Senate amendment it was provided that the authority granted under the act should so terminate. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill with a clarifying change.

A. J. MAY,
EWING THOMASON,
W. G. ANDREWS,
DEWEY SHORT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes for the purpose of making any explanation of the report and bill that any gentleman desires. This is the report on the national defense expansion bill, you might call it, which authorizes the Secretary of War under section 1 to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorization contained in the act, and to provide for the use of any and all other means including Government personnel through any agency selected or qualified to execute any contract entered into with them. That is the general provision of section 1 of the act.

The Senate amended the bill by an amendment which prohibits entering into any contract for purchases of supplies except under and pursuant to provisions of the section of the act of June 30, 1936, which is known as the public advertising section of existing law. The Senate receded on that amendment and agreed to a further proviso that no contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section which would otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act of June 30, 1936, shall be exempt from the provisions of such act solely because of being entered into without advertising pursuant to the provisions of the section. In other words, where the War Department finds it necessary to build barracks or enter into some contract under the provisions of the original statute as it now is, they would be required to present, before starting construction, an itemized and detailed statement of the cost of every little item regardless of the size of it, even down to $500.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the present law.

Mr. MAY. Yes; that is right. That authorizes that to be done without regard to advertising, but we prohibit in a subsequent provision the cost-plus idea that we know so much about, and which has been resorted to in the past, and authorize the letting of these contracts on a basis of cost plus a fixed fee.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the language submitted in a conference report a few days ago, under the act, the gentleman from Kentucky has just now read they have the authority to go out and take charge of any manufacturing plant in the United States, and to put a representative of the Government in charge of that plant.

Mr. MAY. No; I do not so understand it. They may make a contract for the lease of those plants.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And for the Government to operate them?

Mr. MAY. If necessary, and if the private plants do not have available employees, they can require the employment of Government employees, such as inspectors, special mechanics, and supervisors, to see, for instance, in some plant where they are manufacturing detailed and certain technical equipment according to specifications that the specifications are complied with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does it not go further than that? It did the other day in the RECORD, and I am uncertain about that now, because the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate has incorporated practically the same idea in the Navy bill. As I understand it, it permits the Secretary of War to go out and commandeer or take over industrial plants and put a representative in there to make whatever the Army is asking to be manufactured.

Mr. RABAUT. Under what conditions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have not before me the RECORD of the other day, but that is exactly what has been submitted.

Mr. ANDREWS. Here is a copy of the RECORD.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It says this:

(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when he deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

Mr. MAY. That is the provision that is in the report now. The intention is that the Government may have supervision and not control. If the Government builds or furnishes the money with which to build a plant alongside a private plant and after the emergency has ended desires to dispose of it to the private owner it may do so.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If that is the provision in the report now it certainly confers upon the Secretary of War the absolute authority to go out into the country and to take any manufacturing plant that he may see fit to take, and to manufacture for the Government, under Government supervision, any article that he deems necessary to procure.

Mr. DINGELL. If it is in the interest of national defense.

Mr. MAY. It does not authorize him to take over. It merely authorizes the Secretary of War, in the event it becomes necessary and he cannot lease the property, to require that the owner shall accept the supervision of experts who are qualified in carrying out blueprints, specifications, and requirements needed to manufacture technical equipment for the War Department. It could not be done otherwise. As I have already stated, if the Government in aid of industry makes improvements suitable to the use of the private owner and has no further use for such improvements, the Government should be enabled to salvage some of the investment by sale to the private owners. That is all this section means, and I would be the last man in the world to allow Government to dominate private investments.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Would the gentleman state to the House what disposition was made with reference to time and a half for overtime?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I will be glad to do that. Under the Senate bill the provision required that all employees in the War Department, without regard to civil service or without regard to classification, should be paid for 8 hours' work, and for any overtime they were to be paid time and a half for such overtime. The conference report, as agreed to by the conferees, now provides that that shall apply only to those employees, including mechanics and experts actually engaged in the production of war materials and supplies in the plants, and it would not apply to thousands of civilian employees who work for the War Department that would be claiming overtime, on a fixed per annum basis or what is known as a fixed salary basis.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I just want to understand it does not apply to stenographers and clerks in the War Department either here or out in the field?

Mr. MAY. That is right. It is intended to allow wage earners and not salaried persons the benefit of overtime allowances.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But only to the people who do actual labor?

Mr. MAY. Only to the people who do actual labor. It does not apply to the civilian employees of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand you said "We set aside the cost-plus system and substituted a fee system." What about that fee system? Are there any restrictions to that?

Mr. MAY. It is a fee to be agreed upon in advance of the letting of the contract.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It can be larger than cost-plus if the Secretary wishes?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that as far as the Navy is concerned and as far as the appropriation bill is concerned, it cannot be over 6 percent. There is a provision in another bill pending in the Senate to permit the President to bring both together if there is any conflict.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does this suspend those restrictions?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. It will adhere to what the House has already done with reference to the Naval Establishment.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Does this also hold to the 7 percent provision?

Mr. MAY. Yes, sir. It was 10 percent. It is reduced to 7 percent.

Mr. RABAUT. It is a reduction of war profits, then?

Mr. MAY. Yes. We thought in these times, which require many sacrifices of us all for the common cause, profits should be small.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There was a part of this bill objected to by the Negroes of the country.

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What has been done about that?

Mr. MAY. I will be glad to state that the Senate provision was stricken out and in lieu of the Senate provision it was provided that no Negro, because of race, should be excluded from enlistment in the Army for service with colored military units now organized or to be organized for such service.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then that takes care of that objection?

Mr. MAY. That is satisfactory, I understand, to the representative of the Negro race.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Now, is that satisfactory? This applies only to enlisted personnel. What about officer personnel for some of the Negro units?

Mr. MAY. The understanding is that the War Department is setting up skeleton regiments to take care of this question. Our colleague the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. LEWIS LUDLOW, has been quite interested to know that the colored people have been given full protection and equal opportunity with all other troops, officers and men alike. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is at this very moment absent from the floor of the House engaged as a conferee on one of the appropriation bills. He came to me only a few minutes before this matter was called up and urged me to see that the colored people were surely protected, and I have assured him I would do so. May I also give due credit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], a member of the conference and ranking minority member on the Military Affairs Committee. He is really the author of this protective provision and urged it strongly in the committee.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. In that connection I may say that the General Staff of the War Department contemplates—in fact, they have planned—to organize five or six colored regiments. Yes; upon the special insistence of yourself.

Mr. DINGELL. I may say to my friend that I have no intention to precipitate any lengthy discussion of it, but I would like to have an understanding that the Negro citizens of this country are satisfied with what has been worked out. Certainly, no discrimination ought to appear in a bill of this kind.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], as I have already stated, asked me to make reference to this particular amendment, and to state whether or not it took care of the question raised by the Negro people. It does fully. It was discussed by them, and they are satisfied.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank my friend for the information.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the public mind, I believe, is very agitated over the attempt to transfer what is known as the mosquito fleet to foreign nations. I hold in my hand a clipping which appeared in today's paper. I cannot vouch for the authenticity of it, but, if it be true, it is very, very disturbing. It reads as follows:

55 UNITED STATES PLANES LEAVE EN ROUTE TO BRITAIN

MITCHEL FIELD, N. J., June 21.—Fifty-five Army bombing planes, "traded in" by the Government and sold to Britain, left today for Halifax, Nova Scotia.

It was the largest mass flight thus far in the plan to send to Britain all available planes not in immediate use.

The planes were piloted by civilians, some of whom are Army Reserve officers who had volunteered to fly the ships across the Canadian border.

Below that is this item:

NEW YORK, June 21.—Columbia Broadcasting Co. picked up an Italian short-wave radio newscast today, quoting the German news agency as saying the Germans had captured 400 airplanes, which had just arrived from America, and 2,000 motors complete with plans for mounting.

I think a matter of this kind should be examined into at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to clear up in my mind a little more about this 7 percent. I am sure no Member of Congress would say that 7 percent was too small a profit, but I am wondering about these negotiated contracts; for example, a concern may have several negotiated contracts. We know from past experience that it is possible to lose money on a negotiated contract. Will companies taking several of these negotiated contracts be permitted to average their losses or consider their losses on a negotiated contract?

Mr. MAY. I think that any contractor entering into a series of contracts would have them considered as a whole, and if there were a loss on one or excessive profit on the other they would be averaged so they did not exceed 7 percent.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are no other questions as to the bill or report, I move the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9896) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. MAY. This is one of two bills. I expect momentarily to call up H. R. 9897. This bill (H. R. 9896) provides needed construction at several different Army posts. The War Department presented evidence to our committee which showed very clearly that there was an imminent necessity for this work. The bill merely authorizes the appropriation of money for this purpose. The money has already been appropriated in last week's appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $15,000,000 to be expended for the construction, rehabilitation, and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows:

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I may say this bill is one which provides for the acquisition of some additional land around our Army posts.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire, in such order of priority as he may determine, title to additional land, or interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, to the extent of the approximate areas hereinafter set forth, for the establishment, enlargement, and essential improvement of the following military reservations, posts, and facilities:

Antiaircraft Training and Firing Center, Savannah, Ga., 525,000 acres.

Big Bethel water development, Fort Monroe, Va., 41 acres.

Camp Custer, Mich., 6,126 acres.

Great Salt Lake Basin, Utah, 3,000 acres.

Fort Sill, Okla., 13,788 acres.

SEC. 2. In order to accomplish the purpose of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,500,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 5, strike out all of the line and insert "Fort Dix, N. J., 16,346 acres."

Page 2, strike out lines 8 and 9 and insert the following: "Fort Lewis, Wash., 5,061 acres.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a special order heretofore made, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] is entitled to recognition for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, during this momentous session of Congress, I have had the privilege of addressing the House on many of the problems which have come before us. Today there is in the forefront of everyone's thinking the question of national defense. A few days ago I had the privilege of speaking to you on that subject. Let me reiterate that in my judgment the destiny of this Nation may well depend upon the speed and efficiency with which we put into operation our gigantic national-defense plans. Hand in hand with that program must go our program of annihilation of every influence in America, call it "fifth column" or what you will, which aims at the destruction of our institutions and our Government. To that program we must give our full measure of devotion. On these programs there is little time left for words; the demand is for action—action now.

Moreover, let me say again that it is my conviction that Members of Congress should remain in Washington at their post of duty, regardless of considerations, political or otherwise, as long as we can contribute to the defense and security of America. In this view I have every confidence that the people of my district and the Nation concur.

Today I hope I may be pardoned for speaking briefly in a more personal way. I should like to make reference to my service in Congress, the legislative procedure here, and the Nineteenth Congressional District of Texas, which I have the honor to represent.

SENIORITY

On January 3, 1935—about 5½ years ago—I took the oath of office in this Chamber. This is but a short period of time as service in Congress goes. Many Members of the House have been here for 20 years or more. I find that 178 Members of the present House of Representatives have been here longer than I, and that 193 Members have been here for a lesser time than I. There are 64 Members of the present House with whom I took the oath of office in 1935. Inasmuch as 178 Members of the House have been here longer than I, I could make no pretensions to being near the top in seniority.

Every new Member of the House is promptly impressed with the value and force of seniority. As former Speaker Champ Clark, who served in this House for 26 years and who was one of the most distinguished men ever to serve in Congress, once said:

A new Congressman must begin at the foot of the class and spell up. Of course, the more brains, tact, energy, courage, and industry he has, the quicker he will get up. If he possesses these qualities and if his constituents will keep him in the House, he is as certain to rise as the sparks are to fly upward.

He has also said:

It is a high honor to be a Representative in Congress, if for only one term, and with the number of terms the honor increases in geometrical rather than in arithmetical proportion. A Member's usefulness to his country should increase in the same proportion. A man has to learn to be a Representative just as he must learn to be a blacksmith, a carpenter, a farmer, an engineer, a lawyer, or a doctor.

Every true Member of Congress wishes to grow in knowledge of the Government and knowledge of the problems of the country, in power, and in influence, in order that he may the better serve his Nation and his own constituents. This is a natural ambition—one which the people approve.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Hard work, seniority, and a favorable committee assignment, it has been said, are necessary to progress in Congress. No Member can attain the chairmanship of any committee except through the process of seniority. When I came to Congress, I was appointed to the Committees on Insular Affairs, Civil Service, Census, and Elections. I would not want to disparage the work of these committees, because they are essential to the work of the House, but I aspired to membership on one of the mort important committees. Under present procedure a Democrat Member who is on a major committee is not permitted to serve on other regular committees of the House.

The opportunity for a favorable committee assignment has now come to me, and I am serving my second year as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which handles all appropriations for the far-flung activities of the Federal Government, including national defense and all other Federal expenditures. The Appropriations Committee and the Ways and Means Committee are universally considered the most important committees in Congress. On the Appropriations Committee there are 25 Democrats and 15 Republicans, I being the only member from Texas. Since the Civil War 7 Texans have served on this committee, 2 of whom, Gov. Joe Sayers and James P. Buchanan, became chairmen. I deeply appreciate the honor of serving on this committee, where I have the privilege of working with some of the most able and most influential Members of the House. The significance of committee service and the force of seniority on a particular committee is well illustrated by the fact that a great majority of the bills reported to the House and which become the law bear the name of the chairman of the committee reporting the bills. In almost every instance when a man's name has become popularly associated with a bill or an act of Congress, it is because he occupied the chairmanship of the particular committee handling that measure.

LEGISLATION A RESULT OF COMPROMISE

All of us realize that no one man, no Member of Congress, can pass legislation alone. Legislation is accomplished by the joint efforts of the 435 Members of the House and the 96 Senators. No Member of the House could dominate all of his colleagues, and, if he could, he still would have no control over the Senate. All legislation is therefore a result of compromise among the 531 Members of Congress. Since this is true, rarely is a Member of Congress satisfied completely with any bill that is finally agreed upon by the House and Senate and sent to the President for his approval or disapproval.

Most legislation for which I have voted has not been perfect. Much of the legislation for which I have voted has not suited me exactly. After a bill has been amended and changed in one way or the other by the various votes of Members of the House and Senate, it eventually comes down to a final vote. A majority of the Members must either vote for it or no legislation at all is passed on the subject. If there seems to be more good in a bill than bad, and if it is the only hope of getting anything passed, a Member of Congress will usually vote for the bill. In a democracy this is the only way legislation can be passed.

THE DUAL NATURE OF CONGRESSIONAL SERVICE

The work of a Member of Congress is divided into two principal categories: First, those duties pertaining to legislation, and, second, those duties which arise from the numerous requests of individuals and localities for cooperation in matters affecting their relationship with the Federal Government. One cannot enumerate in a few pages of writing nor in the short space of a few minutes what has been done over a period of more than 5 years.

SOME IMPORTANT LEGISLATION OF THE LAST 5½ YEARS

Everyone realizes that mistakes have been made from time to time by this administration. There has been no perfect era in our history. However, much worth-while legislation has been adopted during the past 5½ years in which I am proud to have had a part. Time affords opportunity for only brief reference to some of this legislation.

I voted for the soldiers' bonus and have voted for many other worth-while measures written for the benefit of our veterans, their widows and dependents. I have had a part in providing for the Public Works Administration and Work Projects Administration programs through which my district has received numerous projects of worth-while and lasting value. In the P. W. A. program the Nineteenth Texas District received more projects—not more money—than any other Texas district. Numerous school buildings, hospitals, and so forth, testify to the value of this program.

I have had a part in our Soil Conservation Service program, and I have supported legislation in behalf of the C. C. C., important for its conservation of the human resources of our youth and important for the work which it has done. The Nineteenth District of Texas has received its share of C. C. C. camps engaged in the work of the Soil Conservation Service and the State park service. When I think of what we have done for the C. C. C. boys, I think of the expanded program of vocational training in agriculture and home economics which Congress has made possible during recent years. In the schools of the Nineteenth Texas District there are now 55 vocational agriculture units and 54 home-economics units partially supported by the Federal Government. The importance of this work cannot be overemphasized.

CIVIL PILOT-TRAINING PROGRAM

I introduced the first bill calling for the civil pilot-training program under the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which is now of such great importance that it is being correlated with the national-defense program. Of course, the bill which passed Congress bore the name of the chairman of the appropriate committee.

FARM-TENANCY LEGISLATION

I am glad to have had a part in the program designed to enable the farm tenant to become a home owner. We have made some headway and we will make more. Legislation which we have already passed is helpful. Pending legislation which I discussed in the House on May 14, 1940, would provide a much broader program. I have joined with my colleagues here in every effort to provide for a more comprehensive farm-ownership program and in every effort to repel the destructive tendencies toward farm-family displacement. We have also provided for the more unfortunate of the farm group through the assistance of the Farm Security Administration in its program of rehabilitation and service.

FARM LOAN INTEREST RATE REDUCTIONS

During my service the Congress has constantly reduced interest rates to the farmer through the Federal land bank and otherwise. Thousands of farmers in the Nineteeth Texas District, which is perhaps the greatest agricultural district in Texas, have profited by this procedure. Legislation is now pending providing for an extension of the period of these reduced interest rates.

SOCIAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

The social-security program has been enacted during my period of service here. It has been a considerable disappointment in many respects, but before we scoff at the humanitarian efforts which have been made, let us remember that Congress in 1935 put an old-age pension and a broad social-security program into operation, and while it was and is far from perfect, it was the first time in 150 years under our Constitution that there had been any old-age pension or social-security program of any kind. It can and will be improved. In old-age pensions we have provided for a maximum pension of $40 per month, the State sharing $20 and the Federal Government sharing $20. In view of the inequalities between the States, many of us have thought all of the time, and still think, that the proper system would be a straight Federal pension. Then every individual in every State would share in Federal funds on a basis of equality.

FARM LEGISLATION

My principal interest in Congress has been in farm legislation. I have been in the fight with all those who have been fighting the battles of the farmer in Congress. As long as industry is protected by the tariff, the farmer who buys the products of industry must have the benefit of a subsidy—a tariff equivalent in one form or another. And there must always be a soil-conservation program to save the soil from further destruction. On frequent occasions I have pointed out the inadequacies of the farm program on this floor, and I shall continue to do so until the program insures the farmer an adequate farm income and until the program encourages the maximum practicable utilization of people on the farm and not the displacement of people from the farm. Legislation in which I have had a part has brought farm payments to the Nineteenth District of Texas in the sum of more than $43,000,000 in the period from 1935 to 1940. I am cooperating with the farmers of my district. In letters, in personal conversations, and in public meetings we have discussed the problems which confront us. We will not relax our efforts in behalf of a better program, and we will not willingly destroy the one we have until we have a better one.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Nothing has inspired my interest more than the rural electrification program. To have a part in bringing electric lights and power to the farm homes of America has been the high privilege of the recent Congresses of which I have been a Member. The program is in its infancy, but already 21 out of the 25 counties of the Nineteenth District of Texas have a part in this great program for the farm family. As the Honorable Harry Slattery, Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, said recently—

> The lights of peace and liberty are going out all over the world today, but the R. E. A. is bringing the lights of progress to the farm homes of America.

Of course, it would be impossible in a short time to refer to the many problems which have arisen in Congress during the eventful years since 1935. Upon hundreds of occasions I have cast the vote of the people whom I have the honor to represent in this Chamber. I have answered the roll call more than 1,000 times. The people whom I have represented have honored me with their confidence, and it is my belief that they have approved the overwhelming majority of the votes which I have cast.

INDIVIDUAL SERVICES

The second category into which a Congressman's work falls is that of serving to the best of his ability those individuals and those representing communities, towns, and cities who call upon him in regard to a particular proposition or problem involving the Federal Government in some way. I have received more than 15,000 letters a year from the people whom I represent. They dealt with a host of individual and community problems. I could not now, of course, enumerate what has been done in these many instances, but those who have called upon me know that I have made a conscientious effort to be helpful. I consider this part of my work to be a vitally important part of my duty as a Representative in Congress. These thousands of individual efforts do not become a part of the written record of a Congressman's service; they usually do not appear in the press as a matter of public interest. Nonetheless, each was important to someone who called upon me as his Representative, and I have done the best I could in honest respect for the confidence which these individuals have placed in me. I shall always prefer the silent trust of those steadfast friends to the public notoriety accorded the demagogue.

THE NINETEENTH DISTRICT OF TEXAS

I am proud of the district which I represent in Congress—the Nineteenth Congressional District of Texas. I have the honor to be its first Representative. It is a new area in west Texas. Its growth and development has been phenomenal. Its people are in every sense of the word pioneers. They have carved out of the heart of the old cattle kingdom a vast agricultural empire, now being supplemented by development of the oil industry. As I said here on the floor on an occasion in 1936:

> The development of this section has been wrought by the strong determination and perseverance of a people with one purpose in their hearts—to build a new home for themselves. In this task they have not been unmindful of those community projects which are so vitally important to the individual home. In the short space of years hundreds of churches have been erected, hundreds of schools have been built, hundreds of miles of good roads have been constructed, and Texas Technological College, at Lubbock, has been born and is rapidly achieving national recognition. It is true that the climatic characteristics of this area have brought drought with their hardships, disappointments, and financial reverses. Yet the people have always been sustained by a faith that has endured through the severest losses and have written their record of progress in an economic and social order, the stability of which is no longer questioned. The predominance of real American stock and the solidarity of the people are not surpassed in any other section of the United States. To represent in Congress such a great people would challenge the fidelity and efforts of any man.

DEMOCRACY MUST BE MADE TO WORK FROM WITHIN

I began this speech with a reference to the all-important question of national defense. Before I conclude, I should like to point out in that connection that it is well for us to keep also in mind those legislative gains for which Congress and the people have been responsible and to continue to work toward the improvement of conditions at home and the solution of our important and perplexing problems. I hope that we may continue to remember that democracy must be made to work from within as well as defended from without. Certainly the bulwarks of our defense are as much in the hearts of our people as in the ramparts of our Army and the battleships of our Navy. We cannot forget that it is the function of the Government in a democracy to contribute to the general welfare of the people in every way possible. Our people are ready to assume the burdens and responsibilities of the defense program, ready to "pay the bill," if I may use that term. However, we must not presume that the glory of our Nation shall ever rest alone in an invincible Army and Navy. These must protect and maintain the real glory of the Nation reflected in the privileges and liberties of our people. In our present grave emergency I am anxious to serve in every possible way as a private citizen of the world's greatest Nation and as a representative of a great people who stand ready to defend those privileges and liberties which we under Heaven have come to enjoy.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1940

(Legislative day of Friday, June 21, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, almighty and everlasting God, who hast brought us to the beginning of this day: Defend us in the same with Thy mighty power; and grant that this day we fall into no sin, neither run into any kind of danger, but that all our doings, being ordered by Thy governance, may be righteous in Thy sight and salutary to Thy people in this Nation. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, June 21, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The CHIEF CLERK called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrnes	Ellender	Hill
Andrews	Capper	George	Holman
Ashurst	Caraway	Gerry	Holt
Bailey	Chandler	Gillette	Hughes
Bankhead	Chavez	Green	Johnson, Calif.
Barbour	Clark, Idaho	Guffey	Johnson, Colo.
Barkley	Clark, Mo.	Hale	King
Bilbo	Danaher	Harrison	La Follette
Bone	Davis	Hatch	Lee
Brown	Donahey	Hayden	Lodge
Byrd	Downey	Herring	Lundeen
McCarran	Norris	Russell	Truman
McKellar	Nye	Schwartz	Tydings
McNary	O'Mahoney	Schwellenbach	Vandenberg
Maloney	Overton	Sheppard	Van Nuys
Mead	Pepper	Shipstead	Wagner
Miller	Pittman	Smith	Walsh
Minton	Radcliffe	Thomas, Okla.	Wheeler
Murray	Reed	Thomas, Utah	White
Neely	Reynolds	Townsend	Wiley

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] are attending the funeral of the late Senator GIBSON, and are therefore necessarily absent.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are members of the Senate committee attending the funeral of the late Senator GIBSON.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

AMOS B. COLE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 252)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, the bill (S. 1560) for the relief of Amos B. Cole.

It appears that Amos B. Cole was a member of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia. After a trial by the police trial board he was dismissed from the force. Subsequently, he became incapacitated. The instant bill would, however, entitle him to the same retirement privileges that would be extended to him had he become permanently incapacitated in line of duty while in the service.

In my opinion, the enactment of this legislation would not only create an undesirable precedent, but would not be conducive to the maintenance of morale and discipline in the local police force. The District Commissioners and the head of the Police Department can hardly be held responsible for the proper administration of the department, and for its effectiveness in maintaining law and order if disciplinary action taken by them in individual cases is to be subject to reversal by legislative action.

I may add that I am informed that Mr. Cole is receiving adequate hospital care in a veterans' hospital, at Government expense, and is also receiving a pension based on his service in the United States Army prior to his becoming a member of the police force.

In view of the considerations discussed above, I am constrained to return the bill without my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1940.

RELIEF OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, reporting relative to cases of relief granted under authority of the act of July 11, 1919, to disbursing officers of the Navy, relieving them from responsibility on account of loss or deficiency caused by officers, without fault or negligence, acting in the line of duty, since the last report submitted as of May 3, 1939, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions of Women's Auxiliary No. 1 to the Maritime Federation, San Francisco, Calif., and the Eureka Noe Valley Unions Auxiliary Club, protesting against action tending to lead the Nation into war and the sacrifice of American men on foreign soil, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Associated Alumni of Brown University, Providence, R. I., favoring the prompt adoption of a system of compulsory selective military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Lions Club of Newport, N. H., and conventions of the Lions Clubs of Florida and Oregon, endorsing the national-defense program, and favoring the enactment of legislation to stop all subversive activities in the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that the United States render material aid to the Allies, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of Loggia Cristoforo Colombo 168, Order Sons of Italy in America, of Worcester, Mass., reaffirming the loyalty of the lodge and its members to the United States of America, and calling attention to the spread of intolerance in this country, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REYNOLDS presented a telegram from the North Carolina Conference Youth Organizations of the Methodist Church, Louisburg, N. C., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOUISBURG, N. C., June 22, 1940.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS:

Representing 28,000 Methodist young people of North Carolina, we feel that the Christian way is the way of peace. Will you keep us out of war?

THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE YOUTH ORGANIZATIONS OF THE METHODIST CHURCH.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask consent to present at this time for printing in the RECORD and proper disposition a resolution adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of assembly of the State of New Jersey on the 11th instant.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas recent events in Europe have made crystal clear the absolute necessity for the preparation of our National Guard, Army, and Navy for every possible contingency; and

Whereas provision for the needs of modernized mechanized warfare requires cooperation of business, industry, and Government to an even greater degree than in the past: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of New Jersey (the house of assembly concurring), pledge their cooperation to the President and Congress of the United States in all steps necessary for the prompt and energetic inception and prosecution of an adequate national-defense program; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the president of the senate, attested by the secretary, be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Senators from New Jersey, and the Members of the House of Representatives from New Jersey.

PETITIONS, RESOLUTIONS, AND TELEGRAMS FROM MISSISSIPPI

Mr. BILBO presented a petition of sundry citizens of Liberty, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIBERTY, MISS., June 19, 1940.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States.
Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Hon. THEO. G. BILBO,
Senators from the State of Mississippi, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned American citizens and taxpayers, earnestly insist that you make every endeavor to prevent the United States from participating in any foreign war, either through choice or compulsion.

Respectfully submitted.

Gracey Lusk, J. B. Turnipseed, T. F. Wren, J. Scott Nunnery, J. M. Reynold, W. B. Tarver, H. M. McGehee, John I. Nunnery, L. L. Campbell, Ollie Nunnery, Joe D. Gordon, T. H. Nunnery, H. Duck, Hugh Nunnery, Roy Nunnery, E. R. Nunnery, M. L. Quinn, Dr. M. D. Quinn, A. B. Williams, Jr., A. Boyd Williams, J. K. Harvey, and Roland Van Normon.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of John R. Gambriel Post, No. 23, American Legion, of Drew, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DREW, MISS.

Hon. THEODORE BILBO,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of this organization the following resolution was adopted and the adjutant was instructed to forward a copy of same to you for your serious consideration:

"Now, therefore be it resolved by the John R. Garbriel Post, No. 23, American Legion, Inc.:

(1) That the President and Congress of the United States should take immediate steps and adopt such measures necessary for compulsory military training for all male citizens within a certain age limit.

(2) That notwithstanding political conventions and campaign aspirations, that Congress stay in session now and "during the emergency," which we consider most grave at this time and will continue to be so for an extended period.

Trusting you will give this your due consideration, we are,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN R. GAMBRIEL POST, NO. 23,
AMERICAN LEGION, INC.,
D. B. SEALY, Commander.

Mr. BILBO also presented a telegram from Fred L. Todd, adjutant, Henry H. Graves Post, Jackson, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., June 20, 1940.

Honorable BILBO,
Washington, D. C.:

Executive committee of Henry H. Graves Post adopted resolution urging compulsory military training. Your influence to enact same urged.

FRED L. TODD,
Adjutant, Henry H. Graves Post.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the National Guard Association of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas since the passage of the National Defense Act of 1920 the National Guard of the State of Mississippi and of the various States of the Union have trained primarily for field service in the Army of the United States and has been equipped and paid by the Government of the United States while undergoing such training; and

Whereas the state of training of the Mississippi National Guard and the National Guard of the other States is such that with a short period of intensive field training the National Guard units could and would be prepared to function as first-line troops; and

Whereas the National Guard units of the various States are in serious need of additional equipment and that such equipment will shortly be available under the expanded defense program of the Federal Government; and

Whereas the suggestion has been made by the Chief of Staff of the United States Army that the National Guard be inducted into the Federal service for training and for such use as may be necessary, but some parties have raised objections to such use of the National Guard: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the National Guard Association of the State of Mississippi, in convention assembled, That it is the sense of the National Guard of the State of Mississippi that immediate action should be taken to mobilize the National Guard units of the various States and to induct the same into the Federal service if in the opinion of the Chief of Staff such steps are now necessary or desirable in order to complete a program of adequate national defense; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this association that any delay in the determination and effectuation of an adequate defense program would be a national catastrophe; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the desire of every officer of this association and of the enlisted men of the National Guard that the public generally be immediately advised in definite terms that the National Guard units stand ready, able, and willing to render in the field any and all services and duties as may be necessary or advisable in order to effectuate an adequate national-defense program immediately.

Be it resolved by the National Guard Association of the State of Mississippi in convention assembled, That in order to keep up with modern developments in military science it is necessary that a form of adequate compulsory military training for all able-bodied male citizens of the United States should immediately be established and put into effect.

Mr. BILBO also presented a telegram from Yazoo Delta Local Agents Association, of Greenwood, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator THEODORE G. BILBO, GREENWOOD, MISS., June 20, 1940.
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The Yazoo Delta Local Agents Association of Stock Fire Insurance Companies, at its regular monthly meeting, this the 19th day of June, at Tunica, Miss., unanimously pledges its full cooperation and support of the Government preparedness program and will do everything in its power to combat all subversive elements.

YAZOO DELTA LOCAL AGENTS' ASSOCIATION,
DAVID J. BREWER, Secretary.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of Everard Lee Post, No. 175, Department of Mississippi, the American Legion, Merigold, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EVREARD LEE POST, NO. 175,
DEPARTMENT OF MISSISSIPPI, THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Merigold, Miss., June 13, 1940.

Whereas the present war, which is spreading throughout the world, is not only a war but is a revolution against the established order and those varieties of life which constitute our culture, civilization, and the American way of life and government; and

Whereas this revolution is slowly penetrating the thinking of nations in the Western Hemisphere, and even our own Nation, to the extent that subversive movements have the support of certain types of American citizens; and

Whereas the present status of our national defense is appalling and pitifully weak when compared with the war machines of aggressor nations now on the march; and

Whereas because of long years of peace and personal freedom in our democracy our Nation has hitherto not found it necessary to provide such methods of dealing adequately with treason and sabotage as other democratic nations at war have found it necessary to develop to crush "fifth column" activities and other subversive movements supported by aliens and radical citizens; and

Whereas because of the international situation national mobilization of resources, industrial production, and manpower is fundamentally necessary if the United States is to arm adequately to face developments in world affairs; and

Whereas mobilization of the resources of national defense demands a unity of spirit and ideas and the elimination of the consideration of personal convenience; and

Whereas the international situation is so serious and potent with possibilities that a national emergency requiring the immediate attention of Congress could be precipitated any day without warning: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Everard Lee Post, No. 175, of the American Legion, Department of Mississippi, on this 13th day of June 1940:

1. That the President and the Congress should now forego and forget personal considerations in plans for the development of an adequate national defense.

2. That in view of the grave international situation, which could precipitate a national emergency at any time without warning, which would require the immediate attention of Congress, Congress be urged to remain in session until conditions abroad have changed sufficiently to justify adjournment.

3. That the President and Congress immediately initiate and enact legislation providing legal procedures to punish American citizens who advocate the overthrow of our Government by force, fraud, or violence, and to imprison or deport aliens who have similar aims.

4. That the President and Congress of the United States should immediately enact such laws and legislation as may be necessary to call to the services of the Nation, in the development of an adequate national defense, all industrial resources or facilities, regardless of previous political differences or party lines.

5. That the President and Congress of the United States should immediately take such steps and adopt such measures as may be necessary to prohibit strikes, sabotage, or delay of any nature in the development of national defense.

6. That the President and Congress of the United States immediately take all steps necessary to equip, train, and mobilize in such strength as may be necessary, all armed forces of the United States in the Regular Army, the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the United States Marine Corps, the Navy, and in any branch of governmental service found necessary for national defense;

7. That the Congress of the United States be urged to repeal all parts of the Johnson Act which in any way prohibit or hinder full support and aid to the allied nations in the way of equipment, munitions, or economic assistance, short of making military commitments;

8. That this post go on record as urging all young men of military age, who are not engaged in necessary employment for the support of their families or are not employed in those industries necessary for the maintenance of national defense, to enlist immediately in the National Guard of the State of Mississippi or in such branches of the armed forces of the United States in which their talents or training might be of particular value or service;

9. That this post offer its services as an organization and each member of this post offer his services as an individual to the Government of the United States or to any State or subdivision thereof, and to any industrial organization having need therefor for the definite purpose of combating sabotage or "fifth column" activities of any nature whatsoever;

10. That this post cooperate with national headquarters and State headquarters in initiating and developing for itself a program of proper observation of the week, June 17 to June 22, as Americanism Week, for the discussion and realization of the benefits, blessings, and obligations of American citizenship; and to seek the cooperation of newspapers, civic clubs, and individual citizens in such observation.

E. S. NORTH,
Commander of Post, 1940.
DR. A. M. WYNNE,
Commander-elect, 1941.
IRA RAYNER.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of Frank G. Wingfield Post, No. 66, American Legion, Leland, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution expressing our devotion to the ideals of democratic government and our sympathy for our former Allies, the British and French Empires, pledging our loyalty to their cause and urging our Government to grant them all aid possible, and that immediately

Whereas the fundamental purpose of the American Legion is to perpetuate and foster the democratic ideals of government as illustrated by the United States of America during the entire period of its existence as a Nation, for the promotion of which many sacrifices have been made, and for the protection of which the members of this organization fought in the World War along with the forces of the British and French Empires and other nations; and

Whereas the same democratic ideals of government are now in jeopardy by the barbaric and monstrous efforts of the totalitarian nations of the world to crush and destroy our former Allies, and to destroy their democratic forms of government and their ideals of justice and liberty; and

Whereas under such conditions it is impossible for this organization to remain silent and inactive while our former Allies are engaged in a life-and-death struggle for the protection and preservation of their liberty and democratic ideals; and

Whereas in said struggle we realize that our hopes and welfare of the future are interwoven with those of the democratic governments, and their loss in this struggle will be our loss, and leave our Nation the only great stronghold of democracy left on the face of the world, and in all probability will leave us alone to be attacked and destroyed by the totalitarian nations when they so desire; and

Whereas we want the democratic nations at war to know that our sympathies are with them in this struggle, and that it is our desire that our Government render them every aid possible in their distress, and that immediately: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Frank G. Wingfield Post, No. 66, of the American Legion, Leland, Miss.:

1. That we reaffirm our devotion and loyalty to the democratic ideals of government, liberty, and justice, the protection of which our former Allies, the British and French Empires, have been or are now courageously defending without adequate supplies and preparation from the totalitarian nations in the most ruthless and barbaric war in history.

2. That we urge our Government to grant them all the immediate aid and assistance possible, and express our unwillingness to sit idly by with a surplus of food and an inexhaustible supply of metals and ammunition that could mean their victory and the saving of our democratic ideals.

3. That we urge and beg our Government and those in authority therein to give the democratic nations so sorely pressed by the totalitarian aggressors all the material aid and assistance possible, and that speedily, saving only such supplies and materials that may be necessary for our own defense, and that credit be extended for same, if desired.

4. That we offer our services to our Government to assist in eliminating and destroying all subversive movements and elements in our country, as well as to stamp out all non-American, un-American, and disloyal organizations, persons, and practices that may exist.

5. That in order that these purposes may be carried out and future emergencies met as they appear that the Congress of the United States of America remain in session as long as the present emergency exists.

Adopted this, the 17th day of June 1940, by a unanimous vote.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of the Woman's Club and affiliated clubs of Holly Springs, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there exists today unprecedented and unpredictable international chaos, potential with national menace to the United States of America; and whereas, in our judgment, the gravest crisis now confronts this country in its long history, requiring energy, courage, patriotism, ability, and devotion to duty of the highest order on the part of our entire citizenry, and more especially those having authority; and whereas we feel that our views as Americans should be communicated to those who represent us in the National Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we memorialize our Senators, Hon. PAT HARRISON and Hon. THEODORE G. BILBO, and our Congressman, Hon. WALL DOXEY, and urge them to use their votes and influence to the utmost for the accomplishment of three things now:

First. Infinite and speedy arming of the Nation adequately, and providing an Army and Navy, tank and air forces, not conformable to our past conceptions of adequacy, but comparable to the combined forces of both Germany and Italy, and that all national expenditures be subordinated to this purpose.

That Congress do not permit this country to be led or drawn into this war, if it can honorably be avoided, and in our judgment it can be honorably avoided.

That Congress do not adjourn or even recess at this time of crisis and march of relentless change in the aspect of world affairs, as we deem the presence of Congress in Washington to be of the utmost importance to national safety.

These resolutions are sent on behalf of the Woman's Club of Holly Springs, including Home Room Mothers, the Garden Club, and other affiliates, and a copy shall be sent to the aforesaid Senators and Congressman, this the 18th day of June 1940.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of the executive committee of Clement R. Bontempts Post 139, American Legion, of Bay St. Louis, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution deploring the present world crisis: reaffirming our loyalty to the ideals of government that our former Allies are making great sacrifices to maintain, pledging our loyalty to their cause, and urging immediate aid to them by our Government

A meeting of the Executive Committee of Clement R. Bontempts Post 139, of the American Legion, of Bay St. Louis, Miss., was held at 7:30 p. m. Monday, June 10, 1940.

The following is a resolution unanimously adopted by the committee:

Whereas Communists, Nazis, Fascists, and other foreign organizations constitute a threat to our democratic form of government; and

Whereas the Communists, Nazis, Fascists, and other organizations opposed to democracy in this country are the nucleus of a "fifth column" which now exists in this country; and

Whereas agents of said organizations and existing enemies are now residing in this country and are a threat to the safety and welfare of our people; and

Whereas the United States should not, in the exercise of good judgment, tolerate such enemies and organizations within its borders; and

Whereas this country should immediately prepare itself adequately to combat any combination of powers that could possibly attack it: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the members of the executive committee of Clement R. Bontempts Post 139, of the American Legion, Bay St. Louis, Miss., That we now sincerely urge our Government to forcefully take active measures to curb the activities of all Communists, Nazis, Fascists, and all aliens, and any other organizations in this country opposed to our democratic form of government, and we respectfully suggest that every Communist, Nazi, Fascist, or of any of the above-mentioned organizations be immediately coralled and put under Government supervision, and we most earnestly endorse the action of our President in placing the Immigration Department under the Department of Justice. We respectfully further suggest that the F. B. I. forces be tremendously increased to deal with these activities.

We call upon all patriotic citizens to cooperate with the executive committee of the Clement R. Bontempts Post 139 of the American Legion, who is in contact with the F. B. I. in overcoming the threat to our liberty caused by such organizations and aliens in this country, and we believe that an adequate defense of this country cannot be had without a thorough elimination of all "fifth column" elements and urge that our Government take every precaution to eliminate all "fifth-column" activities; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to each Senator and each Representative of the House of Representatives from Mississippi, and that a copy be given to the press for publication.

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of Local No. 589, National Federation of Federal Employees, Jackson, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a state of emergency exists in the United States today by reason of world conflict; and

Whereas vast sums are needed for preparedness and for national defense; and

Whereas when the question of economy or providing additional funds for national defense is mentioned the tendency is and always has been to reduce the salaries of Federal employees; and

Whereas the amounts secured through such reductions are infinitesimal in comparison with needed funds; and

Whereas there usually comes with increased industry and war conditions a corresponding increase in the cost of living, and salaries of Federal employees are now inadequate: Therefore be it

Resolved by Local 589 of the National Federation of Federal Employees, That this local, while pledging anew our loyalty to the Government, is unalterably opposed to any reduction in salary of Government employees; that the national organization and the Members of the Mississippi delegation in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States be urged to use their best efforts to provide a systematic program for promotion on merit at regular yearly intervals as a means to promote efficiency and to increase the morale of field employees of the Government; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each of the two United States Senators from Mississippi and to the six Congressmen representing Mississippi and to the National Federation of Federal Employees, and that copies be given to the press.

AID TO THE ALLIES—PETITION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, recently I presented a petition praying that aid and assistance be given to the Allies by this Government. I requested that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD. The petition itself with the accompanying names was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I now present a supplemental petition with additional signatures from the same city, Santa Fe, N. Mex., and ask that it be referred to the same committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RESOLUTION OF THE UNITED STATES JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE—NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROBLEMS

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and publish in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce in session at Washington in connection with national defense and America's foreign policy. I present this at the request of Mr. Ben Johnson, of Preston, Idaho, who is the national director of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the resolutions committee, and had a good deal to do with the drafting and adoption of this resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, in convention assembled on this the 21st day of June 1940, That our position with reference to the present significant problems of national defense be stated as follows:

I. We believe in the preservation of the democratic form of government which assures to our citizens the liberties and freedom guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. We believe that the latent dynamics of a democracy, once aroused, are more powerful than the driven dynamics of dictatorships. To attain that end, we realize that the young men of America have a special responsibility. Hence we pledge our efforts to allay hysteria and not to forget the need for the solution of important domestic problems which continue to be vital to our democratic form of life and to assist in welding together our people through mutual confidence and trust, recognizing that to achieve this end we must reduce unemployment, preserve industrial peace and the rights of labor, assure the fair treatment that encourages capital investment, assure fair treatment for agriculture, and discourage unfair advantage wherever shown.

II. We consider that the most important problem of the day is the immediate establishment of an adequate national defense.

III. We believe that the following are necessary elements of an adequate national defense:

A. A clear definition of the necessary geographical area of defense. As a minimum, such an area, must include the United States and its possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

B. Immediate organization of all resources, including industry and manpower, which includes:

1. Compulsory military training.

2. Training of individuals in skills and techniques necessary to the rapid and efficient production of materials and equipment required for defense.

3. Administrative coordination of all agencies involved directly or indirectly in the defense program; appointment by the President of one person charged with this administrative responsibility; and elimination of delays and unnecessary procedural technicalities.

4. Elimination of excessive profits to industry, agriculture, and labor by reason of production incident to the defense program.

5. Development of our own resources with a view to national self-sufficiency through an immediate program of extensive research as to latent resources, chemical substance, mechanical devices, and synthetic products.

C. Recognition and willingness to bear the increased costs of such a defense program. Insofar as possible these costs must be paid currently out of tax revenues. As young men, we will assume our share of this burden.

D. Loyalty to the United States of America. We declare our belief in the loyalty of the great majority of our citizens. However, adequate steps must immediately be taken to eliminate all acts of disloyalty to our democratic form of government. This involves, among other steps, strict enforcement of the immigration laws and mandatory registration of all aliens.

E. Elimination of the use of the cloak of diplomatic privilege as a device to conceal unfriendly propaganda and subversive activity.

F. Public knowledge of all pertinent facts relative to problems of national defense and our relationship to foreign conflicts. We insist that our governmental leaders are under an obligation to keep us promptly and fully informed on these matters. We recognize the reciprocal obligation on the part of every citizen to keep himself fully informed.

G. Also as an element of defense the step may be justified of making available for purchase supplies and equipment to those nations important to our plan of national defense, provided that the requirements of our own defenses shall in no event be prejudiced by such sale.

IV. We oppose sending an armed force outside the Western Hemisphere.

V. No armed force shall be sent beyond our geographical area of defense.

Having faith in our future and confidence in the willingness of our young men to make any sacrifices necessary, the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce tenders to the Nation the services of its members and organizations—local, State, and National—in the establishment of adequate national defense and the maintenance of our democratic form of government.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 283) authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, reported it without amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 243) authorizing Government employees' participation in the celebration of National Aviation Day, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1938) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9158) to amend the act entitled "An act for the protection of certain enlisted men of the Army," approved August 19, 1937, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1939) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4044) for the relief of the widow of Donald D. Elliott, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1940) thereon.

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6572) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine-risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1942) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 4156) for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation, reported it without amendment.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS—ADVERSE AND FAVORABLE REPORTS OF MEMBERS OF SUBCOMMITTEE WITHIN COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, in the Claims Committee there has been for many years a group of claims known as the French spoliation claims. They have been at different times reported favorably and adversely to the Senate. The committee the other day had a very full report upon the subject, and, by unanimous vote, decided indefinitely to postpone consideration. By that procedure no record will be made of the reports which were prepared. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and myself prepared a lengthy adverse report, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] prepared a favorable report. I ask unanimous consent that those reports be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the regular RECORD-size 7½-point type, so that they may be available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reports above referred to are as follows:

MAJORITY SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT, BY MR. BROWN

We have decided to report adversely Senate 3173, the French spoliation claims bill.

The matter was referred to the undersigned as a subcommittee. Because of the amount involved, $3,240,019.34, covering 1,358 claims, and because of the necessity for a full understanding of the situation, we concluded to ask the attorneys interested to present their views before the full committee, which was done on Wednesday, May 8, 1940. The committee heard the Honorable DAVID I. WALSH, a Senator from Massachusetts, whose bill brought the controversy before the Congress; Joseph P. Tumulty, Jr., attorney; and J. Henry Scattergood, vice president of the Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania.

These gentlemen had a full understanding of the situation and were of great assistance to the committee in placing the facts before it.

The subcommittee will not attempt to set forth a lengthy report of the claims and refers to a committee report of the late Senator Logan under date of May 26, 1937, in which he recommends favorable action on the claims. It is needless to set forth his reasoning and the various reports made by representatives of the Government therein contained. Reference is also made to the minority report dated June 3, 1926, filed by the late Senator Howell, which sets forth some of the reasons why, in that Senator's opinion, concurred in by Senators Nye, Trammell, Caraway, and Mayfield, the claim should not be allowed. Necessarily in giving the opinion of this subcommittee, some matters contained in these reports will be briefly touched upon.

Under legislation previously enacted, the Court of Claims has found the facts and advised the Congress as to the amounts which should be paid if, in the judgment of the Congress, these people should be reimbursed. It is said that 82 percent of the claims presented to the court have been rejected and 18 percent have been approved, and that the 1,358 claims contained in S. 3173 are the sole remaining claims. Two hundred forty-four of the items, amounting to $747,000, in round figures, are the claims of heirs, assignees, etc., of individual uninsured shipowners. Two hundred fifty-four claims, amounting to $1,914,000, in round figures, have been paid by insurance companies and they, under the principle of subrogation, are asking reimbursement from the Government. Eight hundred fifty-six claims, amounting to $577,000 in round figures, are claims made by the heirs and assignees, etc., of private underwriters. These claims have been before the Congress many times and have not yet, of course, been passed by both Houses in the same session and signed by a President.

We now set forth the basis for the claims in a general way without attempting to particularize. It is contended that commencing in 1793 and continuing for about 8 years the French Government seized ships owned by our citizens and sailing under our flag and their cargoes or destroyed them under the pretext that we had violated the treaty of 1778 by which we had agreed to go to the aid of France in the event assault was made upon the French possessions in the West Indies in return for the help given us in the Revolution. It is regrettable to be compelled to say that we did not live up to the letter and spirit of this, our first international undertaking. The matter, however, was honorably disposed of by our Government in the treaty of 1801. I quote from page 2 of the Howell report:

"As a consequence a treaty was concluded providing for a "firm, inviolable, and universal peace" between the French Republic and the United States, and our envoys, in accord with their instructions, secured a stipulation for the reimbursement of our citizens for losses, due to the French spoliations in connection with vessels and cargoes not "definitely condemned" by prize courts prior to the agreement's final sanction.

"The ratification of this treaty in 1801 met with general approval, except among certain interested merchants, shipowners, insurance companies, and underwriters, they insisting that France should make restitution irrespective of whether prize courts had passed upon captures, and that in not securing such compensation our Government had failed in its duty or, what was worse, had offset American private claims, properly payable by France, against the national claims of that country, and therefore, in the place of France, we should pay such claims out of the Treasury.

"The Government answered in effect that, as actual warfare existed between the nations, the demands of claimants were invalid, especially in those cases where prize courts had finally disposed of the property involved. The correctness of this view could not be successfully controverted; however, the claimants took the position that a declaration of war had not been made by either country and therefore war did not exist, in fact. This, however, was effectively combated by the citation of a formal opinion by the then Attorney General and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to the effect that there was actual war between the United States and France.

"Such, in short, is the genesis and character of these claims which, since the beginning of the last century, have been intermittently pending before Congress, down to the present time, and for the payment of which S. 63 makes definite and final provision."

There was no commitment on the part of our Government to pay the claims now asserted against it. The contention is that our Government bartered away possible rights of these claimants against the French in return for cancelation of our obligations to aid France under the treaty of 1778. Of course, all we did was to insist on reimbursement by the French to our shipowners for ships and cargoes not condemned according to international law. The basis asserted for these claims seems flimsy in view of our Court's determination that war existed.

Claims of this character are dependent upon the will of Congress. There is, of course, no legal liability. Equitable principles guide the Committee on Claims in their determinations. The statute of limitations is not involved because of the fact that the claimants never had a right of action against the Government. But at the outset your committee is faced with a consideration of the reasoning back of the statute of limitations. Why do we place a limit upon the time that a claimant may assert by action in the courts his claim against a person subject to being sued? I think Mr. Justice Story well expressed the answer in Bell against Morrison, where he said of the statute:

"It is a wise and beneficial law, not designed merely to raise a presumption of payment of a just debt, from lapse of time, but to afford security from stale demands, after the true state of the transactions may have been forgotten, or be incapable of explanation, by reason of the death or removal of witnesses" (1 Pet. U. S. 351; 7 L. Ed. 174).

The same principle is set forth in Corpus Juris on the subject of limitations of action in the following language:

"The basic principle most generally relied upon by the authorities is that statutes of limitation are statutes of repose, the object of which is to suppress fraudulent and stale claims from springing up at great distances of time and surprising the parties or their representatives when all the proper vouchers and evidences are lost or the facts have become obscure from the lapse of time or the defective memory or death, or removal of witnesses" (37 Corpus Juris 684–5).

It must be remembered in this connection that the French Government was the offending party and only the French Government had a full understanding and knowledge of the situation. But they were not legally responsible and therefore notwithstanding the fact that the Government of the United States, through its Attorney General, appeared in the Court of Claims, the real offender did not appear. The French had a special knowledge of the situation which could not be possessed and much less presented through the Government of the United States. Considerably over a hundred years intervened between the hearing and the occurrences which gave rise to the claims. Therefore, despite what was said by the witnesses at the hearing, we think it must be concluded that the same kind of a defense that could have been made shortly after the alleged damages occurred could not now be made. Thus the reasoning back of our statutes of limitations and repose apply, though there are no statutes which have direct effect or operation upon the situation. To now conclude that our Government could make an adequate defense against these various claims is to reach a determination that reasonable minds cannot, in our judgment, reach.

The second proposition that appeals to your committee concerns the recipients of these claims, of two classes—the heirs and assigns of original owners and the heirs and assigns of private underwriters. To now turn over to the fourth and fifth generation of heirs large sums of money not as a matter of right but as a matter of grace upon the part of our Government has little appeal to your subcommittee's sense of equity and justice. How much would have been taken by way of State and Federal taxes and local levies can never be determined. It is true that interest is not asked and might be considered in this connection, but how much of this sum would have been left for present-day heirs if it had been paid back in 1800?

As to the insurance and private underwriter claims (over 75 percent of the total) and on some other features of the bill your subcommittee desires to quote some statements made by Senator BROWN as found on pages 71, 72, and 73 of the record of the hearing. They were addressed to Mr. Scattergood, the vice president of the Pennsylvania company, the gentleman who probably has the greatest general knowledge of this subject matter:

"Senator BROWN. Mr. Scattergood, before you read your statement, I want to refer to one or two matters, so that you can answer the entire argument when you take up your subject. I am going to lay aside the question of the statute of limitations, the question of whether or not substantial justice is being done by paying these amounts to the heirs of owners, and the question of how much, by State and Federal taxes, and so on, these entire amounts might be diminished, and get down to the essential justice of the thing, because, after all, that is what we want to consider.

"I cannot get out of my mind the theory that the general public during the period from 1793 to 1801 really bore the burden of this loss. As far as the insurance companies were concerned, the record seems to show that they increased their rates immediately after the trouble arose. The record shows here that the rates went up from 2½, I think, to 33 percent. (See p. 4, Howell report.)

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. That was exceedingly unusual.

"Senator BROWN. Yes; but they did.

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. There may have been a peak; it may have been for a round-the-world voyage, you know. You cannot tell what.

"Senator BROWN. Of course, that applies to both the insurance companies and the private underwriters.

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. That is right.

"Senator BROWN. In other words, great risk was involved, and, as a result, great increases in rates were charged by insurance companies.

"It seems to me that the record also shows that the insurance companies involved, or at least some of them, paid extraordinary dividends.

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. No, Senator.

"(In this connection the Howell report shows the following: 'Mr. Scattergood's company, the Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, approximated an 8 percent per annum return on its underwriting profits during the period involved, and cleared about as much more on other business. The marine premiums written by the North American Co. to the close of the year 1793 amounted to $213,000; the losses paid, $38.484. The first 10 years of the company's operations showed an excess of premiums above losses of $536,569.14 without consideration of the profits from other sources. The company was incorporated in 1794, although it did business as an unincorporated association at the beginning of 1793. In the first year of its corporate existence it paid a dividend of 12 percent. During the next 4 years the dividends averaged approximately 28 percent, and in the next year 20 percent. This approximately covered the period involved."

Your subcommittee agrees with the statement of the Howell report that the French spoliations were a godsend to this company and other insurers of that day.

"Senator WILEY. Was that question ever raised in the Court of Claims, or was any equitable question of that sort raised?

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. Not in a single one did that apply.

"Senator WILEY. I feel that if they were somehow res adjudicata, it ought to be out of the picture here.

"Mr. SCATTERGOOD. It was simply made a matter of record, what the fact was in each case.

"Senator BROWN. The fact that the rates went up generally, it seems to me, demonstrates why the insurance companies made what might be characterized as extraordinary profits during that period of time and paid their losses.

"I do not think it is in the record, but I should like to have you discuss, either now or later, whether or not their freight rates did not likewise go up tremendously. It is impossible for me to view that situation without coming to the conclusion that if the insurance companies raised the rates of insurance premiums that these people had to pay, then likewise there must have been a rise in freight rates. If there was that rise in freight rates, it seems to me that the general result of that entire development would be that the general shipping public—which was the people of the United States—footed the bill; and it seems to me that while the shipowners lost individual ships and while undoubtedly some slight injustice will be done if we do not pay these claims to certain individuals, nevertheless, looking at the thing in the large way, the general shipping public of that period stood the loss, in the great increase of freight rates that must have resulted from these dangers, and in high insurance premiums.

"So it is difficult for me to be convinced that, upon an equitable basis, the taxpayers of the United States of this present generation should bear a burden which I think the general shipping public in that decade paid in increased freight rates and in increased insurance premiums."

In our judgment Mr. Scattergood did not answer these arguments. We now quote a part of the Cleveland veto message on a similar bill:

"These insurers by the terms of their policies undertook and agreed 'to bear and take upon themselves all the risks and perils of the sea, men-of-war, fire, enemies, rovers, thieves, jettison, letters of mart and countermart, reprisals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, or peoples of what nation, condition, or quality whatsoever.'

"The premiums received on these policies were large, and the losses were precisely those within the contemplation of the insurers. It is well known that the business of insurance is entered upon with the expectation that the premiums received will pay all losses and yield a profit to the insurers in addition; and yet, without any showing that the business did not result in a profit to these insurance claimants, it is proposed that the Government shall indemnify them against the precise risks they undertook, notwithstanding the fact that the money appropriated is not to be paid (as held by the United States Supreme Court) 'except by way of gratuity, payments as of grace and not of right.'

"The appropriations to indemnify against insurance losses rest upon weaker grounds, it seems to me, than those of owners; but in the light of all the facts and circumstances surrounding these spoliation claims, as they are called, none of them, in my opinion, should be paid by the Government."

Your subcommittee concludes as follows:

(1) That no adequate and proper defense on the part of the Government could be or was made in the Court of Claims because of the long delay between the occurrences giving rise to these proceedings and the hearing thereon.

(2) That payment now to heirs of the fourth and fifth generation of large sums of money, having consideration of the fact that in claims against the Government principles of equity apply, would be gratuitous rather than just to the claimants; and entirely unjust to the taxpayers of the United States.

(3) That during the period when the losses alleged occurred insurance rates were greatly increased. There is evidence that insurance companies made substantial profits greater than during the period preceding and following our trouble with France; and that it is, therefore, unjust to recompense insurance companies and underwriters whose rates were based upon then existing conditions, and that, therefore, no real and substantial loss was suffered.

Your subcommittee realizes that under the principles of subrogation the insurance companies would be legally entitled to recovery. But it must be recalled again that we are proceeding upon equitable principles dealing with an extraordinary situation and that no recovery should be allowed unless justice, rather than strict legal right, demands it.

(4) While there was no direct evidence adduced at the hearing and while Vice President Scattergood, of the Pennsylvania Co., says that the point was never before raised, it appears to your subcommittee that the wise Yankee shipowners of the period involved would not have paid higher insurance rates and taken the risks involved without increasing their freight rates. Your subcommittee believes that no conclusion founded upon reason alone can be more solid than this; that freight rates must have been adjusted to meet this situation, which extended over an 8-year period. If this be true, the general shipping public bore the additional burden through the increase in freight rates and the general public of that generation, rather than the individual shipowners and insurance companies, suffered and paid the losses through the higher rates that must have been charged.

(5) While many extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and committee reports can be made showing that individual Senators mainly, although not entirely, from the locality principally interested have urged favorable action upon these claims and that now and then one House, or both, passed the bill, the fact that in over a hundred years of effort no one has yet convinced a previous lawmaking authority of the United States that these claims should be allowed has great weight with your subcommittee. As the years go by and sessions of Congress come and go, the facts become more and more obscure. We think there is sound reason for the proposition that the failure of the lawmaking authority to act up to now should have weight with this Congress, which is further from the period when the losses occurred than any of its predecessors.

For these reasons your subcommittee reports the claim adversely.

PRENTISS M. BROWN.
ALLEN J. ELLENDER.

REPORTED FAVORABLY BY ALEXANDER WILEY, A MEMBER OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

I cannot agree with the opinion rendered by my associate, Senator BROWN, who reported adversely to the committee the bill of Senator WALSH, S. 3173.

This bill, if it became law, would dispose of the entire subject of the French spoliation claims. I am in favor of the bill and will state succinctly my reasons:

1. I believe that the last of the French spoliation claims should be paid as a matter of keeping faith.

I need not go into the history of these claims which arose out of the very "beginnings" of our country. It sufficeth to say that our Government regarded the claims that are here under consideration as just claims against the French Government and our Government used these claims, with others, to relieve itself from obligations under the treaty made in 1778 with France. In other words, this Government traded off, or bartered away, the claims of its citizens to secure immunity from its treaty obligations of 1778.

In 1885 Congress referred all the French spoliation claims against the United States for reimbursement to the Court of Claims. The court found that they were just obligations of the United States. The court found also that the claims we are now asked to consider were relinquished to France by the Government of the United States by the treaty of 1800 "in part consideration of the relinquishment of the national claims of France against the United States, and that the claimant is entitled to the following sum from the United States * * *."

2. The contention that the statute of limitations here applies, I believe, is invalid. I believe this Government, under the circumstances, is morally precluded from raising that very question.

3. I feel likewise in relation to the contention made that because the payment, if made, would now be made to the heirs and assigns of the original owners that this would not be doing justice and equity.

The Court of Claims passed upon the justice and the equity of these claims. The court was very strict in its demands in relation to proof, and the time consumed in the trial of the claims was something like 3 decades. The Government got the benefit of every doubt in every case, and only those who could substantiate their claims had their claims allowed.

4. As to the further contention, in Senator BROWN'S opinion, that the insurance carrier who paid the loss should not recover because during the period it had collected higher premiums—it seems to me there is no validity to that argument. The carrier had the claim against the French Government, having paid the loss, and this Government used that claim—the claim of its own nationals—to relieve itself of liability under an international treaty, and this Government was relieved, and it took away from its own nationals their claims. The equity here is all on the side of the claimants.

The statement in the conclusion of the opinion rendered, that no adequate or proper defenses on the part of the Government could be or were made in the Court of Claims, does not square with the facts. There was no presumption in the Court of Claims that these claims were valid, with the result that over nine-tenths of them failed for lack of proof. Time here operated to benefit the Government.

In recommending that these claims be paid, I am glad to join with that distinguished company of American citizens who have felt that justice done, even though delayed, is still justice. But if delay is used as an excuse to fulfill an honorable obligation, injustice results.

Madison, John Marshall, Webster, Sumner, Hughes, Hull, Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Coolidge all held that these were valid obligations upon the United States Government. Some of the claims have been paid, and by what rule or yardstick anyone can justify this breach of faith with our nationals is beyond me.

ALEXANDER WILEY.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

S. 4173. A bill for the relief or Lawrence Brizendine; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. WAGNER introduced Senate bill 4174, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. J. Res. 284. Joint resolution providing a method for the payment of amounts due to persons in the United States from foreign nationals in respect of the use in a certain foreign country of American patents; to the Committee on Patents.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. WAGNER introduced a bill (S. 4174) relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also, subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported the foregoing bill without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1941) thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9840. An act for the relief of Bela Karlovitz;

H. R. 9896. An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9897. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes;

H. R. 10087. An act for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation; and

H. R. 10112. An act to amend the Immigration Act of 1924, to require aliens admitted into the United States as officials of foreign governments either to maintain their status or to depart from the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of State.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 9840. An act for the relief of Bela Karlovitz; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 10112. An act to amend the Immigration Act of 1924, to require aliens admitted into the United States as officials of foreign governments either to maintain their status or to depart from the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of State; to the calendar.

ADDRESS BY ARCHBISHOP OF DUBUQUE ON KEEP AMERICA OUT OF WAR

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Most Reverend Francis J. L. Beckman, S. T. D., archbishop of Dubuque, at a Midwest peace rally held under the auspices of the constitutional government of Dubuque, Iowa, which appears in the Appendix.]

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of bills on the calendar be temporarily suspended, and that the deficiency bill, House bill 10104, be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to say to the Senator from Colorado that the Committee on Naval Affairs is about to meet to consider the nomination of Mr. Knox to be Secretary of the Navy. There is an amendment which I was authorized to offer on behalf of the committee. Would the Senator object to that amendment being considered first, so that I may attend the meeting?

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has asked unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Maryland, if I may, that after we have established this order of precedence I shall be glad to ask that it be waived in that one particular.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent to make an exception in the order we have established that committee amendments be first considered, in order that the Senator from Maryland may present an amendment to the bill which he was authorized by the committee to present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Maryland may offer the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

Enforcement of Tea Importation Act: For enabling the Federal Security Administrator to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897 (21 U. S. C. 41–50), entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," as amended, including payment of compensation and expenses of the members of the Board appointed under section 2 of the act and all of the necessary officers and employees, both in Washington and in the field, $30,094: Provided, That no tea, or merchandise described as tea, shall be examined for importation into the United States, or released by the collector, under said act unless the importer or consignee of such tea or merchandise, prior to such examination, has paid for deposit into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, a fee of 3.5 cents for each hundred weight or fraction thereof of such tea and merchandise.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, just a brief word of explanation. This amendment was unanimously authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to be offered on the floor. It grew out of this circumstance:

We have had on the statute books since 1897 an act known as the Tea Importation and Inspection Act. The purpose of the act was to prevent deleterious and unwholesome tea from coming into the United States. We import 90,000,000 pounds of tea a year. The tea coming in pays $100,000 a year in duties. However, some Members of another body wanted to strike out the appropriation of $30,000 for the inspection service and accomplished that result.

The Pure Food and Drug Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and the tea importers themselves, are anxious that the inspection service be continued. Otherwise, it is claimed, millions of pounds of deleterious and unwholesome tea would come into the country with no inspection whatever. Although the law requires an inspection, there would be no money to pay the inspectors.

The importers of tea have themselves offered to pay for the inspection. In other words, they will put up the $30,000 which will pay the Government's inspectors to inspect the tea, with the approval of the Pure Food and Drug Bureau, so that the deleterious tea which otherwise might come in will not be permitted to enter the country. That will be done by the medium of requiring a small inspection tax just sufficient to raise the $30,000, so that the amendment will cost the Federal Government not a single, solitary penny. It will prevent the importation of deleterious tea. The importers themselves are willing to pay the expense rather than to have no standard by which tea can be bought.

Dr. Campbell, head of the Pure Food and Drug Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, came before our committee and urged that some method of inspection be adopted, and this is the result of it. He said that unless this inspection took place, the tea that would come into the country would be injurious to health and not fit to drink, because it would not be packed and arranged and cartoned on the proper standard if there was no inspection. He urged the committee to put back the $30,000 of Government money; but members of the House, for some reason or other that I do not know, struck it out in conference, and insisted that it remain out. The importers themselves have now agreed to pay the cost of inspection. That is all there is to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General Appropriations—Legislative", on page 2, after line 3, to insert:

SENATE

For payment to Doris Gibson, daughter of ERNEST W. GIBSON, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For the payment of 21 pages for the Senate at $4 per day each, for the period commencing July 1, 1940, and ending with the last day of the month in which the Seventy-sixth Congress adjourns sine die at the third session thereof, so much as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

The unobligated balance of the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, contingent fund of the Senate, for the fiscal year 1940, is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 14, to insert:

The unobligated balance of the appropriation for folding speeches and pamphlets at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, contingent fund of the Senate, for the fiscal year 1939, is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives", on page 2, after line 23, to insert:

For the payment of 47 pages for the House of Representatives, at $4 per day each, for the period commencing July 1, 1940, and ending with the last day of the month in which the Seventy-sixth Congress adjourns sine die at the third session thereof, so much as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES OF 1941

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States, January 20, 1941, in accordance with such program as may be adopted by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, appointed under a concurrent resolution of the two houses, including the pay for extra police, fiscal year, 1941, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 2, to insert:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Books for the adult blind: For an additional sum required to enable the Librarian of Congress to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931 (2 U. S. C. 135a), as amended, fiscal year 1941, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Government Printing Office," on page 6, after line 14, to insert:

For payment to Preston L. George, William S. Houston, John G. Nalley, and William H. Wannall, messengers on night duty during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $900 each; in all, $3,600, to be paid from the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 11, to insert:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Selecting, testing, and placement of defense workers, Social Security Board: For all necessary expenses of the Social Security Board incurred under the supervision and direction of the Federal Security Administrator in providing special Federal assistance to and supervision of State employment services for the selection and testing for, and placement of workers in, occupations essential to the national defense, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, equipment and travel expenses, fiscal year 1941, $3,000,000, of which not exceeding $15,000 may be transferred by the Administrator to his office for use in carrying out the purposes of this appropriation: Provided, That in case any State employment service is found unable to render adequate service in connection with the fulfillment of this program, this appropriation shall be available subject to the approval of such Administrator, for the maintenance of special employment facilities and services.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the very large appropriation which was made for the Social Security Board, is it deemed necessary that there should be this additional appropriation of $3,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. The committee heard the members of the Board, and the committee was persuaded that the money would be wisely spent in the selection and testing and placement of workers in the public service. They are conducting a very large placement service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 5, to insert:

Emergency transportation loan fund, Social Security Board: To enable the Social Security Board, through employees designated by it, to make loans to workers selected for employment in occupations essential to the national defense to assist in paying the cost of travel expenses to the places where, in the judgment of the Board, their services may be utilized in employment in the interests of national defense, fiscal year 1941, $1,000,000. Such loans shall be made on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Board pursuant to regulations approved by the Federal Security Administrator. All amounts received as repayments on account of the loans herein authorized shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 18, to insert:

OFFICE OF EDUCATION

Vocational education of defense workers, Office of Education: For payment to States, subdivisions thereof, or other public authorities, through certification from time to time made by the United States Commissioner of Education to the Secretary of the Treasury of the name of such agency and the amount to be paid, such payment to be made prior to audit and settlement by the General Accounting Office, for the cost of courses of less than college grade, provided by such agencies in vocational schools pursuant to plans submitted by such agencies and approved by the United States Commissioner of Education, which plans shall include courses supplementary to employment in occupations essential to the national defense and preemployment refresher courses for workers preparing for such occupations selected from the public employment office registers; and (not exceeding 2 percent of this appropriation) for administration expenses in carrying out the purposes hereof, including printing and binding and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $16,200,000. The duties of such Commissioner, in carrying out the purposes of this appropriation, shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the Federal Security Administrator, and such Administrator is hereby authorized to transfer not more than $10,000 of the sum herein appropriated, to the Office of the Administrator for use in carrying out the purposes hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Works Agency—Public Buildings Administration," on page 13, after line 24, to insert:

Marine Hospital, Savannah, Ga.: Not to exceed $42,500 of the appropriation of $15,000,000 for construction outside of the District of Columbia, contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1941, is hereby made available for the purchase of the property now leased for a nurses' home at the Marine Hospital, Savannah, Ga.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 5, to insert:

Appraiser's Warehouse, Houston, Tex.: For customs appraiser's warehouse addition at Houston, Tex., $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 7, to insert:

Construction of public buildings, District of Columbia: The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, to acquire sites or additional land and to enter into contracts for construction, with or without advertising, of the following public-building projects in the District of Columbia, in amounts not exceeding the following respective limits of cost, which limits of cost shall include salaries, cost of supervision of construction, and inspection, furniture, equipment, moving expenses, extension of steam and water mains and removal or diversion of such sewers and utilities as may be necessary, and all other expenses required solely for the purpose of carrying out said public-building projects; and said Administrator is authorized to direct the preparation of all sketches, estimates, plans, drawings, and specifications, and to enter into all other contracts necessary for carrying out the purposes hereof; and he is further authorized, when deemed by him desirable and advantageous, to employ, by contract or otherwise, temporary professional, technical, or nontechnical employees, firms, or corporations, to such extent as may be necessary to carry out the purposes hereof, without regard to civil service or classification laws, or section 3709 of the Revised Statutes:

Social Security Board and Railroad Retirement Board Buildings: The limit of cost of $14,250,000 for the acquisition of land and construction of buildings for the Social Security Board and the Railroad Retirement Board, established in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938 (52 Stat. 1153), is hereby increased to $14,750,000, and the Federal Works Administrator, through the Commissioner of Public Buildings, is hereby authorized to negotiate with the contractor for the construction of said buildings for an addition to his contract, not to exceed $500,000, to provide all the necessary facilities and means to expedite the completion of the said buildings prior to the date of completion established in said contract, and the amount of $500,000 is hereby appropriated for the foregoing purpose.

Site and building, Federal Office Building (No. 2), Washington, D. C.: For acquisition of site and construction of a Federal office building for general use on land adjacent to East Capitol Street in the vicinity of Lincoln Park, in the District of Columbia, $4,500,000, within a total limit of cost of not to exceed $8,550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 16, to strike out:

West central heating plant, Washington, D. C.: To enable the Federal Works Administrator to provide for the construction, equipment, and furnishing of a central heating plant on Government-owned land, including facilities for fuel deliveries and storage, tunnel and steam lines and additional steam lines in existing tunnels, extension of water mains, and removal or diversions of such sewers and utilities as may be necessary, $500,000; and such Administrator is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for such project at a total cost not to exceed $3,900,000. Appropriations for the project shall be available for and be charged with all costs incidental thereto, including architectural, engineering, mechanical, administrative, clerical, and other personnel expenses; and the Administrator may, if deemed necessary, authorize the employment of temporary professional, technical, and nontechnical personal services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and the civil-service and classification laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 6, to insert:

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

In addition to the contract authorizations of $115,000,000 contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and $230,000,000 in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940, the Commission is authorized to enter into contract for further carrying out the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, in an amount not to exceed $75,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. ADAMS. This is for part of the building program of the United States Maritime Commission. The Budget estimate I think was double this amount, and the committee felt that under the existing conditions, and in view of the sinking of ships which has taken place, and which is apt to take place, there will be need for added shipbuilding.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence tending to show that this organization had constructed a number of vessels in conformity with the needs of American commerce?

Mr. ADAMS. There was no evidence to that effect before the committee.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence to indicate that the appropriations which have been made were warranted and whether or not we are building up, by reason of these enormous appropriations, an adequate merchant marine?

Mr. HAYDEN. This is not an appropriation, it is a contractual authorization submitted as a Budget estimate, and it was stated that inasmuch as the Commission was constructing ships, they should do it in an orderly way. Our experience when we had other trouble was that, instead of proceeding in an orderly manner to carry on construction, all of a sudden we had an enormous demand and there was tremendous waste. The committee under those circumstances authorized contractual authorizations of $75,000,000, rather than the $150,000,000 suggested by the Budget.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether or not, in view of the confused condition in the world today, and the enormous increase in prices of shipbuilding, it is deemed wise to make contracts now so that the merchant marine would be enlarged.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have seen no indication of any enormous increase in shipbuilding. There might be positive advantage in making contracts now rather than waiting until labor and material became scarce. The only record we do have before the committee is that for shipment from the United States, for example, of coal to South American ports, the rates have more than doubled, indicating very grave need for facilities for shipping between here and Latin America.

Mr. KING. I assume that the authorization will be a commitment which will impose a moral if not a legal obligation on the Government of the United States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, but it is better to do it in an orderly manner than to wait until the emergency arises and then pay enormous prices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "District of Columbia", on page 20, after line 7, to insert:

CORONER'S OFFICE

For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1940 for expenses, Coroner's Office, including the objects specified in the appropriation for this purpose in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent and Miscellaneous", on page 21, after line 5, to insert:

Reunion of United Confederate Veterans: Not to exceed $12,500 of the funds appropriated in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1941, is hereby made available for expenditure by the Commissioners in connection with the reunion of United Confederate Veterans to be held in Washington during the calendar year 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 11, to insert:

Judicial expenses, District of Columbia: For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1940 for judicial expenses, including the objects and under the conditions and limitations applicable to the appropriation for this purpose in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $977.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Courts—Judgments", on page 26, line 21, after the word "in", to insert "Senate Document No. 232, and"; and in line 22, after the word "Congress", to strike out "$10,886.51" and insert "$12,665.01", so as to read:

For the payment of final judgments, including costs, rendered against the District of Columbia, as set forth in Senate Document No. 232 and House Document No. 791 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $12,665.01, together with the further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 percent per annum on such judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture," on page 29, after line 4, to insert:

EXTENSION SERVICE

Administration and coordination of extension work: For an additional amount to coordinate the extension work of the Department and the several States, Territories, and insular possessions, fiscal year 1941, $15,000; such amount to be used for such work in improvement of the production, handling, and marketing of cotton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 11, to insert:

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY

Irrigation agriculture: For an additional amount for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, $13,980, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1941, for continuation of the United States Yuma Field Station at Bard, Calif.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 17, to insert:

Rubber investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations directed toward the development of rubber production in the Western Hemisphere, including production, breeding, and disease research; surveys of potential rubber-producing areas; establishment and operation of experiment and demonstration stations in suitable locations; acquisition of land for such purposes; construction and equipment of necessary buildings; travel; purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; employment of guides, translators, and other assistants by contract or otherwise; medical services; books, periodicals, and newspapers; rent; printing; and for all other necessary expenses, including personal services and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, fiscal year 1941, $500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer such sums as he may deem necessary to other Government agencies cooperating or assisting in such investigations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine", on page 31, line 4, before the word "to", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$1,100,000", and in line 5, after the numerals "1941", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this sum allocated for expenditure in connection with the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle shall be used in any State without the consent of the Governor of such State", so as to read:

Control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and plant diseases: For an additional amount to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of and for expenditures authorized by the joint resolution approved May 9, 1938 (52 Stat. 344), fiscal year 1940, $1,100,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941: Provided, That no part of this sum allocated for expenditure in connection with the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle shall be used in any State without the consent of the Governor of such State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado what justification there is for this appropriation of $500,000 for a rubber investigation. We have been making such investigations for an indefinite period of time, and it would seem to me by this time we would have all the data available with respect to the rubber industry.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, Secretary Wallace appeared before the committee, and we also had the representation of the Defense Council, which has been created. They pointed out that the United States consumes approximately one-half of all of the crude rubber produced in the world. At the present time the Americas provide only about 3 percent of the supply. In view of what may happen in the world, they felt it was wise that there be a development of the American supply of rubber rather than have us left dependent upon Sumatra and the Straits Settlements for the rubber.

In addition to that, they said that if we could encourage the cultivation of raw rubber in the Americas it would afford a trade arrangement which would be more helpful than has existed in the past; that is, that it would be to our advantage, in view of the possible emergency, as to future trade relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 8, to insert:

Pink bollworm and thurberia weevil control: For an additional amount for the control and prevention of spread of the thurberia weevil and the pink bollworm, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, 1941, $380,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Commerce," on page 32, after line 8, to insert:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Departmental salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1941 for salaries and other necessary expenditures of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at the seat of government, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1941, $50,000, and the limitation specified under this head in said act for personal services in the District of Columbia is hereby increased to $1,375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Bureau of Standards," on page 33, after line 22, to insert:

Optical glass plant: For enlarging the optical glass plant building at the National Bureau of Standards and for necessary additional equipment therefor, fiscal year 1941, $100,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior", on page 35, after line 20, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Printing and binding, Department of the Interior: For an additional amount for printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1937, $110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Indian Affairs", on page 36, after line 13, to insert:

Purchase of land, Wind River Reservation, Wyo., (tribal funds): Not to exceed $150,000 of the amount authorized by section 3 of the act of July 27, 1939 (53 Stat. 1130), to be expended from the tribal funds of the Shoshone Indians, Wyoming, is hereby made available for the purchase within Hot Springs County, Wyo., of lands or interests therein, together with improvements thereon, including water rights or surface rights to lands, located outside the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation but adjacent thereto, and owned by holders of grazing permits covering undisposed of surplus or ceded lands within said portion of the reservation, such purchases to be made subject to the provisions of section 6 of the act of July 27, 1939, supra.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 13, to insert:

Compensation of attorneys, Osage Indians, Oklahoma (tribal funds): For compensation of an attorney or attorneys for the Osage Indians employed under a contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior on February 18, 1938, $25,000, payable from funds on deposit to the credit of the Osage Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Justice—Office of the Attorney General," on page 41, after line 9, to insert the following:

For an additional amount for salaries, office of the Attorney General, fiscal year 1941, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 6, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, detection and prosecution of crimes (emergency): For an additional amount for salaries and expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, during the limited national emergency, in the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, and so forth, fiscal year 1941, including the objects and for the purposes specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1941, $500,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not become available unless and until H. R. 5138, Seventy-sixth Congress, is enacted into law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Colorado to explain to us for the RECORD the meaning of the words "during the limited national emergency" appearing in lines 9 and 10, page 42. I should like to know what a limited national emergency is.

Mr. ADAMS. I should be very glad myself to be able to give a satisfactory explanation. Those words came to us in the Budget estimate, and the committee accepted them. I have myself been disturbed—and I am not speaking for the committee—both as to what constitutes an emergency and what constitutes a limited emergency. I do not know the difference. I regret my inadequacy of explanation.

Mr. DANAHER. Would the Senator accept an amendment striking the word "limited" from the amendment in line 10?

Mr. ADAMS. Personally, I should be very glad to see it go out.

Mr. DANAHER. I offer such an amendment to the amendment, that the word "limited" in line 10 be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration and Naturalization Service," on page 45, after line 1, to insert:

Salaries, office of Commissioner: Departmental salaries: For an additional amount for the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1941, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 5, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, Immigration and Naturalization Service (alien registration): For salaries and expenses in conducting and maintaining a national registration of aliens, including such investigation of matters relating to alien registration as may be directed by the Attorney General, pursuant to the provisions of H. R. 5138, Seventy-sixth Congress, as finally enacted, including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; stationery, furniture and repairs, floor coverings, file holders and cases; purchase, exchange, or rental of punching, tabulating, sorting, and other labor-saving machines, including technical, mechanical, and other services in connection therewith; traveling expenses, including the attendance at meetings concerned with the purposes of this appropriation; miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing and telephones, postage, labor, purchase and rental of typewriters and adding machines and the exchange thereof and repairs thereto, streetcar fares, and press clippings; purchase, including exchange, and hire, maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding and all other contingent expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field, fiscal year 1941, $3,000,000, of which not to exceed $60,000 may be expended for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That the Attorney General may transfer to, or reimburse, any other department, agency, or office of the Federal, State, or local Governments, funds in such amounts as may be necessary for salaries and expenses incurred by them in rendering authorized assistance to the Department of Justice in connection with conducting and maintaining the registration of aliens: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not become available unless and until H. R. 5138, Seventy-sixth Congress, is enacted into law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this in view of the fact that we have heretofore made very large appropriations for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Obviously, in view of the disturbed conditions throughout the world, there will be fewer aliens admitted into the United States. There will, of course, be a larger number naturalized, perhaps, but fewer aliens will be admitted into the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this amendment grew out of the legislation which passed the Senate last week providing for the registration of aliens in the United States. There have been no appropriations made for this purpose heretofore. I must frankly say that I was surprised that the Bureau did not estimate that any more money would be necessary than is sought in this item to register all the aliens in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Labor," on page 49, after line 21, to insert the following subhead:

Division of Labor Standards.

For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards, fiscal year 1941, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1941, $120,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in the amendment for salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards, I should like to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute. On page 50, lines 5 to 8, I move to substitute the language I send to the desk for the language now in the amendment, because of certain amplification which seems to be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 8, as follows:

For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards, fiscal year 1941, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1941, $120,000.

And to insert the following:

Salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1941, for salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards, to be used exclusively for the promotion of an apprenticeship program, in addition to such sums as may be expended from the regular annual appropriation for 1941 for this purpose, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1941, $120,000, from which amount transfers may be made to other appropriations for the Department of Labor, 1941, as follows: $1,750 to contingent expenses, $15,875 to traveling expenses, $500 to printing and binding, and the limitation on the amount which may be expended under this head for personal services in the District of Columbia is hereby increased to $184,200.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 8, to insert:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics, fiscal year 1941, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1941, $75,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like also to substitute language for the committee amendment on page 50, lines 10 to 14; also a necessary amplification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the proposed substitute.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out lines 9 to 14, as follows:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 4, to insert:

SEC. 206. For the payment of claim allowed by the General Accounting Office pursuant to Private Act No. 107 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, approved July 25, 1939, which has been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884 (5 U. S. C. 266), in Senate Document No. 229, Seventy-sixth Congress, $165.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 10, to insert:

SEC. 207. For the payment of a claim allowed by the General Accounting Office pursuant to Public Act No. 505 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, approved May 2, 1940, which has been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 266), in Senate Document No. 228, Seventy-sixth Congress, $6,219.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, line 17, to change the section number from 206 to 208.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now offer an amendment on page 17, after line 3, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

The appropriations for the Work Projects Administration for the fiscal year 1941 shall be available for the prosecution of projects, subject to the approval of the President, for training for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national-defense purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to make it clear that the proposed amendment is not an appropriation of funds. It is merely authority for the President to approve projects for operation by the W. P. A. with funds which have already been appropriated to it under the relief act for the coming fiscal year. It will permit the undertaking of projects under the regulations of the W. P. A. that certified relief employees be given training in manual occupations in industries which are engaged in production activities for the national defense. It will afford an opportunity for W. P. A. workers to become trained and when trained to step off the relief rolls and accept jobs in private concerns which are engaged in national-defense production activities. Obviously, there will be a dearth of trained workers essential to the prompt operation in industries assisting in the national-defense program. It is manifestly necessary that the Government make efforts to remove those on relief to private enterprise, and this amendment, which I strongly urge, will be a step in that direction.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in the consideration of the relief bill the Senate adopted the language now offered by the Senator from Kentucky. In conference the House disagreed. I took the position that in view of the fact that the conferees on the part of the Senate had endeavored to maintain the position of the Senate, that we would not attempt to insert the provision in another bill unless the House conferees expressed a willingness to give consideration to it. The Senator from Kentucky has said that the House conferees have expressed such a willingness. I hope the amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am informed that the House conferees are willing to give it consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 10104) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on House bill 9007, making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
PAT MCCARRAN,
JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
H. C. LODGE, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. C. TARVER,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
BUTLER B. HARE,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
FRANK B. KEEFE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 9007, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 21, 1940.

Resolved, That the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39 to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday the House disagreed to the amendment to H. R. 9007, the Labor and certain Federal agencies bill. The House, by a large majority, again voted to disagree to the Senate amendment striking out section 702, page 63, of the bill, providing as follows:

SEC. 702. None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the salary of any person appointed to a non-civil-service position, under the appropriations in the respective titles in this act, if the effect of such appointment is to increase the number of non-civil-service employees from the State of residence of any such non-civil-service appointee beyond the number of non-civil-service employees to which such State is entitled, under the appropriations in the respective titles of this act, on a basis of population: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any position, the appointment of which is made by the President.

Mr. President, there is only one item in the bill that is in disagreement, excepting four section changes occasioned by striking out section 702. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the Senate recede from its amendments.

Mr. President, I do this very reluctantly. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was tremendously interested in this amendment and the conferees on this bill have had a number of meetings. It has been in conference since April 30. This is the last day in the session and, therefore, after the vote of the House in reference to the amendment yesterday there is nothing left for the Senate to do but to agree to it, otherwise this very important bill carrying something like a billion dollars would fail.

As one member of the committee, I was very much opposed to the House amendment for this reason: The amendment provides for no non-civil-service employees to be appointed from any State now having more than its quota. If this bill applied to all departments and agencies of the Government, I am inclined to support it, but making it apply only to the Labor Department and to the agencies associated with the Labor Department is to my mind indefensible, and it should not be agreed to, and the only reason that I am moving to agree to it now is that the House has served notice on us that unless this is agreed to there will be no labor and associated agencies bill at this session. Therefore I make the motion that I have made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill

(H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. SCHUETZ, and Mr. MAAS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that under the agreement had yesterday, the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], today would ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the consideration of the calendar under the order of the Senate, so that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] may move to take up the conference report on the relief joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House Joint Resolution 544.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has the right to make that motion at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that conference reports are privileged matters and that consideration of a conference report will not interfere with the pending business, except that the pending business will temporarily be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The Senator from Colorado has moved that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the conference report. The Chair is informed that the conference report was submitted to the Senate last night and read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not my understanding that the conference report was read last night.

Mr. McNARY. It was not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair was not present at the time the conference report was submitted last night.

Mr. BARKLEY. The conference report was submitted. It was not taken up, and no order was made for it to be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has moved that the Senate proceed to the present consideration of the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection. I did object to consideration of the conference report last evening. At this time I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Schwartz
Bankhead	Gerry	McCarran	Schwellenbach

Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this is the conference report on the relief joint resolution. The conferees had many long argumentative sessions with the conferees from the House. There were many amendments, and there was much controversy between the representatives of the two bodies.

On relief measures—in fact, upon all appropriation bills which have a multitude of items—there is conflict between the two Houses. The conference committee has a job which is anything but agreeable. It is never possible for the conferees from the Senate or from the House to come back to their respective bodies and bring back everything each body would like. In the course of the discussion necessarily there are concessions on both sides. Those who are interested in a particular amendment on which the conferees feel compelled to recede sometimes feel that the conferees might have saved that amendment rather than some other amendment.

In this case the Senate conferees are not happy over the result. We were forced to recede from certain amendments which we should like to have had in the joint resolution. For 3 days, until midnight one night, the conferees, in the utmost good faith, most earnestly battled. At one time we reached the point at which a report that the joint resolution would be in disagreement was ready to be submitted. It looked as though we could not agree.

The disagreements revolved around certain of the lesser items. The conferees from the Senate and from the House finally came to the conclusion that with a great relief measure, involving the feeding, clothing, and sheltering of the unfortunate, carrying appropriations of nearly one and a quarter billion dollars, and with the end of the fiscal year approaching, we could not stand out, regardless of the merits of our respective contentions, upon what were really minor matters, and allow the great objects of the joint resolution to be defeated or delayed. We contended and settled item after item, until we came to the last two items in the joint resolution.

With respect to amendment numbered 26, the House provision prohibited the lending of moneys appropriated by the joint resolution to farmers for the purpose of buying stock in cooperative associations. The Senate agreed to an amendment to strike out the provision. I voted for the amendment. We stood out on that amendment to the very last hour, and finally receded with an amendment which protects the right to make loans to farmers to buy stock in existing cooperative organizations. The House conferees had told us that they would not recede at all.

We again met the theater project. As Members of the Senate know, the House has taken a very determined stand that none of the relief money shall be used for theater projects. The Senate disagreed with that position last year. The Senate disagreed with that position this year. We sought to put all projects on a parity. The House conferees stated that the House would not recede from its position.

There were important matters in the joint resolution. One of the first was a provision which the House had inserted, which put a strait jacket upon the Work Projects Administration month by month, fixing the number of those who could be put on relief. The result was, as we saw it, that for a period of 5 months, if a great emergency should arise or if these should be a great increase in the demand for relief, the W. P. A. would have to say to those wanting to go on relief, "The Congress has tied our hands. While we have plenty of money, we cannot use it this month." We felt that there would not be much comfort in saying to a man, "You may starve this month, but if you wait a couple of months we shall have plenty of money." The Senate conferees felt that that amendment was of real importance. We struggled for it and succeeded in securing a concession from the House on that matter of importance.

For loans and grants under the Farm Security Administration the House had appropriated $115,000,000. The Senate committee and the Senate changed that amount, reducing the $115,000,000 of appropriations to $75,000,000, but providing for a loan fund of $125,000,000. In other words, instead of $115,000,000 available to needy farmers, the Senate provided $200,000,000. The House conferees were very insistent and finally agreed on $184,000,000. In other words, we succeeded in retaining in the joint resolution an additional amount of $69,000,000 for the benefit of the farmers under those provisions.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] introduced an amendment providing $100,000,000 for the Surplus Commodities Corporation, which amendment was agreed to in the Senate. On that question we were met with determined opposition. We did what men are frequently forced to do. We divided the amount. We secured a conference approval of $50,000,000. There was a mathematical difference of opinion, and the House conferees said, "You cannot have your way about it; we will compromise the matter." The Senate conferees agreed to the compromise. However, in that connection it should be recognized that the Senate put in the joint resolution an appropriation of $50,000,000, and provided that it should be expended in the purchase of the very things which the Surplus Commodities Corporation was buying for the purpose of distribution among refugees and unfortunate people in Europe. So, as a matter of fact, there is substantially the $100,000,000 which the Senator from Mississippi wished in the joint resolution. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that we are not satisfied with the result.

We had a controversy over certain amendments, which were among those last adjusted, in reference to the funds for the expansion of mills and plants. There has been a constant controversy in our committee and on the floor of the Senate and the House and in conference committees over the question of the use of W. P. A. and agricultural-relief funds for the maintenance and establishment of institutions which will compete with private industries. The effort has been, on the one hand, to avoid as much as possible conflict with private industries, and, on the other hand, not to restrict unduly the proper use of the funds for relief purposes.

We had a very definite controversy over that and resolved it in this way: The Senate agreed with the House provision which said—

> No funds appropriated in this joint resolution * * * shall be used * * * to purchase, establish, relocate, or expand mills, factories, stores, or plants which would manufacture, handle, process, or produce articles, commodities, or products * * * in competition with existing industries.

The Senate modified that by a limitation that the product should not be produced for sale. In other words, we pointed out to the House conferees, as was pointed out on the floor of the Senate, that had the House provision prevailed in its fulness it would have closed every sewing project under the W. P. A. and every other project on the W. P. A. which produces any article. Practically all the women on relief in the United States are producing articles which are used for distribution among the needy. We put the limitation in, that articles shall not be produced by projects for sale; in other words, which are to be used in competition with the products of private industry.

Mr. President, I think perhaps my voice has given me warning that I have talked enough.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I desire to make an observation with regard to the action of the conferees on this subject. Every day in the Senate I learn more of the mechanics and strategy of the passage of legislation. I thank the conferees on the part of the Senate for the fight they made. I appreciate what they were contending with. It is my information that the opposition to this $100,000,000 for the Surplus Commodities Corporation—and we will find out before the snow flies that it ought to be twice that amount—was not so much in the House as it was on the part of the conferees of the House, because the House has not had an opportunity to pass on whether they would appreciate this amount for this purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator recognizes that our only contact is with the conferees and not with the House?

Mr. BILBO. That is the point I was trying to make.

Mr. ADAMS. We have to accept them as the representatives of the House.

Mr. BILBO. That is the point I was making. I think the Senate conferees acted in good faith and made the best fight they could. I want to state that it is my information, from many persons who seem to be in a position to know, that if the House had a chance to vote on the $100,000,000 item they would approve that amount, but that the majority of the House conferees, who acted on their own responsibility, and not voicing the sentiment of the House or the majority of the House, opposed the appropriation. They were, however, gracious enough to split it 50-50. The mistake I made was in not asking for $200,000,000, so I would have had a horse trade in conference and obtained the $100,000,000 I desired. I will know better next time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think every Senator will have to concede that when the Senate is put up against the gun of the welfare and fate of those who are dependent upon W. P. A., it is not in a strategic position in which it can well defend the position it takes upon amendments to the relief appropriation measure.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I think the practice which has grown up with regard to this particular appropriation, of having it come in the form of a conference report either just before the end of the fiscal year or just before the time when Congress apparently has determined upon a recess, is very unfortunate, and is not sound legislative policy. Because of the wide scope which the joint resolution has come to embrace, as the relief appropriations have come along year after year, it raises questions of vital importance, not only those questions which have been discussed so far as the Senate's attitude toward W. P. A. is concerned but important questions of policy so far as other activities of the Government are concerned.

I suppose that I might be accused of having a lack of personal political interest in the two old party conventions which are to take place in the next few weeks, but I do say that I recall very well that in the emergency of 1932 Congress sat through both national conventions and transacted the public business. I think that such a policy should have been pursued at this time instead of creating the hectic situation which exists always prior to a recess or an adjournment of Congress.

In what I am about to say I should like to make very clear that I am not in anywise questioning the activity of the Senate conferees, but I do wish at this time to point out what has happened so far as two very important amendments which relate to the Farm Security Administration's program are concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Senator is confining himself to those two amendments, and I think that is wise; but let me call the Senator's attention to the general character of the report. The Senate conferees recede from only 12 amendments, as shown by the report. The House receded from its disagreement to 27 amendments, a little more than two to one.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have served on some conference committees myself, and the particular kind of a box score the Senator has given us does not mean anything. It does not show anything about the batting average of the Senate conferees.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it were the other way, however, we would hear much about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator would not hear anything from me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should be glad of that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have served on conference committees where the House has kept such a box score, and they always include in it recessions on amendments relating to paragraph numbers and typographical changes, and the recessions have absolutely no bearing on the important issues which are involved in conference.

In the second place, I do not think that a conference should be entirely judged, as to its success or failure, on the horse trading which went on in it.

What I wish to say is that, if this policy with regard to the timing of the relief bill continues, the Senate might as well abdicate its legislative functions on the relief bill and surrender them to the House, because time after time, in considering the relief bill, it is so timed that the Senate is put in the position where it must yield lest it deprive hungry people of bread.

Mr. President, it would be bad enough if we had to abdicate our legislative prerogatives and our legislative rights as representatives, in part, of the people of this country solely with regard to W. P. A., but more and more different types of projects and appropriations for other agencies have come to be included in this bill, partly, I presume, because it is not a general appropriation bill and for that reason is not subject to the tight rules which apply to general appropriation bills in both Houses of Congress. Nevertheless, the very fact that the relief appropriation does not come under the tight rules barring legislation from general appropriation bills puts the House and the Senate, and ultimately their conferees, in a position where they may affect greatly general public policy by the general type of legislation which they include in this measure. It has now reached the point where it is one of the most important appropriation bills, not only in the size of the appropriation which it carries but because, as I have already pointed out, of the multiplicity of governmental activities which it controls.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator will understand the reason for that situation, in that the Congress has been unwilling up to this time to pass any general statute creating a Work Projects Administration. It lives only from year to year, and for that reason, in the absence of any general legislation, the bill has become a carry-all. I have heard it said—and I think it would be a very wise thing—the matter originating in the House, that it should be provided that this bill should be treated exactly like any other appropriation bill; but the Parliamentarian of the House has ruled that it is not a general appropriation bill, and therefore all manner of legislation may be carried in it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think it is a general appropriation bill. All I am pointing out is that it provides an opportunity whereby one body or the other may tie into this vitally important appropriation bill legislative declarations of policy which affect adversely or favorably, depending upon one's point of view, vital and important activities of the Government, not only in relation to W. P. A. but in relation to a great many other agencies and activities of government.

Mr. President, I do not want to take any undue amount of time in this matter, but the Senator from Arizona has tempted me greatly to do so when he suggests that we are, and have been since 1933, treating the problem of unemployment in the United States as a problem which merited our consideration only from year to year, when any Senator or any other citizen of the United States who has made any study of this problem of unemployment and the problems which are related to it knows full well that it is not a year-to-year proposition. As a matter of fact, that is what is the matter with the entire approach which has been made to unemployment in the United States, not only by the Congress but also by the various subdivisions of government at other levels. There was never anything more preposterous than that we should expand the old English common-law concept of poor relief in an effort to meet a cataclysmic economic crisis; the proposition, in other words, that a man and his family must be stripped of everything they have before they are entitled to consideration for employment or assistance from government.

It is a great tribute to the people of the United States, to their stamina, their morale, and their character, that this cruel process of pauperization has worn away so little of their morale and their character. I know of nothing worse that can happen to a family than to have to go down through that cruel process of pauperization, the loss of home, the loss of savings, the loss of their life insurance, the loss of all those things which they have held dear until finally, stripped and destitute, they come under the eligibility rules which have been established by the Federal Government and by governments at other levels.

Mr. President, I shall restrain myself. I have talked upon this subject ever since 1930, all to little avail, in my efforts to get my colleagues in the Congress and the Government to consider this problem in its broad aspects and to adopt a comprehensive and long-time program to meet it.

But, Mr. President, in this bill there are carried provisions which, in my opinion, are of great importance in their effect upon another activity of government as distinguished from the problem of unemployment relief in the form of W. P. A. activities. The matters to which I refer relate to the program of rehabilitation being carried on by the Farm Security Administration in a small way, when compared to the magnitude of the problem, in an effort to make a beginning at least to check the economic factors which are separating people from the land, to check and to turn back in a small way those economic changes which are jeopardizing agriculture as a way of life in this country.

Mr. President, it seems to me a human characteristic that mankind never becomes aware of fundamental and sweeping economic changes until it is engulfed in the economic consequences of such changes. Unfortunately we do not seem to be able to appreciate the significance of those economic changes in time so that we can deal with these problems when they are of lesser magnitude, and therefore more within the capacity of the particular generation to treat of them.

But unless a broad, comprehensive program embodying measures to meet all the variant economic factors which are producing this separation of American people from the land is undertaken, and undertaken soon, and with vigor and vision, agriculture as a way of life in this country will ultimately be jeopardized, if not destroyed.

Mr. President, if there could be any criticism, if there could be any legitimate attack upon the program of the Farm Security Administration, it is that it deals with this problem on the receiving end of the line, so to speak. After people, oppressed by these many economic factors which I do not have time today to go into, are forced off the land, the Farm Security Administration, with its comparatively inadequate funds and program, endeavors to rehabilitate a few of them and to set them up on the land again.

When this program was first inaugurated, there were many sincere persons in and out of Congress who took the position with respect to people in this group that, without immediate aid, their morale, their fiber, their will to make an effort for rehabilitation had been destroyed. But if the Farm Security Administration's program has done nothing else, it has demonstrated that that attitude of despair and defeat toward this group of people was unwarranted and unfounded. These people have made a magnificent record in their repayment of the loans which have been extended to them.

Mr. President, as a handmaiden of this program of rural rehabilitation, the Farm Security Administration has utilized the device of cooperative effort. The Farm Security Administration did not inaugurate the policy of the Federal Government toward cooperatives. If I had the time today, I could cite statute after statute passed during the last two decades, under both Republican and Democratic administrations, by Congresses controlled by both of the old political parties, which have indicated the Federal Government's long-standing belief in cooperative activity.

It is perfectly logical and it is perfectly sound that the Farm Security Administration should utilize the cooperative organization as a means of enabling the people whom it is trying to rehabilitate to continue their successful activities upon the land, for of necessity these farmers must be rehabilitated upon relatively small farms.

But in the meantime large-scale farming operations in America are growing apace. They are bringing about an inexorable impact upon farming in the United States. They are utilizing all the scientific methods of production, power machinery, scientific agriculture in all its forms, large-scale operations on large units of land. Obviously, the small farmer, the farmer rehabilitated under the Farm Security program, cannot, out of his own economic resources, equip himself with the modern techniques of agricultural production, and yet he faces the situation where he is in competition with the larger operator of a farm.

What did the House of Representatives do? Here was a demonstrated program which was succeeding, even if upon a relatively small scale, and, as I stated a moment ago, and I now wish to reemphasive it, in order to make the program economically sound, in order to increase the repayments to the Federal Government, the Farm Security Administration was encouraging these farmers to cooperate so that they could pool their economic resources, so that they could take advantage of some of the modern techniques of agriculture, so that they might utilize more adequate marketing facilities and thus to place themselves on a more sound economic footing.

What did the House of Representatives do? It put into this bill for the first time a provision of general legislation providing that no funds could be loaned to any person for the purpose of stock subscription or membership fees in a cooperative organization.

Could the Government put itself in a more ridiculous position? First, it makes a loan to a farm family, helps it to get established on the land, helps it to begin the process of rehabilitation. Finding that it is a great success, and that one of the important reasons for the success is these cooperative activities, the Federal Government turns around and seeks to strike down this important phase of the program, thus making it more difficult, if not impossible, for the family to which the loan has been made to repay it.

That is not all, Mr. President. For a number of years in relief measures there has been a general provision designed to prevent the W. P. A. from setting up enterprises in competition with private enterprise. This time the House introduced more prohibitions and tightened up the legislation, so to speak. But the general blanket provision strikes further at the cooperative activities of the Farm Security Administration's clients.

I must acknowledge that the Senate committee saw the danger, struck out the new language which had been inserted by the House, and sought to leave the situation as it was under existing law. The Senate itself struck out the general prohibition against the use of any of such funds for memberships or stock in cooperatives. But when the conferees met, the Senate found the House adamant, refusing to yield. Up against the gun of recess today, and up against the end of the fiscal year on June 30, the Senate conferees felt that they must yield.

Mr. President, perhaps I am engaged in a futile effort, but this is not the first time I have registered my humble protest against the situation which has been developing for the past several years with regard to the timing of the relief appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator recognizes that the Senate is quite helpless in that matter. The timing is arranged by the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. I shall treat of that subject in just a moment. I recognize that the Senate cannot take up the relief appropriation measure until the House sends it over here; but I say that unless the Senate and its conferees are ready to draw the line somewhere, sometime, and let the House of Representatives take the responsibility for delay in relief appropriation measures, standing by the Senate's determination of policy and insisting that the House conferees take the matter back to the House for a separate vote or recede, instead of habitually receding, as the Senate has done over and over and over again because of the pressure of the termination of the fiscal year, we might just as well surrender our portion of the responsibility for legislative and governmental policies and accept the relief appropriations, including items which so vitally affect other programs of the Government, as they come from the House, without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Members of the Senate who are present to another situation which has developed, which caused me much personal disappointment. As Senators know, I have not had much experience with conference reports, but the Ways and Means Committee of the House has written a tax bill calculated to raise $1,007,000,000. The bill passed the Senate and has gone to conference. I have just learned that the conferees on the part of the Senate—and I have no doubt that they did the best they could to represent the views of the Senate—have given up on two very important matters.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator to make it more than two.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am certain of two. As the Senator knows, the tobacco taxes, for example, are still at wartime levels. The Senate unanimously disagreed to the increase in the tobacco taxes, yet I am told today that we are to have increased tobacco taxes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. There will be a tax of $3.25 a thousand on cigarettes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Even though we are still paying wartime taxes.

If the Senator will be good enough to yield again, another matter, which was thoroughly presented to the Senate, involves the increase in taxes on rectified whisky, which gives the small distilleries in my part of the country an opportunity to live. The vote in the Senate was 47 to 25, and now we must give up. We are to have a 30-cent tax. Notwithstanding the fact that we have a 33⅓-percent increase in the tax on the manufacture of old-fashioned straight Kentucky whisky, we are unable to obtain an increase of 10 cents on rectified whisky, which is made from alcohol, a small percentage of whisky, flavoring extracts, and sirups.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall have something to say on the conference report on the tax bill when that matter comes up. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the same situation has been created with reference to the tax bill as has been created with reference to the relief joint resolution. It is an old story so far as the tax bill is concerned. Every time it is desired to extend the excise taxes, which bear most heavily upon those with the least ability to pay, the renewal is always held back until just before the tax is about to expire, so that the Senate will be up against a gun, and will have to recede from its position.

I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that even though some Republicans may consider their convention important, I think that if the Senate wished to discharge its duty to the people of the country, instead of being placed in a hamstrung parliamentary legislative position, it would reject some of these conference reports and teach the House that the views of the Senate are as much entitled to respect as are the views of the House.

I know what is going on, Mr. President. I did not come to the Senate yesterday. I have been a Member of the Senate for nearly 15 years, and I was in and around the Senate a long time before that. I know that Senators have their reservations on the planes and on the trains. I know that along about 4:30 or 5 o'clock, when the "transcontinentals" begin to pull out of Washington, perhaps we shall not have a quorum present, unless my friend, the Democratic whip [Mr. MINTON]—I wish he would not pull his glasses down like that [laughter]—is very busy at the airport and has his deputy at the railroad station.

So, Mr. President, I shall have to satisfy myself with something to which all Senators are sometimes found to resort. I shall have to satisfy myself upon this conference report by a registration of my individual protest and my statement that I know that it is only the first step on the part of the House of Representatives—or at least of the committee which deals with this question—in further hamstringing the Farm Security Administration. We have given way this time. We have given way at other times. The House will profit by our papier mâché technique, and will ultimately drive a wedge into the program which will stall it if not destroy it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to make only one observation, in view of the remarks of the junior Senator from Kentucky. Seven years' experience in the Senate teaches me that the Senate never loses a battle and never wins a conference. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been a Member of the Senate for only a year, and I have never served on a conference committee; but I now serve notice that if I am ever on a conference committee, I shall not surrender the first time a shot is fired. I shall see if I cannot help to uphold the vote of the Senate on these important matters. I wish to compliment the Senator from Wisconsin on his determination and on his long and honorable service in this body.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. The point I wish to reemphasize is that it will not do us any good to say that we shall do better next time. It will not do us any good to say the next time we shall stand up and fight. The Senate has so often surrendered upon these matters that surrender has become a habit. Like all bad habits, it becomes increasingly difficult to break, especially when the leadership has decided upon a recess which will take us up to the end of the fiscal year, and thus create a parliamentary situation the same as though we had already arrived at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words in conclusion. I regret more than I can adequately express what has happened upon these two amendments, because, Mr. President, as I view the tragic lesson of what has happened in Europe, it should teach us that arms, ammunition, and implements of war are not enough for national defense. More and more, as the history of this period is revealed, it will be demonstrated that it was not only the failure of arms, ammunition, and implements of war which has brought the tragic collapse of democracy after democracy in Europe, but that it was the failure of those democracies to deal with the problems which confronted them internally which created the calamitous division, the weakness, which, when forced to meet the impact of a dynamic and functioning economy, no matter how we may abhor its objectives, caused them to crumple. They not only crumpled on the battle front but on the home front as well.

Mr. President, this is a time when we should be strengthening the processes of democracy, when we should be extending a welcome back into our economy to those millions of people who have been forced outside and who live on its fringes, fed or employed as a result of the gratuity of the Government.

Mr. President, rich as this Nation is in natural resources, in manpower, and in the character of its people, one thing we should have learned long ago, but which certainly we should learn now in the light of the tragic events in Europe, is that we cannot afford the waste that goes with unemployment; we cannot afford the waste that goes with driving people off the land. Today our most vital problem is to restore the dynamic qualities of life which characterized this Nation during its period of development. We cannot restore it, Mr. President, by striking at the woefully inadequate approaches which have been made to it since 1933.

There will be no opportunity prior to the reconvening of Congress for legislative repair of the damage which this conference report will wreak upon the farm-security program, but I serve notice now, Mr. President, that, insofar as I am able, I shall, upon the reconvening of Congress seek to secure legislative enactment which will repair the tragic mistake which the Congress, in my humble opinion, is about to make.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken if he is under the impression that the conferees reached an agreement as to the two amendments to which he has referred because of the desire on the part of the conferees to go to the Republican Convention. Neither the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Arizona, nor the Senator from South Carolina have any engagements in Philadelphia.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator thinks that is any answer to the argument, he is welcome to it. The Senator knows full well that the leadership have, first of all, been trying to adjourn the Congress sine die; when they could not do that, they wanted to take a recess until August; and when they could not do that, they have now agreed upon a week's recess.

Mr. BYRNES. I have nothing to do with the agreements that have been under consideration by the leadership, for I know nothing about them. I am referring only to the action of the Senate conferees.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to make simply this observation, which does not apply to the Senator from Wisconsin: Most of those who have been loudest in talking about not adjourning or recessing the Congress have been to me privately and "hoped to God" we would recess or adjourn. We may recess for a week or we may not recess over Monday; but the Senator's statement as to an effort to adjourn or recess Congress has no relationship, in my judgment, to the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. My good friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, is not in as good humor these days as he usually is, for in what I said I was only speaking in good humor, and he would have so construed it if he could have remained quiet for a few moments.

In justice to the conferees, it should be said that, of all the amendments in this bill, the two amendments to which the Senator refers and in which he is interested commanded more support from the conferees and took more of their time than did any others. I would not say anything about individuals, except that. Though the opposition to the Senator's attitude and to his proposal was most vigorous, the conferees who are members of the Republican Party, supported by a sufficient number of Democrats, continued these two amendments in disagreement for days. Republican members of the conference committee stood with the majority of the conferees unitedly in endeavoring to sustain the position of the Senate.

I believe the Senator is not informed of what occurred. I know that I devoted more time to them than to any other amendments in the bill. I advised the Senator from Wisconsin during the consideration of the bill in conference of their status and of what was being done, but the House conferees for 2 days showed so much feeling about this particular amendment, No. 26, and the other amendments as to loans to form cooperatives, that we finally reached the conclusion that any agreement would be impossible. A report was signed by the Senate conferees and the House conferees with an agreement upon all amendments in dispute, with the exception of these two amendments; and the Senate conferees were still fighting the fight of the Senator from Wisconsin.

I must say, because of the argument proposed by the House conferees, that I sent for the officials of the Farm Security Administration in order to secure additional information that would enable us more effectively to present his cause. I called on Members of the Senate who were not on the conference committee but who are familiar with the subject, to ask the effect of various proposals which were suggested as compromises. Finally, the Senate conferees refused absolutely to sign a report of any kind, solely because of the two amendments then in dispute in which, I think, the Senator from Wisconsin was more interested than any other Member of the Senate. The House conferees came back to the conference, and for about 2 hours we discussed these two amendments. Then the House conferees accepted the proposal which was embodied in the conference report, and which I am satisfied, when the Senator has an opportunity to examine it, he will conclude is a very good compromise on the part of the Senate, for it does this: The prohibition inserted by the House in the bill was that no loans could be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe or pay for stock membership in any cooperative association. The Senator from South Carolina made inquiry and found that if we insisted upon the matter going back to the House, the House would again take a position in favor of that provision. Therefore, the Senate conferees agreed to add these two words, "hereafter formed"; so as the conference report as agreed to and submitted to the House and the Senate, the prohibition which the House sought to apply to any loan to any person to subscribe or pay for stock membership in any cooperative will not apply to any organizations now in existence. Consequently, it will not hurt any organization or any borrower at this time. It will apply only to associations hereafter formed. I think the Senator will say that in this case it was the House that receded, to all practical intents and purposes, and it was a victory for the Senate conferees.

As to the other amendment, in order that the Senate may understand what it is about, let me say it is similar to amendment numbered 26. It arose, I think, because things are said to have happened in the Northwest which doubtless caused the Senator from Wisconsin to evidence the great interest he has displayed throughout this matter in these amendments. The House changed the existing law and struck out the words in section 33 "for sale"; so that, as the measure was passed by the House, the W. P. A. could not establish a plant which would manufacture or produce articles, commodities, or products in competition with existing industry. As the Senator from Colorado said today, the effect of that would have been to prevent the operation of the sewing rooms throughout the country, because their products are not sold, but are distributed for relief.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator said "W. P. A." Of course, section 33 is of a blanket character and refers to all the funds in the joint resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. I am going on to refer to the others. It applies first to that.

After much argument, so far as the W. P. A. was concerned, the House conferees admitted the strength of our position, and an agreement could have been reached; but there was no agreement as to the proposal that would affect the cooperatives, the argument being urged by the House conferees that their loans were made, and the persons receiving the loans went into erecting elevators and went into various kinds of business. Upon investigation, I found that if we left in the word "stores" it might affect cooperative associations of farmers who bought groceries or any other commodities, as we have encouraged them to buy them from wholesalers in order to get better prices and to distribute them among the members of the association. At one time we had under discussion language which would have eliminated those. Finally, the Senate persuaded the House conferees to yield and restore the words of the existing law, "for sale," so that there is no prohibition against any plant or store for any articles, provided they are not for sale. The existing law differs very little from that which is now agreed to in the conference report.

I really believe the Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to great credit for the fight he has made for the cooperatives, particularly in his section; and I think the Senator owes a debt of gratitude to the conferees for winning his fight, for that is what he has done, in my honest opinion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say just one word in conclusion.

I find small satisfaction in the amendment which the Senate conferees agreed to with regard to section 2 (e) in stopping the formation of any more cooperatives for low-income farmers; and I find little comfort in what the Senator says about section 33, because it is not a question of Government policy that is involved. We now have a bank of cooperatives with 10 districts in the United States to which farm organizations representing farmers' cooperatives may go and borrow money on a large scale. The relatively better situated farmers are not denied and are not prevented in any way from getting these cooperative loans. In fact, the bank of cooperatives is there to encourage them to get them. When it comes to the farmers who are being rehabilitated, when it comes to the farmers in the lower-income groups, they are to be denied that advantage. They are to have their programs curtailed, restricted, and hamstrung; and I cannot consider that a victory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes.

REVENUE BILL OF 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Russell

Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 30, 46, and 47.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Section 1700 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out 'until July 1, 1941, is less than 41 cents' and inserting in lieu thereof 'until July 1, 1940, is less than 41 cents, and after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945, is less than 21 cents', and by striking out 'is less than 41 cents, until July 1, 1941' and inserting in lieu thereof 'is less than 41 cents until July 1, 1940, and is less than 21 cents after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945'."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 212. Cigarettes.

"Subchapter A of chapter 15 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sections:

"'SEC. 2004. Defense tax for five years.

"'In lieu of the rates of tax specified in section 2000 (c) (2), the rates of tax for the period after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945, shall be $3.25 and $7.80, respectively.

"'SEC. 2005. Floor stocks tax.

"'(a) Floor Stocks Tax.—Upon cigarettes subject to tax under section 2000 (c) (2) which on July 1, 1940, are held by any person for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor stocks tax at a rate equal to the increase in rate of tax made applicable to such articles by section 2004.

"'(b) Returns.—Every person required by this section to pay any floor stocks tax shall, on or before August 1, 1940, under such regulations as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall prescribe, make a return and pay such tax, except that in the case of articles held by manufacturers and importers the Commissioner may collect the tax with respect to all or part of such articles by means of stamp rather than return, and in such case may make an assessment against such manufacturer or importer having tobacco tax stamps on hand July 1, 1940, for the difference between the amount paid for such stamps and the increased rates specified in section 2004.

"'(c) Laws Applicable.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 2000 shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with this section, be applicable with respect to the floor stocks tax imposed by subsection (a).'"

The Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(1) Upon all distilled spirits produced in or imported into the United States upon which the internal-revenue tax imposed by law has been paid, and which on July 1, 1940, are held and intended for sale or for use in the manufacture or production of any article intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor stocks tax of 75 cents on each proof-gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof-gallon. The tax imposed by this subsection shall not apply to 100 wine gallons of the retail stocks of distilled spirits held by a person on premises as to which such person has incurred occupational tax as a retail dealer in liquors for the period beginning on July 1, 1940, and as to which no other occupational tax with respect to dealing in distilled spirits has been incurred by such person for a period beginning on such date.

"(2) Every person required by this subsection to pay any floor stocks tax shall, on or before August 1, 1940, under such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe, make a return and pay such tax. Payment of the tax shown to be due may be extended to a date not later than February 1, 1941, upon the filing of a bond for payment thereof in such form and amount and with such surety or sureties as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. Every retail dealer in liquors (even though not liable to pay such tax) shall make the return required by this paragraph."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 401. Section 205 of the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: 'If the amount of the deficiency in income tax for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1939, attributable to compensation paid indirectly by the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, is paid on or before March 15, 1941, then with respect to failure to pay such amount or make return of such compensation: (a) No criminal penalty shall apply; and (b) the additions to tax provided in sections 291 and 293 of the Internal Revenue Code shall not apply.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the conference report on the tax bill has been submitted to the Senate; it has been adopted by the House and is now before the Senate. I will make a brief explanation of the report.

The conferees agreed to an increase in the tax on small cigarettes from $3 to $3.25 per thousand, and on large cigarettes from $7.20 to $7.80. The House bill increased the tax from $3 to $3.50, and we agreed to divide the difference in the increase.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. When the tax bill was before the Senate, I left the impression upon those who were kind enough to listen to my statement that I favored the higher tax. The Senate acted in conformity with the opinion of the committee and left the tax at $3. I understand the conferees have divided the difference, and that the tax will be $3.25.

Mr. HARRISON. The tax on small cigarettes will be $3.25 per 1,000.

Mr. McNARY. That represents an increase of 25 cents over current law?

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the fact that in arriving at agreements between the two Houses it is necessary for one House or the other to yield on various items in a bill. I am satisfied the Senator from Mississippi and other Members of the Senate on the conference committee did the best they could to maintain the Senate's position with respect to these taxes.

I cannot refrain from expressing the regret that I feel that, in view of the fact that tobacco products, including the cigarettes referred to, still bear the wartime rates of taxation, it was necessary for the conferees to yield even to the extent of 25 cents per 1,000.

I realize that the House conferees were somewhat adamant with respect to at least part of these taxes. I think they would have been justified in yielding entirely on the tobacco taxes, for the reasons which we expressed on the floor of the Senate a few days ago. But I appreciate the fact that on other types of tobacco products the Senate conferees were able to secure consent of the House conferees to yield, and, as I understand, the only tobacco tax which is increased is the 25 cents per 1,000 on small cigarettes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unjust as I think that is, I wish to say that I appreciate the measure of success the Senate conferees were able to secure in eliminating these other taxes. I hope that when another tax bill shall be under consideration, we may be able to impress the other House with the fact that certainly at this stage we should not make these taxes on tobacco greater than they were for the World War purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senate conferees carried out their obligation as conferees and tried to strike out all the tobacco-tax increases, but the House conferees were adamant, and we got the best compromise we could.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the situation which confronted the Senate conferees. While I am on my feet, I may say also that I regret that I am informed the House conferees were adamant and would not yield at all, under any circumstances, in the matter of the tax on rectified liquor which the Senate inserted, which in some measure, and only in a small measure, compensated for the increase of 75 cents a gallon on other types of liquor carried in the bill. It seems to me that if there is any justification for a 30-cent tax under the old law, there would be even greater justification for a 40-cent tax under the increase carried in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Personally, that is the position we took, representing the Senate, because we had a record vote on that particular amendment involving rectified spirits, but the House conferees were adamant, as the Senator States, so we had to yield on that amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish to add my word of protest to that of my colleague with respect to the increase in the cigarette tax. I know the distinguished Senator from Mississippi did good work during these trying days, and did a remarkably fine job in preparing the tax bill, and the conferees on the part of the Senate did all they could to sustain the position of the Senate. But the action of the conferees in this particular matter has given me considerable pain when I consider the fact that the Senate unanimously disagreed to any increase in taxes on cigarettes and tobacco, because it must be remembered that they are still bearing war-time taxes, the taxes having never been taken off those products from 1917 to the present time.

The protest of my colleague has been very effective, except that we still must have some increases in taxes, which will be reflected, in my opinion, certainly they will be more reflected, if continued, in adverse prices to farmers of our section of the United States for their tobacco.

I do wish I could be more effective, and have the action reversed, just as the Senate agreed the other day that the tax should not be increased, but I know that the Senator from Mississippi and his conferees probably did the best they could under the circumstances.

I cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing my regret and my opposition also, on the failure to increase by 33½ percent the tax on rectified whisky, which will result in a great deal of damage to small distilleries in my section of Kentucky.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what amount of revenue will accrue from this increase of 25 cents on cigarettes?

Mr. HARRISON. The increase of 25 cents, that is, from $3 to $3.25, will result in $35,000,000 of additional revenue.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one further word, I hope that in the future, in the consideration of tax bills—as we most certainly will have them in the future, perhaps in the immediate future—the chairman of the Finance Committee and his associates will consider retaining taxes in places other than on tobacco.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I have stated, the Senate conferees were obliged to recede on the amendment proposed by the Senate with respect to the increase in the tax on rectified spirits from 30 cents to 40 cents a gallon.

With respect to the admissions tax the following change was made: The House bill provided for the exemption on tickets of admission costing 30 cents and less. The present Federal law provides for exemption on tickets of 40 cents and less.

The Senate provided for a tax on all admissions over 9 cents, taxing admissions between 10 and 20 cents at 1 cent, and 20 cents or more at 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof. A compromise was reached exempting admissions of 20 cents and less. On admissions over 20 cents a tax is imposed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Was any action taken in the conference with respect to the matter of seating capacity of a theater? For instance, was a theater whose seating capacity was less than a certain number exempted?

Mr. HARRISON. No; there was no action of that sort taken.

Mr. McCARRAN. I had in mind exemption for the smaller theater.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why this compromise was worked out was to try to help the smaller theaters. That is why the exemption of 20 cents and less was made.

Returning to liquor taxes. With respect to that matter, of course there was no disagreement on the increased liquor tax, because the Senate had the same provision as carried in the House bill. The House bill provided for a 100-gallon exemption in the case of retail stocks. The Senate bill contained no exemption. The Senate receded on its amendment in that respect. So, as to the retailers there will be 100-gallon exemption from the floor-stock tax.

With respect to fermented malt liquors or beer, the House placed no floor-stock tax on retailers. The Senate, however, struck out the exemption of retailers from the floor-stocks tax and inserted a modified exemption of retail stocks, providing that the exemption shall apply only to retail stocks, which on July 1, 1940, are held on retail premises. Such premises are confined to premises with respect to which the dealer is a retail dealer exclusively. If, with respect to such premises the dealer is a wholesale dealer or brewer also, the exemption is not allowed as to any malt liquor held on the premises. The House agreed to the Senate amendment.

With respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] as to not applying the income tax for 1935–39 to State employees paid out of Federal funds, the Senate and the House conferees agreed upon a compromise that in such cases the tax would be imposed but no penalties would be assessed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will recall that the tobacco tax is in the Senate bill. There was some controversy in the Finance Committee and considerable discussion with reference to the failure of the bill to include a floor tax on tobacco held by retailers in contradistinction with tobacco held by wholesalers, which was subject to a floor tax. Now the cigarette tax has been put back in the bill. How about the floor tax on cigarettes as applied to retailers?

Mr. HARRISON. The floor tax on cigarettes applies to retailers.

Mr. BROWN. Wholesalers and retailers.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; to both the wholesaler and the retailer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Michigan will remember that when the Senate committee struck out the tax on tobacco I suggested that we put in a device whereby that matter would be considered.

Mr. BROWN. And that was used——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was used to extend the conference agreement with respect to the tax on cigarettes to the retailer.

Mr. BROWN. So as to include stocks in the hands of retailers on July 1.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So as to prevent advantage being taken by the larger purchasers.

Mr. BROWN. I thoroughly approve of that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. As to the La Follette amendment dealing with excess-profits taxes and the Connally amendment dealing with war-profits taxes, the Senate conferees fought quite a while to sustain them. The House conferees were adamant in their opposition to those two amendments. They thought there ought to be further study of those important matters. We were told by the Treasury Department that it would take them at least 60 days to prepare an excess-profits tax bill free from loopholes.

So the House conferees, as well as the Senate conferees, agreed to a resolution expressing the sentiment of the conferees as to this matter. We did not write it into conference report although we were perfectly willing to do so. It is as follows:

Resolved by the committee of conferees on H. R. 10039, That the committee is firmly of the opinion that an excise-profits tax should be enacted as soon as possible, and to be made applicable to the calendar year 1940 and all taxable years beginning in 1940, and to all subsequent years. In pursuance of this policy the Treasury Department is urgently requested to submit to the Ways and Means Committee of the House and to the Finance Committee of the Senate not later than October 1, 1940, a plan for such tax, together with supporting data and drafts for proposed legislation.

That resolution was adopted unanimously, with the exception that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] did not feel disposed to support it. He did not vote against it. All the other conferees voted for it.

So in connection with working out the matter of taxing excess profits we hope to get the necessary data at as early a date as possible.

The Senate conferees also were forced to recede on the war-profits tax amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

I shall be glad to answer any questions that may be asked concerning the conference report. That is all I desire to say. I may say that if the conference report is not adopted before the first day of Joly the Government will suffer a considerable loss of revenue. Throughout the bill there are provisions for taxes beginning on the first day of July. And the 10-percent supertax on gifts and estates are effective immediately after the passage of the bill. So every day of delay costs the Government a considerable sum of money. I hope the conference report will be adopted. The House has already adopted it.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word about the fact that I did not vote for the resolution which the Senator from Mississippi just read. There was not really any formal vote on the matter, and while I appreciate the fact that the conferees registered their wholehearted support for an excess-profits tax in futuro, I feel that the only efficacy of the resolution is that corporation-tax payers may ascertain the attitude of the members of the House and Senate conferees as of June 21. If the taxpayers look up the names of those who are signed to the conference report, they will find that on that date the conferees were in favor of an excess-profits tax, and that they instructed, or expressed the request to the Treasury Department, that it get ready on or before October 1 to submit an excess-profits tax to the Congress.

Mr. President, I realize that the Senate is anxious to dispose of this matter, but I want once again to register my emphatic disapproval of the course which has been pursued by the conference and the actions already taken by the House and the action which I presume will be taken by the Senate.

Mr. President, the bill reaches down into the pockets of the people in the lower-income brackets, and takes from them purchasing power which they can ill afford to spare in these critical times. The only justification for that, Mr. President, is a tax bill which calls upon all taxpayers, in accordance with their ability to pay, to carry their fair share of the cost of the Government, and the staggering cost of the mounting appropriations for national defense.

Much has been said in the public prints and on the floor of the Senate and of the House about national unity. We cannot have national unity unless we adopt equitable policies of Government. The President of the United States has announced that he has under consideration a program for compulsory service of all kinds and descriptions for the youth of America. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] has introduced a bill requiring compulsory military service for every man in the United States between the ages of 21 and 65.

The amendment which I offered, and in which I have no pride of authorship, was predicated upon the 1921 tax. The Treasury Department and some of my able colleagues on the committee do not think the amendment is yet in perfect shape. If we adopt compulsory military service laws, shall we provide that because some individual may be inconvenienced we give him an exemption? Oh, no. We are adopting a peculiar policy when we treat individuals differently than we treat corporations that are making excess profits in a time of national emergency. In my judgment, such a policy will weaken the faith of the people in democracy at a time when we should be concentrating our efforts to maintain democracy. I have said upon several occasions, and I repeat, that only a dynamic, functioning economy in America will uphold the Republic. Confidence on the part of the men and women of America will not be restored or revitalized by the passage of a bill reaching down into the pockets of the low-income groups, and failing to require corporations making excess profits out of the Nation's defense crisis to contribute their share. It will be small comfort to the taxpayer in the low-income brackets; it will be small comfort to the children saving up their pennies in order that they may attend a movie, to read a resolution adopted by the Ways and Means Committee and by the conferees on the tax bill asserting that Congress believes in excess-profits taxes and hopes to have such a measure ready by next October.

Day after day the people will be reading about the letting of negotiated contracts without competitive bidding. They will be reading about the billions of dollars going out of the Treasury of the United States into the coffers of corporations. It will be small satisfaction to them, while they are digging down to get the pennies to pay these taxes, to be told that some time later we are going to levy an excess-profits tax.

I pleaded with the Congress to enact this amendment based on the 1921 act, and based on the experience of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 with the excess-profits tax. I understand that the Treasury Department has 304 questions of policy which must be answered before it is ready to approve an excess-profits tax. Mr. President, I could get together a group of tax experts who, when the Treasury gets its 304 questions answered to its satisfaction, could have 608 more to be discussed. Of course, this is a complicated subject. We may debate the theories of taxation in the high abstractions of the expert technique from now until kingdom come without resolving all the questions of policy which are involved or which may arise.

As I stated in discussing the conference report on the relief joint resolution, I see no necessity for the Congress to recess today. We sat through the crisis of 1932. Both conventions met, nominated their candidates, adopted their platforms, and adjourned while Congress continued to function. Is this emergency any less grave? Have the people any less right at this time to ask their representatives in Congress to devote themselves to the public business? Apparently the leadership of this Congress and this administration have determined otherwise.

Mr. President, I venture the prediction that in the light of all the circumstances surrounding its enactment this tax bill will go down in history as the worst makeshift and the most inequitable tax bill which has been enacted in Congress in two decades. It comes at a time when we should be functioning as the representatives of the people, giving them a demonstration that, in our day-to-day determination of policy in this national emergency, we are adopting policies which are designed to strengthen the faith of the people of the country in the democratic process, and that we are taking as our guiding star the principle of distributing the sacrifices which the people are required to make in this emergency in accordance with their ability to pay and their ability to serve the Republic.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I hope we may have a yea and nay vote on the question of agreeing to the conference report. I wish to register my emphatic disapproval of the conference report, and I hope the Senate will go on record, for I believe that there is at stake in the conference report a vital and important question of equity and justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOLT. What is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HOLT. Those in opposition should vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in opposition should vote "nay."

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE. I desire to have it made a matter of record that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent, serving as a representative of the Senate at the funeral of his late colleague Senator Gibson.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are attending the funeral of the late Senator Gibson, of Vermont, in that State.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is detained on official business.

I wish to announce that the following Senators would vote "yea" if present:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senators from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY and Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea." I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am not advised how he would vote if present and voting. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who, I am advised, if present and voting would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I am not advised how he would vote if present and voting. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who, I am advised, if present and voting would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is necessarily detained. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MEAD. My colleague the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is detained in a conference in the House of Representatives. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] are members of the committee attending the funeral of the late Senator Gibson of Vermont.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are necessarily detained. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained in a conference on the naval-expansion bill. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained in committee meetings.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—45

Adams	Chavez	Herring	Radcliffe
Andrews	Clark, Idaho	Hill	Schwartz
Ashurst	Donahey	Hughes	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Barbour	George	King	Smith

Byrd	Lucas	Stewart
Connally	McNary	Taft

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I appreciate the difficulties the conferees had to contend with in the preparation of the conference report. I have voted for the adoption of the report, but I do not want it to pass without expressing my individual opinion that we yet have not nearly gone so far as we should go in the way of a defense budget.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HILL, and Mr. HAWKS were appointed managers on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2047. An act to divest prize-fight films of their character as subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes;

S. 3927. An act to provide for the administration of the Washington National Airport, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 260. Joint resolution to make emergency provision for the maintenance of essential vessels affected by the Neutrality Act of 1939, and for adjustment of obligations with respect to such vessels; and

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, June 22, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 2047. An act to divest prize-fight films of their character as subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes;

S. 3927. An act to provide for the administration of the Washington National Airport, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 260. Joint resolution to make emergency provision for the maintenance of essential vessels affected by the Neutrality Act of 1939, and for adjustment of obligations with respect to such vessels; and

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend section 4 of Public Resolution Numbered 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 9, 10, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, and 32; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

The report was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senate now, under the order previously made, will resume the consideration of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 9063) authorizing the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency to transfer certain property in San Francisco, Calif., to the city and county of San Francisco for street purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

The bill (S. 4057) to authorize the acquisition of certain additional lands for military purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the House yesterday passed a similar bill, House bill 9897. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4057 will be indefinitely postponed.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The bill (S. 3768) to amend section 40, National Defense Act, as amended, relating to the organization of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, so as to provide for an exception with respect to the University of Alaska, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is on the calendar, No. 1971, an identical House bill. Without objection, the House bill will be considered in lieu of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9391) to amend section 40, National Defense Act, as amended, relating to the organization of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, so as to provide for an exception with respect to the University of Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3768 will be indefinitely postponed.

ADMINISTRATION OF NATIONAL GUARD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3619) relating to changes in the administration of the National Guard of the United States bearing on Federal recognition, pay, allotment of funds, drill, training, etc., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

SECTION 1. That section 90 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. That funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase and issue of forage, bedding, shoeing, and veterinary services, and supplies for the Government animals issued to any organization, and for animals owned or hired by any State, Territory, District of Columbia, or National Guard organization, not exceeding the number of animals authorized by Federal law for such organization and used solely for military purposes, and for the compensation of competent help for the care of material, animals, armament, and equipment of organizations of all kinds, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

"The compensation paid to caretakers who belong to the National Guard, as herein authorized, shall be in addition to any compensation authorized for members of the National Guard under any of the provisions of the National Defense Act.

"Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, the material, animals, armament, and equipment, or any part thereof, of the National Guard of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or organizations thereof, may be put into a common pool for care, maintenance, and storage; and the employment of caretakers therefor, not to exceed 15 for any one pool, is hereby authorized.

"Commissioned officers of the National Guard shall not be employed as caretakers except that, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, one such officer not above the grade of captain for each heavier-than-air squadron, and one such officer not above the grade of captain for each pool, may be employed. Either enlisted men or civilians may be employed as caretakers, but if there are as many as two caretakers in any unit, one of them shall be an enlisted man.

"Funds hereafter appropriated under the provisions of the National Defense Act, as amended, for the support of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, shall be supplemental to moneys appropriated by the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, for the support of the National Guard, and shall be available for the hire of caretakers and clerks: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall, by regulations, fix the salaries of all caretakers and clerks hereby authorized to be employed, and shall also designate by whom they shall be employed: And provided further, That payments heretofore made which now stand disallowed or would hereafter be disallowed but for this act are hereby ratified and validated as to the disbursing officers making the same, in such amounts as the Secretary of War may determine have been actually expended in the administration, supply, maintenance, and training of the National Guard, and the determination of the Secretary of War shall be final and conclusive; and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to allow credit in the accounts of said disbursing officers for and on account of such payments in said amounts."

SEC. 2. That section 92 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 92. Training of the National Guard: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, each company, troop, battery, and detachment in the National Guard shall assemble for drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, not less than 48 times each year, and shall, in addition thereto, participate in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice, at least 15 days in training each year, including target practice, unless such company, troop, battery, or detachment shall have been excused from participation in any part thereof by the Secretary of War: Provided, That an assembly for drill and instruction may consist of a single duly ordered formation of a company, troop, battery, or detachment, or, when so authorized by the Secretary of War, a series of duly ordered formations of subdivisions or parts thereof, but in the latter case the series of formations of subdivisions or groups must comprehend and include the entire organization, and must be included within the time limit of 7 consecutive days within a calendar month. The sum total of the attendance at all the separate consecutive formations announced as constituting that assembly shall be counted as the attendance at the actual military assembly for the required period of time; but no officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man shall be counted more than once, nor receive credit for more than one required period of actual military attendance even though he may have attended more than one of the formations which constitute the assembly for the required period of time: Provided further, That credit for an assembly for drill or for indoor target practice shall not be given unless the number of officers and enlisted men present for duty at such assembly shall equal or exceed a minimum to be prescribed by the President, nor unless the period of actual military duty and instruction participated in by each officer and enlisted man at each assembly at which he shall be credited as having been present shall be of at least 1½ hours' duration and the character of training such as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any flight ordered by competent authority and performed by an appropriately rated Air Corps officer or enlisted man of the National Guard assigned to an Air Corps unit thereof, or so performed by an officer or enlisted man of the Medical Department of the said National Guard regularly attached to an Air Corps unit of the National Guard by appropriate authority, may be credited for the same purpose and to the same extent as attendance at drill: Provided further, That in performing the flight so ordered the officer or enlisted man is prevented, by the making of such flight, from attending a regularly scheduled drill formation of his unit or the unit with which the said officer or enlisted man is required to drill."

SEC. 3. That section 109 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 109. Pay for the National Guard officers: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, officers and warrant officers of the National Guard, except general officers, shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in sections 3 and 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922, for each regular drill, period of appropriate duty, or other equivalent period of training, authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding eight in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 in any one fiscal year, at which they shall have been engaged for the entire period of not less than 1½ hours: Provided, That such pay shall be in addition to compensation for attendance at field- or coast-defense instruction or maneuvers, and that nothing in this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of majors and lieutenant colonels. General officers shall receive $500 a year in addition to compensation for attendance at field- or coast-defense instruction or maneuvers, for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties. In addition to pay hereinbefore provided officers commanding organizations less than a brigade and having administrative functions connected therewith shall, whether or not such officers belong to such organizations, receive not more than $240 a year for the faithful performance of such administrative functions under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and for the purpose of determining how much shall be paid to such officers so performing such functions, the Secretary of War may, from time to time, divide them into classes and fix the amount payable to the officers in each class. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any officer during a period when he shall be entitled under any provision of law to the full rate of his base pay prescribed in section 3 or section 9, as the case may be, of the Pay Readjustment Act of June 10, 1922: Provided further, That section 9 of the act entitled 'An act amending the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917,' approved August 31, 1918, shall also apply to the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment for cash by officers of the active and inactive National Guard, whether in State or Federal service, on proper identification and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

SEC. 4. That section 3618, Revised Statutes, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following additional language: "That, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, the commanding officers of mounted units of the National Guard may sell all stable refuse and empty grain sacks and containers at public or private sale and apply the proceeds derived therefrom to the purchase of feed, supplementing the regular allowance and issue for the animals of the said units, and for the purchase of stable equipment, and horseshoers', saddlers', blacksmiths', and wagoners' tools not an article of issue to such organizations."

SEC. 5. That the act of July 15, 1939 (53 Stat. 1042), be, and the same is hereby, repealed and reenacted to read as follows:

"That neither of the provisions of the act of June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1507), nor any other law of the United States shall be construed as limiting the power and authority of the Secretary of War, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to require the hospitalization, medical, and surgical treatment and domiciliary care so long as any or all are necessary of persons in the active military service or on active duty, or in training, under the provisions of sections 92, 94, 97, 99, and 113 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and to incur obligations with respect thereto, without reference to their line-of-duty status: Provided, That this act shall not include those individuals who are on an armory-drill status except officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard who suffer personal injury (as distinguished from disease) when participating in aerial flights prescribed under the provisions of section 92: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furloughs or leaves of absence in excess of 24 hours."

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill contains a number of provisions requested by the National Guard Association of the United States. It relates to a number of administrative items connected with the work of the National Guard. It amends certain sections of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, relating to the National Guard.

A résumé of the changes in the National Defense Act contained in this measure is as follows:

First. It removes the limits on the number of caretakers authorized to be employed by any one organization of the National Guard.

Second. It provides for employment of caretakers from among officers and enlisted men of the National Guard as well as civilians.

Third. It makes funds appropriated for the support of the National Guard available for hire of clerks and caretakers.

Fourth. It authorizes the Secretary of War to fix salaries of clerks and caretakers.

Fifth. It authorizes the Secretary of War to designate by whom such clerks and caretakers shall be employed.

Sixth. It authorizes any air flights ordered by competent authority and performed by an appropriately rated Air Corps officer or enlisted man of the National Guard to be credited for the same purpose and to the same extent as attendance at armory drill.

Seventh. It directs that pay authorized for officers of the National Guard not belonging to organizations heretofore computed on a time basis shall be authorized and computed on a drill unit basis or other period of appropriate duty or equivalent period of training.

Eighth. It adds a section to 3618 Revised Statute, authorizing the sale of stable refuse and empty grain sacks and containers at public or private sale and to apply the proceeds to the purchase of feed, stable equipment, and so forth.

Ninth. It repeals and reenacts in new language the act of July 15, 1939, authorizing hospitalization and medical care of members of the National Guard. The new language authorizes surgical treatment and domiciliary care so long as necessary of persons who suffer injury or contract disease in the active military service or on active duty or in training. It also adds a proviso that the act so include those individuals who are on an armory drill status, except officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard who suffer personal injury as distinguished from disease when participating in aerial flights.

Representatives of the National Guard of the several States appeared before the Senate Military Affairs Committee in behalf of this measure and submitted logical reasons why this measure should be enacted into law. The War Department has stated that it offers no objection to the measure as it now stands and also stated that the additional direct charge upon appropriations in the fiscal year 1941 which would result from the enactment of this proposed legislation would be approximately $242,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STRAWBERRY WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION, PAYSON, UTAH

The bill (S. 4011) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept payment of an annual equitable overhead charge in connection with the repayment contract between the United States and the Strawberry Water Users' Association, of Payson, Utah, in full satisfaction of delinquent billings upon the basis of an annual fixed overhead charge, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in connection with any amendment heretofore or hereafter made to the repayment contract between the Strawberry Water Users' Association, of Payson, Utah, and the United States, dated September 28, 1926, as amended, to pay construction charges under the provisions of the Federal reclamation laws providing for payment annually of an amount as is determined by the Secretary each year to be sufficient to cover the Strawberry Valley project's equitable portion of the expense of the Chief Engineer's office, the field legal office, and the other detached offices of the Bureau of Reclamation, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, subsequent to the effective date of such an amendment, to accept in full satisfaction for all flat overhead charges owing or allocable to the period up to the effective date of the amendment under the contract provisions in effect prior to such amendment a sum determined at the rate of $400 for each year.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4045) to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Mammoth Cave National Park, in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of developing a proper and suitable entrance road to the Mammoth Cave National Park, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept in behalf of the United States donations of lands, buildings, structures, and other property, or interests therein, within an area or areas to be determined by him (a) not to exceed 1 mile in width, extending from the exterior boundary of the Mammoth Cave National Park, to a point to be selected by him on United States Highway No. 31W; and (b) not to exceed one-half mile in width on either side of United States Highway No. 31W and running for a distance of not to exceed 2 miles along said highway: Provided, That lands acquired for purposes of protecting such entrance roads shall not be less than 500 feet in width on either side of said roads; the title to such property or interests therein to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

All such property or interests therein shall become a part of the Mammoth Cave National Park upon its acceptance by the United States Government and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "therein", it is proposed to insert "to acquire such property with donated funds by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONCONULLY CEMETERY ASSOCIATION

The bill (H. R. 8316) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land to the Conconully Cemetery Association was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLACER-MINING CLAIMS FOR DEPOSITS OF PHOSPHATE, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 6560) relating to placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain was announced as next in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understand that a Senator who is not now on the floor desires to offer an amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wonder if we may have it agreed that the bill may be called up later in the consideration of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Some Senator would have to make that request; but the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not want to block consideration of the measure, but I desire to see that the opportunity to present an amendment to it is preserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may always be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may be called again before the call of the calendar is concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WOOL, ETC.—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR OPERATION OF COMMITTEE

The resolution (S. Res. 276) to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, agreed to July 10, 1935, authorizing a special committee to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, as extended, is hereby further extended and continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-seventh Congress; and the said committee may report to the Senate at any time prior to the expiration of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY FOR PUBLIC USE IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1825) to provide for the acquisition of certain property for public use in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments, on page 1, line 10, after "175/56", to strike out "and to adjust, compromise, or settle any claims for loss or damages sustained by the owners of said property by reason of the acquisition thereof, or the loss of any right, license, or franchise connected therewith" and insert "at a cost not to exceed $500,000"; and on page 2, line 13, after the word "such", to strike out "sums" and insert "sums, not in excess of $500,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire on behalf of the United States for public use at a reasonable price, from Federal funds, through purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the following-described property, together with all improvements thereon, located in the District of Columbia, which appears on the assessors' records for the District of Columbia as parcels 168/50, 168/32, 175/30, 175/41, 175/116, 175/73, and 175/56 at a cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, however, That, if at any time an appropriate use for this property or any portions thereof shall be found for District of Columbia purposes, such property may be transferred to the government of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government reimbursed from District appropriations.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums, not in excess of $500,000, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire as to the purpose of this large appropriation?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, under the language of the bill I do not believe a large appropriation will be necessary, because in the amendments adopted by the committee all claims for damages and losses have been removed; so the bill merely resolves itself into a measure for the acquirement of 17 acres of property by the District of Columbia.

The reason for this acquirement of property dates back to 1933, when there was operated on this site a slaughterhouse or abattoir, and the operation of that activity was ordered suspended by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture. They required certain alterations, which took considerable time. They approved the plans for the alterations; and in the meantime a fire wiped out a large portion of the slaughterhouse. By the time the plans were ready and approved by the Department, the Congress intervened with legislation preventing certain industries from being operated in the District of Columbia.

Therefore, at great loss to this company, the Union Stock Yards Co., and the Adolph Gobel Co., this property was rendered useless. The law enacted by the Congress after the Department had approved the plans prevented the construction of the improved buildings, and prevented the operation of this industry in the District of Columbia.

All the owners are now asking is that the Department of the Interior, the land-purchasing department of the Federal Government, buy the site for the valuation of the site, and utilize it for Government purposes. The owners cannot operate their plant. They are forbidden by a new law from utilizing their property, and they are asking the agency which outlawed them to take over their property.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find that the Interior Department has made an adverse recommendation on the bill. I read the language of the Acting Secretary of the Interior:

I have been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Mr. MEAD. That was because originally there was in the bill, to be considered in connection with the purchase of the property, a clause relative to claims resulting from action on the part of Government agencies. Our committee struck it out; so that all that remains—which, in the judgment of the committee and of the sponsor of the bill, meets with the approval of the agencies of the Government—is the acquirement of the site, without any reference to losses or claims growing out of the prevention of the operation of this industry by the laws of the Congress.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator has just said that the only thing remaining is to take over the site at its valuation. Who made the valuation, and what is the valuation?

Mr. MEAD. The valuation, it is assumed, has been established by the Board of Assessors of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETTE. For the purpose of taxation?

Mr. MEAD. For the purpose of taxation; yes.

It was originally claimed that these persons had a valid claim for damages because their property has been idle for a number of years. They have been paying taxes, and the Federal Government has prevented them from making any gain in the conduct of their business. It was assumed, however, that that would result in an exorbitant price; so the committee struck out all costs except the purchase of the property, based upon the formula and the standards of acquirement of property which have been in vogue in the District of Columbia for years. So it is now proposed that we buy 17 acres at a fair and reasonable price, in accordance with the standards established in the purchase of property by the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETTE. Is that price the price at which the property was carried on the assessment rolls?

Mr. MEAD. That matter was discussed by the committee, and it was developed that that would be a fair and reasonable price; but in the District of Columbia there is a yardstick which I cannot explain in detail but which takes into consideration the assessed valuation of the property. In other words, the original bill would give the owners the price of the property plus all the losses they have sustained. The amended bill will merely purchase the property in accordance with the yardstick for the acquirement of property which has been in vogue in the District of Columbia for years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

Mr. KING. I should like to make a few observations, but the bill has gone over.

CLARIFICATION OF SECTION 3709, REVISED STATUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3974) to clarify section 3709 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), shall not hereafter be construed as requiring advertising for bids in connection with the procurement of transportation services when the services required can be procured from any common carrier lawfully operating in the territory where such services are to be performed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I intended to make a few observations in respect to the bill which has just been passed over.

Permit me to say that this Gobel property, and the controversy connected with it, came before the District Committee, of which I am chairman, a number of years ago. When it was held that the slaughterhouse was a nuisance, and the owner was interdicted—I do not think by law or by regulation—from utilizing it because of its offensive character, he contended that the Government ought to take it over. The District Commissioners, so far as I am advised, did not approve of it, and I know the committee did not; and apparently this bill went to another committee. Because of that controversy and because it has not since then been before the District Committee, of which I am chairman, I felt constrained to have the bill go over, so that I may consult with the District Commissioners and ascertain their views with regard to the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill, Senate bill 3974.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee's report in support of this measure be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 1795) is as follows:

A majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3974) to clarify section 3709 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), so that it shall not hereafter be construed as requiring advertising for bids in connection with the procurement of transportation services when the services required can be procured from any common carrier lawfully operating in the territory where such services are to be performed, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

This bill is the result of the recommendation of the Household Goods Carriers' Bureau together with all other motor carriers for hire as represented by American trucking associations interested in correcting an inadvertent defeat of a provision originally included in S. 2009.

The proposal contained in S. 3974 was submitted to the Interstate Commerce Committee of both the Senate and the House at public hearings and was adopted by the conference committee on S. 2009 because of the fact that the record of public hearings failed to disclose any opposition to the adoption of this proposal. If it had been introduced as a separate bill instead of being included in S. 2009, this measure probably would have been enacted.

Prior to the enactment of the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935 (pt. II of the Interstate Commerce Act), motor carriers were without the status of declared common carriers and were recognized by the Federal Government only as carriers for hire and in arrangement for transportation were dealt with in the same manner as any other firm or individual providing supplies of services as provided under United States Statutes 3709 through the employment of what is known as the invitation, bid, and acceptance or short-form contract. The Motor Carrier Act was enacted in 1935 and pending developments of regulation, many motor common carriers continued to handle Government traffic under the competitive-bid method. This practice is particularly prevalent today in the transportation of household goods, office furniture equipment, and similar commodities if moved for the Government as well as in the movement of general freight. The practice has resulted in widespread demoralization of the published and filed rates of all motortruck common carriers, and this condition can be shown clearly to have the same effect on established railroad rates. Under date of June 1, 1938, the Branch of Supply Department, Procurement Division, recognizing the existing conditions issued its Circular Letter No. 309 which set forth sound principles and correction of the evil. But because of the apparent conflict with the United States Statutes 3709, as raised by the General Accounting Office, the circular letter was withdrawn on July 11, 1938, and the industry again was plunged into an even greater degree of chaos.

An appeal to the Comptroller General was made and on October 10, 1939, he suggested that "what the common carriers by motor vehicles apparently desire could be most easily accomplished by the enactment * * * of a provision substantially as follows: 'That section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), shall not hereafter be regarded or construed as requiring advertising for bids in connection with the procurement of transportation services when the services required can be procured from any common carrier subject to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.'"

S. 3974 is approved by the traffic section, Branch of Supplies, Procurement Division, Treasury Department. (This Department under Presidential order is recognized as the traffic agency for the United States Government.)

Relief as will be obtained by the various Government departments under this measure will be most welcome in permitting such departments to select transportation service at predetermined rates as are on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission. (Government departments would likewise retain the right to exercise bid procedure if they would so elect.)

The for-hire motor-carrier industry as represented by some 30,000 operators would be placed on an equal footing with all other transportation agencies through recognition of their common-carrier status and properly filed tariffs, and being in position to handle Government traffic on rates as recognized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, such carriers could insure meeting all demands for expansion of service for national defense.

S. 3974, therefore, carries out the suggestion of the Comptroller General and the recommendation of the Household Goods Carriers' Bureau and the American Trucking Associations.

GEORGE A. CARDEN AND ANDERSON T. HERD

The bill (S. 2842) to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the Court of Claims in a suit instituted by George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd, or their legal representatives, may, at any time within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this act, appeal as of right to the Supreme Court of the United States from the judgment of the Court of Claims of the United States in the suit No. 42711 heretofore instituted in the Court of Claims by George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Supreme Court to consider on such appeal all questions of law and fact, including the fair market value of the property involved. Any judgment rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments of said Court of Claims are paid.

LEAVE TO EMPLOYEES TO VOTE

The bill (S. 820) providing for the granting of leave to certain employees of the United States to enable them to vote at elections was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer or employee of the United States (including officers and employees of corporations wholly owned or wholly controlled by the United States) who is employed outside of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to leave with pay, from the duties of his office or employment to be used for the purpose of enabling him to vote at any election or primary election, for the same number of hours as may be granted to employees of the State in which he is employed for the purpose of enabling such State employees to vote at such election or primary election. The officer or employee granting such leave may require that it be taken during such hours as he may determine with a view to causing the least interruption to the conduct of the public business.

VERNON ATKISON

The bill (H. R. 5592) for the relief of Vernon Atkison was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3990) to transfer the essential language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 17, 1930, into the Judicial Code of the United States and to provide for its reenactment as part of said Judicial Code, to take effect from the date of its passage, including the allowance to the judges of the United States Customs Court, Government counsel, and stenographic clerks as set forth therein for traveling expenses incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith to the extent of such inconsistency, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section be, and the same is hereby, added to the Judicial Code of the United States relating to the United States Customs Court, to be known as section 187 (a), to follow immediately after section 187, to read in the exact language of section 518, title IV, of the Tariff Act of 1930, as follows:

"SEC. 187. (a) United States Customs Court.

"The United States Customs Court shall continue as now constituted, except that the chief justice and the associate justices of such court now in office and their successors shall hereafter be known as the judges of such court. All vacancies in such court shall be filled by appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate Not more than five of the judges of such court shall be appointed from the same political party and each of such judges shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. They shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, and shall hold their office during good behavior. The offices of such court shall be at the port of New York. The court and each judge thereof shall have and possess all the powers of a district court of the United States for preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence, and in punishing for contempt. The court shall have power to establish from time to time such rules of evidence, practice, and procedure, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary for the conduct of its proceedings, in securing uniformity in its decisions and in the proceedings and decisions of the judges thereof, and for the production, care, and custody of samples and of the records of such court. Under such rules as the United States Customs Court may prescribe, and in its discretion, the court may permit the amendment of a protest, appeal, or application for review. One of the judges of such court, designated for that purpose by the President of the United States, shall act as presiding judge, and in his absence the judge then present who is senior as to the date of his commission shall act as presiding judge; and until any such designation is made the chief justice of the United States Customs Court now in office shall act as presiding judge. The presiding judge, or the acting presiding judge in his absence, shall have control of the fiscal affairs and of the clerical force of the court, making all recommendations for appointment, promotions, or otherwise affecting such clerical force; he may at any time before trial, under the rules of the court, assign or reassign any case for hearing or determination, or both, and shall designate a judge or division of three judges and such clerical assistants as may be necessary to proceed to any port within the jurisdiction of the United States for the purpose of hearing or of hearing and determining cases assigned for hearing at such port, and shall cause to be prepared and promulgated dockets therefor. Judges of the court, stenographic clerks, and Government counsel shall each be allowed and paid his necessary expenses of travel and his reasonable expenses, not to exceed $10 per day in the case of the judges of the court and Government counsel, and $8 per day in the case of stenographic clerks, actually incurred for maintenance while absent from New York on official business. The judges of said court shall be divided into three divisions of three judges each for the purpose of hearing and deciding appeals for the review of reappraisements of merchandise, and of hearing and deciding protests against decisions of collectors. A division of three judges or a single judge shall have power to order an analysis of imported merchandise and reports thereon by laboratories or bureaus of the United States. The presiding judge shall assign three judges to each of said divisions and shall designate one of such three judges to preside. The presiding judge of the court shall be competent to sit as a judge of any division or to assign one or two other judges to any of such divisions in the absence or disability of any one or two judges of such division. A majority of the judges of any division shall have full power to hear and decide all cases and questions arising therein or assigned thereto. A division of the court deciding a case or a single judge deciding an appeal for a reappraisement may, upon the motion of either party made within 30 days next after such decision, grant a rehearing or retrial of such case when in the opinion of such division or single judge the ends of justice so require.

"The judges of the United States Customs Court are hereby exempted from so much of section 1790 of the Revised Statutes as relates to their salaries.

"When any judge of the United States Customs Court resigns his office after having held a commission as judge or justice of such court or member of the board of general appraisers at least 10 years continuously, or otherwise, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable to a judge of such court at the time of his resignation. Any such judge, who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provisions, may retire, upon the salary of which he is then in receipt, from regular active service as a judge of such court, and upon such retirement the President may appoint a successor; but such retired judge may, with his consent, be assigned by the presiding judge of such court to serve upon such court, and while so serving shall have all the powers of a judge of such court."

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provision of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

SEC. 3. That this act, including the provision for payment of the expenses of the judges of the Customs Court, Government attorneys, and stenographic clerks incurred while absent from New York on official business, shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is nothing in the bill at all except provision for a transfer of the operations of the United States Customs Court to the judiciary law rather than have it in the tariff law. Inadvertently, when the tariff act was passed certain compensations were provided for in the act which should probably have been in the Judiciary Code, as the United States Customs Court functions under the Department of Justice. The bill provides only for compensation to the judges when traveling about the country, which other judges have when engaged in similar work. That is all there is to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASHLAND DISTRICT COUNCIL, BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The bill (S. 4090) to authorize the Attorney General to donate on behalf of the United States to H. S. Scott, D. W. Collins, Fred M. Gross, trustees, Ashland District Council, Boy Scouts of America, the log house known as the John Secrest home, located on the site of the Federal Correctional Institution near Ashland, Ky., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized to donate on behalf of the United States to H. S. Scott, D. W. Collins, Fred M. Gross, trustees, Ashland District Council, Boy Scouts of America, that certain log house known as the Secrest house, located on the land comprising the site of the Federal Correctional Institution near Ashland, Ky., and formerly occupied by John Secrest, a pioneer in the Boy Scout movement and one of the first scoutmasters in that portion of Kentucky. The house having no value to the Government for institutional purposes, and the ground upon which it stands being needed for other buildings, it shall be removed within such reasonable time as the Attorney General shall fix, and at no expense to the Government.

THEFT OF MONEY FROM BANKS

The bill (H. R. 8399) to prohibit the receipt, possession, or disposition of money or property feloniously taken from a bank organized or operating under the laws of the United States or any member of the Federal Reserve System was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OPERATION OF STATUTES OF LIMITATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4828) to amend the law limiting the operation of statutes of limitations in certain cases, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the word "succeeding", to insert the word "regular", and on the same line, after the word "court", to strike out the words "regular or special", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to limit the operation of statutes of limitations in certain cases," approved May 10, 1934 (48 Stat. 772; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 587), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That whenever an indictment is found defective or insufficient for any cause, after the period prescribed by the applicable statute of limitations has expired, a new indictment may be returned not later than the end of the next succeeding regular term of such court, following the term at which such indictment was found defective or insufficient, during which a grand jury thereof shall be in session."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WADE CRAWFORD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2758) for the relief of Wade Crawford, formerly superintendent of the Klamath Indian Agency, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "credit", to strike out the words "in the accounts of" and to insert the word "to;" on line 5, after the name "Crawford", to strike out the word "as" and insert a comma and the word "former"; on line 7, after the name "Oregon", to insert "and in the accounts of G. F. Allen, Chief Disbursing Officer;" and on line 9, after the word "voucher", to strike out "386, November 1934; voucher 442, December 1934; voucher 496, January 1935; voucher 496, March 1935; and voucher 721, May 1935, to Vochatzer Brothers, Klamath Falls, Oreg., under contract I–52–Ind–ECF–27, dated September 13, 1934, for drilling and casing wells at the agency" and to insert "20–19776, April 1936; and voucher 20–43306, April 1937," and after line 5, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to Wade Crawford the sum of $354.68, said refund to be made from the appropriations credited with such sum as a result of the application of moneys held to the credit of said Wade Crawford in the retirement fund to satisfy disallowances made by the General Accounting Office.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit to Wade Crawford, former Superintendent and Special Disbursing Agent for the Klamath Indian Agency, Klamath Agency, Oreg., and in the accounts of G. F. Allen, Chief Disbursing Officer, for payments made on voucher 20–19776, April 1936; and voucher 20–43306, April 1937.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to Wade Crawford the sum of $354.68, said refund to be made from the appropriations credited with such sum as a result of the application of moneys held to the credit of said Wade Crawford in the retirement fund to satisfy disallowances made by the General Accounting Office.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 3972) to authorize exchanges of lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to exchange tribal lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona for privately owned mineral lands of approximately equal value within the boundary of such reservation. Upon conveyance to the United States in trust for the Navajo Indians of the lands being acquired by the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue a patent in fee covering the lands granted in exchange: Provided, That the sufficiency of title to all such lands acquired by the United States shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

ACQUISITION OF DATA BY RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 267) providing for the acquisition by the Railroad Retirement Board of data needed in carrying out the provisions of the Railroad Retirement Acts, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That each employer subject to the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, and each other company, association, or person (hereinafter referred to as the "other company") who is in possession of such data as are hereinafter described, shall immediately begin collecting and shall furnish currently as completed and not later than June 30, 1943, shall have completed furnishing to the Railroad Retirement Board (hereinafter called "the Board") in such form as the Board may prescribe, certified reports of all data with respect to service and compensation prior to January 1, 1937, corresponding in substance with that which has heretofore been required by the Board for the adjudication of claims for annuities under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 and the Railroad

Retirement Act of 1935 and which can be obtained from records in the possession of such employer or other company.

SEC. 2. The Board is hereby authorized and directed to establish a uniform reasonable rate of payment to which employers or other companies are entitled for the furnishing of the reports required by section 1 of this joint resolution to be furnished, which rate shall not result in payment to any employer or other company of any amount in excess of 50 cents multiplied by the aggregate number of man-years of service established and verified by such employer or other company and reported to the Board in accordance with section 1 of this joint resolution. The Board shall, from time to time, determine, and certify on proper voucher to the Secretary of the Treasury, the amount of payment due to each employer or other company pursuant to this section: Provided, however, That no payment shall be certified or made with respect to any item in such reports as concerns the record of employees 65 years of age or over who have filed application for annuity, or with respect to any report not furnished on or before June 30, 1943. Upon such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such amount to such employer or other company from the special fund hereinafter established. Whenever any employer or other company furnishes through any other employer or other company any report required by the first section of this joint resolution to be furnished, the Board may certify the payment to be made to the employer or other company through whom such report is furnished, and payment in accordance with such certification shall discharge all obligations arising hereunder with respect to such report.

SEC. 3. If any employer or other company fails to exercise due care and diligence in carrying out its duties under this joint resolution, the Board, by its employees, may transcribe the necessary data from records in the possession of such employer or other company, which records shall be made available as the Board may require, and no payment shall be due to any employer or other company for or on account of any records transcribed by employees of the Board.

SEC. 4. Reports, records, and data acquired by the Board pursuant to this joint resolution shall be so assembled and processed by the Board as to provide as nearly as practicable a complete record, by individuals, of all service and compensation prior to January 1, 1937, creditable under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 or the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935. The Board shall take steps reasonably calculated to give notice of such record to each individual with respect to whom such record is established. Direct communication, transmission to employers for delivery, public advertisement, or such other means as the Board may determine, shall constitute due notice to all such individuals: Provided, however, That, unless the Board's records show that actual notice was received through other means by an individual for whom the Board has an address on file and such notice is evidenced by a receipt signed by such individual, notice to such individual shall include the mailing of notice to the last address on file with the Board. Whenever the Board shall determine that reasonable notice has been given it shall so find and shall enter such finding upon its records. Such finding may be made with respect to all individuals or, from time to time, with respect to described classes of individuals. Any record established as hereinabove provided, which is not contested within 2 years after the finding of reasonable notice hereinabove provided for has been entered upon the records of the Board, shall be presumed to include all service rendered and compensation earned prior to January 1, 1937, by the individual to whom such record relates, and, unless shown by new and manifestly convincing evidence to be clearly erroneous, shall be conclusive: Provided, however, That such record shall in no wise restrict the authority of the Board to determine, upon the filing of an application for an annuity, that some or all of the service or compensation so recorded is not service or compensation as said terms are defined in the Railroad Retirement Acts or that under the provisions of the applicable Railroad Retirement Act some or all of the service or compensation so recorded is not to be used in the computation of an annuity. The Board may also take steps, through publication or otherwise, reasonably calculated to give notice of the carrying out of this joint resolution,, to individuals with respect to whom no record of service or compensation is established. Whenever the Board shall determine that such steps have been taken it shall so find and shall enter such findings upon its records. With respect to each individual who does not, within 2 years after such finding has been entered upon the records of the Board, request the establishment of a record of his service and compensation, the fact that no such record is established shall be presumed to show that such individual, prior to January 1, 1937, rendered no service and earned no compensation as said terms are defined in the applicable Railroad Retirement Act, and such presumption shall be rebuttable only by new and manifestly convincing evidence showing it to be clearly erroneous.

SEC. 5. The Board is hereby authorized to promulgate such orders, rules, and regulations as in its judgment are necessary or proper to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. All powers and remedies, including legal processes, available to the Board under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 for the administration of said act shall be similarly available to the Board for the carrying out of this joint resolution.

SEC. 6. In order to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution, there shall be set aside on July 1, 1940, in a special fund, $9,000,000 of the amount appropriated to the railroad retirement account by the Railroad Retirement Board Appropriation Act, 1941, such fund to remain available until June 30, 1943, for expenditure in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this joint resolution. Any unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, in the special fund hereby established shall revert to the railroad retirement account.

SEC. 7. No provision of this joint resolution shall be construed in any manner to limit or impair any authority, power, or discretion conferred upon or vested in the Board by the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, or the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire if there has been any objection to obtaining the information desired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the joint resolution has been worked out with all parties in interest. The Railroad Retirement Board, the railroad companies, and the employees all have sat around the table and worked it out as they worked out the original railroad retirement act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF MAILS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6424) to provide for the transportation and distribution of mails on motor-vehicle routes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That" to insert "wherever it is found that adequate railroad facilities are not available," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever it is found that adequate railroad facilities are not available, the Postmaster General is authorized to contract for carrying the mails and railway postal clerks on routes between points where, in his judgment, the conditions justify the operation of such service in motor vehicles especially designed and equipped for the distribution of mail en route: Provided, That such vehicles shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, and operated in accordance with such specifications, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized, within his discretion, to transport and provide for the distribution of mails in Government-owned motor vehicles on such routes between points where in his judgment the conditions justify the operation of such service: Provided further, That all laws and regulations governing Star Route Service, not in conflict with this act, shall be applicable to contracts made under the authority of this act: And provided further, That no contract shall be awarded for a period of less than 2 years nor in excess of 4 years, and that payment for such service shall be from the appropriations for inland transportation by star routes.

SEC. 2. The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, and in the interest of the Postal Service, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, provide for the distribution of mail on motor-vehicle routes in motor vehicles specially designed and equipped for that purpose and provided for in section 1 of this act: Provided, That the supervision and distribution of mails in motor-vehicle service, as herein provided, shall be under the jurisdiction of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, and the personnel therein shall be a part of the Railway Mail Service under the same working conditions, rates of pay, travel allowance, and other benefits applicable to railway postal clerks: And provided further, That payment for such service shall be from the appropriations for Railway Mail Service salaries and railway postal clerks' travel allowance.

SEC. 3. Every individual or company carrying the mails shall carry on any vehicle it operates and without extra charge therefor the persons in charge of the mails and when on duty and traveling to and from duty, and all duly accredited agents and officers of the Post Office Department and post-office inspectors while traveling on official business, upon the exhibition of their credentials.

SEC. 4. The Postmaster General is authorized to promulgate such specifications, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF INDIAN LANDS FOR PARKER DAM AND RESERVOIR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3931) for the acquisition of Indian lands for the Parker Dam and Reservoir project, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 4, after the word "be", to strike out "deposited in the Treasury of the United States" and to insert "paid to the Secretary of the Interior"; on line 8 to strike out "pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 560), and"; on line 13, after the name "California", to strike out "and shall be credited, in," and to insert "In"; on line 14, after the word "lands", to insert "the amount due"; on line 14, after the word "tribe", to strike out "and, in the case of allotted lands, to the allottees or their heirs. Such amounts, while remaining to the credit of the Indians in the Treasury, shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per centum per annum from the time of deposit", and to insert "shall be deposited by the said Secretary in the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 560), as amended. The amounts due individual allottees, their heirs, or devisees shall be deposited by the said Secretary to the credit of the Superintendent of the Colorado River Indian Agency, or such other officer as shall be designated by the Secretary, for the credit on the books of the said agency to the accounts of the individual Indians concerned"; on page 3, line 3, after the word "funds", to strike out "held" and insert "deposited"; on line 4, at the beginning of the line, to strike out "or" and to insert "their"; after the word "heirs" to insert "or devisees," and to strike out "hereunder shall be handled in a like manner as moneys received from the sale of land under section 1 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. 444): Provided, That such funds"; on line 10, before the word "heirs", to strike out "or" and insert "their"; on line 11, before the word "whose", to insert "or devisees", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in aid of the construction of the Parker Dam project, authorized by the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028), there is hereby granted to the United States, its successors and assigns, subject to the provisions of this act, all the right, title, and interest of the Indians in and to the tribal and allotted lands of the Fort Mohave Indian Reservation in Arizona and the Chemehuevi Reservation in California as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall determine the amount of money to be paid to the Indians as just and equitable compensation for the rights granted under section 1 hereof. Such amount of money shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, a public corporation of the State of California, in accordance with the terms of the contract made and entered into on February 10, 1933, between the United States of America, acting through the Secretary of the Interior, and the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California. In the case of tribal lands, the amount due to the appropriate tribe shall be deposited by the said Secretary in the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 560), as amended. The amounts due individual allottees, their heirs, or devisees shall be deposited by the said Secretary to the credit of the Superintendent of the Colorado River Indian Agency, or such other officer as shall be designated by the Secretary, for the credit on the books of the said agency to the accounts of the individual Indians concerned.

SEC. 3. Funds deposited to the credit of the allottees, their heirs, or devisees may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the acquisition of other lands and improvements now in Indian ownership, or the construction of improvements for the allottees, their heirs, or devisees whose lands and improvements are acquired under the provisions of this act. Lands so acquired shall be held in the same status as those from which the funds were derived.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to prescribe such regulations as may be deemed appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT HALL INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, IDAHO

The bill (S. 4042) to provide for the acquisition of flowage rights and the payment of certain damages in connection with the operation of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of advice from the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that an appropriate and properly executed easement has been obtained, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Emory Poulson, or his heirs, an amount not exceeding $4,500: Provided, That the foregoing amount shall be in full settlement for any and all past and present damages to the lands or personal property of the above-named Emory Poulson in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Blackfoot Reservoir, Grays Lake, and the conveyance channel from Grays Lake to the Blackfoot Reservoir of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project, Idaho, and in full payment for the easement obtained from said individual covering the right to flood, impound, withdraw at will, water on, over, and from all lands owned or possessed by said individual in connection with the future operation of said project; and the acceptance of said sum by the said Emory Poulson or his heirs shall act as a quittance of any and all rights or claims that may previously have existed against the United States by reason of such construction and operation of the said project: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents or attorneys on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000.

PATENT TO LANDS IN MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 3954) relating to the issuance by the Secretary of the Interior of a patent to the State of Minnesota for certain lands in that State was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may cancel the patent issued on August 24, 1886, to Joe Blair, as allottee No. 4 of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, Minn., for the north half of the northeast quarter of section 30, township 49 north, range 17 west, of the fourth principal meridian in Minnesota, and may issue to the State of Minnesota as a fee-simple patent for the tract of land described. If issued, the fee-simple patent shall operate as a full and complete conveyance of any and all right, title, or interest that the heirs of Joe Blair, deceased allottee No. 4 of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, Minn., and that the United States of America may have in and to said described lands. Prior to the issuance of such patent, the Secretary of the Interior may require the State of Minnesota, at its expense, to furnish satisfactory evidence that there are no outstanding liens, encumbrances, or other conveyances of record against said lands other than the original patent issued under date of August 24, 1886, to the said Joe Blair covering the lands hereinabove described.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD, CASS COUNTY, MINN.

The bill (S. 3353) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with public-school board of school district No. 5, at Onigum and Walker, Minn., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that this is the same as Calendar No. 1964, House bill 6583. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill to be now considered.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6583) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board, Cass County, Minn., for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public-school facilities to be available to Indian children in the district, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 3353 is indefinitely postponed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, receding from Senate amendments numbered 35 to 39, inclusive, on House bill 9007, making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, this morning I find that a mistake was made, and I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of that action so that the mistake may be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not advised as to whether or not the Senate is still in the possession of the papers, but in all probability the papers have gone to the House of Representatives. A motion to reconsider can be entered, and House requested by motion to return the papers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me inquire of the clerk whether it is certain that the papers have been sent to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is only repeating the information which came from the Parliamentarian, but the Parliamentarian is now trying to ascertain whether the official papers have passed out of the possession of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: The Chair would like to advise the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate is no longer in possession of the conference report papers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I enter a motion to reconsider, and move that the House be requested to return the papers.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENDING MARKETING QUOTA TO LETTUCE AND MELONS

The bill (S. 4007) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of extending the marketing-quota provisions thereof to lettuce and to melons, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subtitle B of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding after part V thereof a new part VI, as follows:

"PART VI—MARKETING QUOTAS—LETTUCE AND MELONS

"LEGISLATIVE FINDING

"SEC. 357. (a) The production and marketing of lettuce and the production and marketing of melons constitute two important industries of the United States, each of which has ramifying activities directly affecting interstate and foreign commerce. Moreover, since lettuce and melons are perishable commodities and, therefore, cannot be stored and carried over from year to year, there is an intimate correlation between the production and the marketing of these commodities, insofar as such production and marketing affect interstate commerce. Lettuce and melons are sold on a Nation-wide market and move in large volume in interstate commerce from the producer to the ultimate consumer. Those quantities of lettuce and of melons which are produced, marketed, and consumed within the confines of a single State are normally commingled with, and always bear a close and intimate commercial and competitive relationship to, those quantities of lettuce and of melons which move in interstate commerce. The producers of lettuce and of melons are subject, in their operations, to uncontrollable natural influences. Moreover, they are not so situated as to be able to organize effectively for joint economic action, as can labor and industry. For these reasons, among others, these farmers are unable, without Federal assistance, to control effectively the orderly marketing of lettuce and melons, with the result that abnormally excessive supplies thereof are produced and dumped indiscriminately on the market.

"(b) The disorderly marketings resulting from excessive production of lettuce and melons directly affect, burden, and obstruct interstate commerce by (1) materially affecting the volume of such commodities marketed therein, (2) disrupting the orderly marketing of such commodities therein, (3) reducing the prices for such commodities with consequent injury and destruction of such commerce in such commodities, and (4) causing a disparity between the prices for such commodities in interstate commerce and the prices for industrial products therein, with a consequent diminution of the volume of interstate and foreign commerce in industrial products.

"(c) Whenever abnormally excessive supplies of lettuce and of melons exist, the marketing of such commodities by the producers thereof directly and substantially affects interstate commerce in such commodities, and the operation of the provisions of this part becomes necessary and appropriate in order to promote, foster, and maintain an orderly flow of such supply in interstate commerce.

"MARKETING QUOTAS

"SEC. 358. (a) Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that the regulation of commerce in lettuce or melons by marketing quotas during any marketing year would, for such marketing year, achieve the objectives of (1) tending to insure an orderly, adequate, and balanced flow of such commodity in commerce, (2) assisting the producers thereof to obtain a parity price for and parity income from that commodity, and (3), at the same time, assuring consumers an adequate and steady supply of that commodity at fair prices, he shall so announce. If, after due notice and opportunity for public hearing to interested persons, the Secretary, upon the basis of the evidence adduced at such hearing, finds that such objectives would be accomplished through the establishment of marketing quotas for the next succeeding marketing year for such commodity, he shall, by proclamation, establish such quotas in such amounts as best to effectuate such objectives. The Secretary shall specify in such proclamation the amount of the marketing quota for such commodity in terms of the total quantity of such commodity that may be marketed during such marketing year. Such proclamation shall be made by the Secretary not later than 150 days prior to the beginning of the marketing year for such commodity. Notwithstanding the other provisions of this subsection, however, if, because of the date of the enactment of this legislation, the Secretary, in the calendar year 1940, is unable to make such proclamation 150 days prior to the beginning of the marketing year beginning in such calendar year, he shall make such proclamation as early as possible prior to the beginning of such marketing years, but in no event later than 30 days after the conclusion of the public hearing held with respect to the establishment of a marketing quota for the commodity.

"(b) Within 30 days after the date of the issuance of the proclamation, pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, with respect to lettuce or melons, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum of the producers of the last crop of such commodity harvested prior to the holding of the referendum to determine whether such producers are in favor of or opposed to such quota. The Secretary shall immediately proclaim the result of the referendum, and such quota shall not thereafter be effective unless producers representing two-thirds of the total number of such producers voting in the referendum and two-thirds of the total acreage of their production are in favor of such quota.

"(c) The marketing quota for lettuce or melons, proclaimed under subsection (a) of this section, shall be converted into an acreage allotment on the basis of the average yield per acre of the commodity during the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year in which the quota for the commodity is proclaimed. This acreage allotment shall be apportioned by the Secretary among the several States on the basis of the total planted acreage of the commodity in each State during the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year in which the quota is proclaimed, with such adjustments as are determined to be necessary to make correction for abnormal conditions of production and trends in production.

"(d) The Secretary shall provide, through State and local committees, for the allotment of not less than 95 percent of the State acreage allotment for lettuce or melons among persons producing that commodity within such State in any of the past 3 years. The Secretary shall also provide, through State and local committees, for the allotment of that part of the State acreage allotment for lettuce or melons which is not allotted under this subsection among persons producing that commodity within such State in any of the past 3 years, among persons producing that commodity in the State for the first time in the past 3 years. Such allotments shall be made in such manner and in such amounts as to provide a fair, efficient, and equitable distribution of the State acreage allotment among such persons, taking into consideration one or more, as the Secretary determines may best effectuate the purposes of the act, of the following factors: The producer's past acreage of that commodity; land, labor, and equipment available for the production of that commodity on the farm; or crop-rotation practices. Notwithstanding the other provisions of this subsection, no person producing the commodity for the first time in the past 3 years shall be allotted an acreage under this subsection in excess of 75 percent of the allotment established under this subsection for any person who has been producing the commodity during any of the past 3 years and who has similar land, labor, and equipment available for the production of the commodity and similar crop-rotation practices.

"(e) The farm marketing quota for lettuce or melons for any producer shall be equal to the actual production of the producer's acreage allotment for the commodity, or the actual production of the acreage which the producer plants to the commodity, whichever is the smaller.

"(f) No marketing quota with respect to lettuce or melons shall be applicable in any marketing year to any producer whose acreage planted to lettuce or melons of the current crop is not more than 1 acre.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 359. The marketing of lettuce or of melons in excess of the marketing quota for any producer shall be subject to a penalty at the rate of $10 per ton in the case of watermelons and other uncrated melons and at the rate of $1 per standard crate, or its equivalent, for lettuce or crated melons for each unit so marketed. The penalty shall be paid upon a portion of each lot of the commodity marketed equal to the proportion which the acreage of the commodity planted in excess of the acreage allotment is of the total acreage of the commodity planted. Such penalty shall be paid by the producer and, where the commodity is packed, shall be collected by the packer.

"ADVISORY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 360. To advise him in connection with carrying out the marketing-quota provisions of the act with respect to lettuce and melons, the Secretary shall appoint, with due consideration to their geographic representation, advisory committees, consisting of not more than five persons each, experienced, as the case may be, in the production of lettuce or of melons. The compensation of the members of such committees shall be determined by the Secretary but shall not exceed $10 per day each while actually employed plus actual necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or a per diem allowance in lieu thereof."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, containing the declaration of policy of the act, is amended so as to extend that declaration of policy to lettuce and melons by striking out the words "and rice" and inserting in lieu thereof "rice, lettuce, and melons".

SEC. 3. That subdivision (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of said act, as amended, containing the definition of "parity" as applied to prices for agricultural commodities and defining a base period for specific commodities, is amended, so as to define the base period for lettuce and melons, by changing the last sentence in such subdivision to read as follows: "The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities, except tobacco, lettuce, and melons, shall be the period August 1909 to July 1914, and, in the case of tobacco, lettuce, and melons, shall be the period August 1919 to July 1929."

SEC. 4. That subsection (a) of section 301 of said act, as amended, containing the general definitions of the act, is amended, so as to define lettuce and melons, by adding at the end thereof new subdivisions as follows:

"(10) 'Lettuce' means head lettuce, or any regional or market classification, type, or grade thereof, produced in the States of California or Arizona.

"(11) 'Melons' means each one of the kinds of melons listed below, or any regional or market classification, type, or grade thereof, produced in the States of California or Arizona: Cantaloup, honeydew, honeyballs, casaba, Persian, and watermelons. The provisions of this title shall apply to each of such kinds of melons severally."

SEC. 5. That subsection (b) of section 301 of said act, as amended, containing definitions applicable to specific commodities, is further amended so as to apply to lettuce and melons, as follows:

(a) By changing paragraph (B) of subdivision (1) thereof, containing a definition of "actual production" for cotton, to read:

"(B) 'Actual production' of any number of acres of cotton, lettuce, or melons on a farm means the actual average yield for the farm times such number of acres."

(b) By changing subdivision (6) thereof, containing the definition of "market" for specific commodities, to read:

"(6) (A) 'Market', in the case of corn, cotton, rice, tobacco, wheat, lettuce, and melons, means to dispose of, in raw or processed form, by voluntary or involuntary sale, barter, or exchange, or by gift inter vivos, and, in the case of corn and wheat, by feeding (in any form) to poultry or livestock which, or the products of which, are sold, bartered, or exchanged, or to be so disposed of, but does not include disposing of any of such commodities as premiums to the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation under title V of this act.

"(B) 'Marketed,' 'marketing,' and 'for market' shall have corresponding meanings to the term 'market' in the connection in which they are used."

(c) By changing subdivision (7) thereof, containing the definition of "marketing year" for specific commodities, by striking out the period at the end of the commodities listed and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and adding thereafter the following: "Lettuce or melons, that period of 12 consecutive months determined by the Secretary as being the period during which substantially all of the commodity produced or harvested during any calendar year is marketed by farmers."

SEC. 6. That subsection (g) of section 302 of said act, as amended, containing a provision prohibiting the Commodity Credit Corporation from making loans with respect to any agricultural commodity during any marketing year when the producers of such commodity have indicated in a referendum their disapproval of a marketing quota for such commodity during such marketing year, is amended, so as to extend this provision to lettuce and melons, by striking out "or rice" and inserting in lieu thereof "rice, lettuce, or melons".

SEC. 7. That section 361 of said act, as amended, containing a provision extending the applicability of the publication and review of quota provisions of the act to tobacco, corn, wheat, cotton, and rice, is amended, so as to include lettuce and melons, by changing this section to read as follows:

"SEC. 361. This part shall apply to the publication and review of farm-marketing quotas established for tobacco, corn, wheat, cotton, rice, lettuce, and melons, established under subtitle B."

SEC. 8. That subsections (a) and (b) of section 371 of said act, as amended, containing several provisions with respect to the general adjustment of marketing quotas in case of a national emergency or a material increase in demand, are amended, so as to extend these provisions to lettuce and melons, by striking out "or tobacco" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "tobacco, lettuce, or melons".

SEC. 9. That section 373 of said act, as amended, containing provisions requiring records to be kept and reports to be made by producers, handlers, and other persons in order to enable the Secretary to acquire information with respect to the marketing of any commodity, is amended, so as to extend these provisions to lettuce and melons, by striking out "or tobacco" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "tobacco, lettuce, and melons"; and by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (a) of said section and inserting in lieu thereof "and all persons engaged in the business of packing lettuce or melons."

SEC. 10. That section 374 of said act, as amended, containing a provision authorizing the measurement of farms and the filing of reports of plantings, is amended, so as to include lettuce and melons, by striking out in the first sentence "or rice" and inserting in lieu thereof "rice, lettuce, or melons".

SEC. 11. That subsection (a) of section 375 of said act, as amended, containing a provision authorizing the issuance of such administrative regulations as are necessary for the enforcement of the act, is amended, so as to include lettuce and melons, by striking out "or tobacco" and inserting in lieu thereof "tobacco, lettuce, or melons".

PRESERVATION OF NATURAL FEATURES WITHIN CANAL ZONE

The bill (S. 4121) to authorize the setting aside of an area within the Canal Zone to preserve and conserve its natural features for scientific study, for providing and maintaining facilities for such study, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized and directed to set aside within the Canal Zone an area in Gatun Lake known as Barro Colorado Island in which the natural features shall, except in event of declared national emergency, be left in their natural state for scientific observation and investigation.

SEC. 2. The purpose of setting aside such an area is to preserve and conserve its natural features, including existing flora and fauna, in as nearly a natural condition as possible, thus providing a place where duly qualified students can make observations and scientific investigations for increase of knowledge, under such conditions and regulations as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the President of the National Academy of Sciences, and three distinguished biologists of the United States of America, appointed by the President of the National Academy of Sciences with the approval of the Secretaries of War, Agriculture, Interior, and the Smithsonian Institution, shall constitute the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area. The President of the National Academy of Sciences shall be the chairman of the Board and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution the vice chairman. The biologists of distinction appointed by the President of the National Academy of Sciences shall each serve for a term of 3 years: Provided, That of the three first appointed, one shall be designated to serve for 1 year, one for 2 years, and one for 3 years. Vacancies in appointed membership occurring from any cause shall be filled in the same manner as the appointment and for the same period. The members of the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area shall serve without compensation but subsistence and travel expenses incident to attendance of called meetings of the Board may, on appropriate action of the Board, be paid from funds available to it.

SEC. 4. The Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area shall (a) meet in Washington, D. C., at least once in each calendar year, to consider policies and procedures for carrying out the purpose of this act; (b) determine the policy, prescribe conditions under which studies may be pursued within the area, and promulgate regulations for carrying out the puropses of this act; (c) be responsible for the construction and maintenance of laboratory and other facilities on the area provided for the use of students authorized to carry on studies within the confines of the area; (d) deposit into the Treasury of the United States sums donated or subscribed or collected to be expended for carrying out the purposes of this act; (e) in its discretion, fixed charges that may be made for use of laboratory or other facilities provided students authorized to make observations and investigations within the prescribed area and provide for the collection of such sums for deposit into the Treasury of the United States; (f) make such disposal of any moneys donated, subscribed, collected, or otherwise provided as in their judgment is to the best interest in carrying out the purpose of this act: Provided, That sums contributed or appropriated for specific purposes shall be used for such purpose only; and (g) through its chairman submit to the Congress of the United States not later than the 15th day of each January a report of activities and operations during the preceding year.

SEC. 5. At each annual meeting, or at special meetings should occasion so demand, the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area shall appoint an executive officer whom they may authorize to carry out functions of the Board. With the approval of the Board the executive officer may select and designate a resident manager to assist in carrying out the policy, conditions, and regulations approved by the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area in compliance with the purposes of this act. The executive officer and the resident manager shall receive such compensation for their services as may be allowed by the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area.

SEC. 6. All moneys received by donation, subscription, fees, or otherwise, except the moneys appropriated pursuant to section 7, for carrying out the purposes of this act shall be deposited into the Treasury as trust funds and are hereby appropriated for such purposes. Disbursements of such funds shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury through the Division of Disbursement on requisitions or vouchers signed by or on authority of the executive officer of the Board of Directors of the Canal Zone Biological Area.

SEC. 7. There is authorized to be appropriated annually, from money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $10,000 for expenses necessary in the administration of this act and for the maintenance of laboratory or other facilities provided for carrying out the purposes of this act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri subsequently said:

Mr. President, the Senate has just passed Senate bill 4121, having to do with the establishment of a scientific research laboratory in the Gatun Lake in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. President, House bill 8919, passed by the House of Representatives, is an identical bill which is still reposing in the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that the vote by which Senate bill 4121 was passed, be reconsidered, and that the Senate consider House bill 8919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which Senate bill 4121 was passed is reconsidered.

Without objection, the Committee on Interoceanic Canals will be discharged from further consideration of House bill 8919.

Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 8919?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8919) to authorize the setting aside of an area within the Canal Zone to preserve and conserve its natural features for scientific study, for providing and maintaining facilities for such study, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4121 will be indefinitely postponed.

PUBCHASE OF PUBLIC LANDS IN FLORIDA

Mr. ANDREWS. I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar No. 1830, Senate bill 3975. The Senator who objected to instant consideration at the time it was reached on the calendar has now withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3975) granting to certain claimants the preference right to purchase certain public lands in the State of Florida, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, on page 3, line 13, after the word "interest", to strike out the comma and "but inclusive of the increased value of the land resulting from any public improvements", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to sell, in the manner hereinafter provided, lots 3, 4, and 5, section 10, lots 3, 4, 5, and 6, section 11, lots 1 and 2, section 14, township 3 south, range 17 west, Tallahassee meridian, Florida, which lands were omitted from the original survey due to the erroneous meanders of the Gulf of Mexico and shown upon the official plat of the original survey as a water-covered area.

SEC. 2. Any owner in good faith of land in sections 10, 11, and 14, township 3 south, range 17 west, shown by the official plat of the original survey approved May 22, 1849, to be bounded by the Gulf of Mexico, but which in fact is bounded by the omitted area as shown by plat of survey accepted March 6, 1939, and who acquired title to such land prior to this enactment, or any citizen of the United States who in good faith under color of title or claiming as a riparian owner has, prior to this act, placed valuable improvements upon or reduced to cultivation any of the lands subject to the operation of this act, shall have a preferred right to purchase the erroneously omitted land lying adjacent to his privately owned land, or to purchase the land thus improved by him, respectively, at any time within 90 days from the date of the passage of this act. Every application to purchase must be filed in the General Land Office and must be accompanied with satisfactory proof that the applicant is entitled to such preference right and that the lands which he applies to purchase are not in the legal possession of an adverse claimant under the public-land laws. The term "citizen" as herein used shall include any association of citizens, and a corporation organized under the laws of any State and authorized to engage in business in the State of Florida. In event that any such applicant shall have contracted to convey or attempted to convey title to any of the above-described lands with covenants of warranty, express or implied, he may be allowed to make such purchase and to obtain patent in trust for the persons holding under such contract or conveyance, as their interests may appear.

SEC. 3. Upon the filing of an application to purchase any lands subject to the operation of this act, together with the required proof, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands described in said application to be appraised, said appraisal to be on the basis of the value of such lands at the date of appraisal exclusive of any increased value resulting from the development or improvement thereof by the applicant or his predecessor in interest.

SEC. 4. An applicant to purchase under the provisions of this act, in order to be entitled to a patent, must, within 3 months from receipt of notice of appraisal, pay to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the appraised value of the lands, and thereupon a patent shall issue to said applicant for such lands as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that such applicant is entitled to purchase under this act. The proceeds from such sales shall be covered into the United States Treasury and applied as provided by law for the disposal of the proceeds from the sale of public lands.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for administering the provisions of this Act and determining conflicting claims arising hereunder.

SEC. 6. All purchases made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal, oil, gas, and other minerals in the lands so purchased and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNE HOWARD LAY

The bill (S. 4126) for the relief of Anne Howard Lay, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be paid from the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund to Anne Howard Lay, widow of Julius Lay, a retired Foreign Service officer whose death occurred on August 28, 1939; that is, after July 1, 1939, the effective date of the act of April 24, 1939, but before the date fixed in accordance with law by the President, by Executive order; that is, September 1, 1939, as the effective date of the provisions of the aforesaid act which authorize the establishment by retired Foreign Service officers of survivorship annuities in behalf of their widows as beneficiaries, an annuity at a rate equivalent to one-half the maximum annuity which her late husband could have established for her as beneficiary, in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 24, 1939, and amendments thereto.

This act shall take effect on the first day of the calendar month following its approval by the President.

TREATMENT OF IMPORTED NARCISSUS BULBS

The resolution (S. Res. 280) requesting the Secretary of Agriculture to issue an order concerning the treatment of imported narcissus bulbs was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he hereby is, requested to cause to be issued an order similar to the order of August 1, 1936, and the announcements of September 16, 1936, under which provisions of regulation 9 of Nursery Stock, Plant, and Seed Quarantine No. 37, plant quarantine inspectors will require all imported narcissus bulbs to be given the latest approved treatment as a condition of entry.

REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 559) authorizing a reduction in the rate of interest to be paid on certain loans and advances made to the District of Columbia by the United States of America through the Public Works Administration, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the District of Columbia made a loan, as it was authorized under the law, from the Federal Government for certain improvements and for acquisition of land. It pays 3 or 4 percent interest on the loan, and the District, with its credit, now is able to obtain money with which to pay the obligation, at a very much reduced rate of interest. So the measure will save the District of Columbia a considerable amount of money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECORDER OF DEEDS BUILDING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9114) authorizing advancements from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of a recorder of deeds building in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The first amendments of the Committee were in section 1, page 1, line 6, after "Works," to strike out "created by the National Industrial Recovery Act," and to insert "or its successor,"; in line 7, after the word "Administration," to insert "or its successor,"; on page 2, line 1, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$450,000"; in line 4, after the word "Administration," to insert "or its successor,"; in line 5, after the word "Administration," to insert "or its successor,"; in the same line, after the word "four", to strike out "the acquisition, purchase, construction, and establishment of"; in line 8, after "Northwest", to strike out "where was formerly the old Police Court Building", and to insert "formerly used as a police court"; in line 11, after the figures "1940", to strike out "or upon such other area or areas as shall be approved by said Commissioners and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission"; and in line 16, after the word "Administration", to strike out "or its successor", so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to accept advancements for the District of Columbia from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or its successor, and said Administration, or its successor, with the approval of the President is authorized to advance to said Commissioners the sum of $450,000, or any part thereof, in addition to any sums heretofore advanced to the District of Columbia by said Administration, or its successor, out of funds authorized by law for said Administration, or its successor, for a building for the office of the recorder of deeds to be located on premises now known as 515 D Street Northwest, formerly used as the police court, as recommended by a committee appointed by the Commissioners under order of January 12, 1940, and the making of such advances is hereby included among the purposes for which funds heretofore appropriated or authorized for said Administration, or its successor, including funds appropriated by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, may be used, in addition to the other purposes specified in the respective acts appropriating or authorizing said funds.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendments were, in section 2, page 2, line 23, after the name "Columbia" to strike out "for the acquisition by dedication, purchase, or condemnation of the fee-simple title to land, or rights or easements in land, for the public uses authorized by this act, and"; on page 3, line 4, after "act" to strike out "without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and section 3709 of the Revised Statutes"; on the same page, line 8, after "landscaping," to insert "transportation or rental thereof,"; and in line 13, after "plant" to strike out "All contracts, agreements, and proceedings in court for condemnation or otherwise, pursuant to this act shall be had and made in accordance with existing provisions of law except as otherwise herein provided", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The sum authorized by section 1 hereof, or any part thereof shall, when advanced, be available to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the preparation of plans, designs, estimates, models, and specifications; and for architectural and other necessary professional services required for carrying out the provisions of this act; for the construction of a recorder of deeds building, including materials and labor, heating, lighting, elevators, plumbing, landscaping, transportation or rental thereof, and all other appurtenances, and the purchase and installation of machinery, furniture, equipment, apparatus, and any and all other expenditures necessary for or incident to the complete construction and equipment for use of the aforesaid building and plant.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendments were, in section 3 on page 3, line 19, after the word "Works," to insert "or its successor"; in line 22, after the word "thereon" to insert "at such rate as is agreed upon by the Commissioners of the District and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or its successor,"; on page 4, line 4, after the word "reimbursement" to insert "with interest"; and in line 5, after the word "made" to strike out "on" and to insert "not later than", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or its successor, shall be repaid 55 percent of any moneys advanced under section 1 of this act in annual installments over a period of not to exceed 25 years with interest thereon at such rate as is agreed upon by the Commissioners of the District and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or its successor, for the period of amortization: Provided, That such sums as may be necessary for the reimbursement herein required of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of interest, shall be included in the annual estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the first reimbursement with interest to be made not later than June 30, 1944: Provided further, That whenever the District of Columbia is under obligation by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of Public Act No. 284, Seventy-first Congress, reimbursement under that act shall not be less than $300,000 in any one fiscal year.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are not authorized to borrow any further sum or sums under the provisions of an act of Congress known as Public Law No. 465, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 25, 1934, as amended by Public Law No. 51, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved May 6, 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9791) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 9, line 5, after the words "10 and 11 of" to strike out "this Act" and insert "the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, approved August 28, 1935, as amended by this title," so as to read:

(C) unless the individual was eligible for benefits with respect thereto as provided in sections 10 and 11 of the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, approved August 28, 1935, as amended by this title, except for the requirements of this paragraph; and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 22, after the word "this" to strike out "Act" and insert "title"; in line 25, after the word "appropriate" to strike out "non-assembled," so as to read:

SEC. 14. (a) The Board is hereby authorized and directed to administer the provisions of this act. Subject to the Civil Service Act, the Board is further authorized to employ such officers, examiners, accountants, attorneys, experts, agents, and other persons, and to make such expenditures, as may be necessary to administer this act, and to authorize any such person to do any act or acts which could lawfully be done by the Board. The Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to confer a competitive classified civil-service status upon those employees performing services for the Board upon the effective date of this title: Provided, That (1) such employees are certified by the Board as having rendered satisfactory service for not less than 6 months; (2) that they qualify in such appropriate, noncompetitive examination as may be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission: Provided, however, That all employees certified by the Board in accordance with condition (1) hereof shall automatically be eligible to take such noncompetitive examination; (3) that they are citizens of the United States; and (4) that they are not disqualified by any provision of section 3 of civil-service rule V. The Board may, in its discretion, require bond from any of its employees engaged in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 10, line 14, after the word "this" to strike out "act" and insert "title"; and the same amendment in line 16, so as to read:

TRANSITION PROVISIONS

SEC. 2. (a) As used in this section unless the context clearly requires otherwise—

(1) "old law" means the unemployment-compensation law prior to its amendment by this title;

(2) "new law" means the unemployment-compensation law as amended by this title;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 12, line 5, after the word "This", to strike out "act" and insert "title", so as to read:

SEC. 3. This title shall take effect as of 12:01 antemeridian, July 1, 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 6, to insert:

TITLE II

AMENDMENT—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1939

Section 2 (d) of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Exemptions from tax: There shall be exempt from taxation under this title the following organizations: Corporations, including any community chest, fund, foundation, cemetery association, teachers' retirement fund association, church, or club, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, educational, or social purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation; and labor organizations, trade associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, citizens' associations, or organizations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, farmers' associations organized and operated on a cooperative basis exempt from income tax under section 101 (12) and (13) of the Internal Revenue Code; banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and companies, incorporated or otherwise, which guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, all of which pay taxes upon gross premiums or earnings under existing laws of the District of Columbia; voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents, if (1) no part of their net earnings inures (other than such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (2) 85 percent or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of making such payments and meeting expenses; and corporations organized under act of Congress, if such corporations are instrumentalities of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

Add a new paragraph to section 1 (b) of District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, approved August 28, 1935, as follows:

"(10) Service performed by an individual for a person as an insurance agent or as an insurance solicitor, if all such service performed by such individual for such person is performed for remuneration solely by way of commission."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, when the bill was before the District Committee, by an oversight, insurance agents who work purely on commission, as differentiated from salary, were included in the act; and, of course, the act was not made to apply to commissioned employees. My amendment will clarify this matter. I do not think there is any objection from any source.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7865) to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, and acts amendatory thereof, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 3, after the word "hospitals" to insert "or public clinics for indigents," so as to read:

SEC. 2. The Board of Dental Examiners shall organize by electing from its members a president, and a secretary-treasurer who shall give bond to the United States in the sum of $5,000. The Board shall make and adopt such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as it deems necessary to effect the purposes of this act, including (but not limiting thereto) rules and regulations respecting the eligibility of candidates, the scope of examinations, the conducting of examinations, and the said Board hereby is specifically authorized to make and enforce such rules as it may deem proper for the purpose of regulating professional announcements and the number of offices of a licensed dentist. The Board, in its discretion, and under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, is hereby authorized to permit in hospitals or public clinics for indigents the use of dental interns who are graduates of approved dental schools. The Board shall hold in January and June of each year, in such place as it may designate, examinations to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses as dentists under this act: Provided, That the concurrence of a majority of said Board shall be necessary to grant or revoke a license under this act.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, after the words "United States" to insert "or has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States,"; and in line 18, after the word "applicant" and the period, to insert "Any license issued to a person who is a citizen of a foreign country and who has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall automatically terminate and the registration of the candidate be annulled in the event such candidate shall fail to submit to the Board satisfactory evidence within 6 years from the date of such license that he has become a citizen of the United States.", so as to read:

SEC. 7. Any person who desires to practice dentistry within the District of Columbia shall file with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application for a license, and furnish satisfactory proof that he is a citizen of the United States or has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and is a graduate of a dental college approved by the Board. Such application must be upon the form prescribed by the Board, verified by oath, and accompanied by the required fee and a recent unmounted autographed photograph of the applicant. Any license issued to a person who is a citizen of a foreign country and who has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall automatically terminate and the registration of the candidate be annulled in the event such candidate shall fail to submit to the Board satisfactory evidence within 6 years from the date of such license that he has become a citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, to strike out "Board" and insert "District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia"; in line 6, after the word "said", to strike out "Board" and insert "court"; and in line 12, after the word "drugs", to strike out "or afflicted with a contagious or infectious disease", so as to read:

SEC. 11. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may revoke or suspend the license of any dentist in the District of Columbia upon proof satisfactory to said court—

(a) That said license or registration was procured through fraud or misrepresentation.

(b) That the holder thereof has been convicted of an offense involving moral turpitude.

(c) That the holder thereof is guilty of chronic or persistent inebriety, or addiction to habit-forming drugs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 11, after the words "any person to", to insert "knowingly"; in line 20, after the words "restricting the", to strike out "Board" and insert "said court", so as to read:

(5) Violating this act or aiding any person to violate this act or violating or aiding any person to knowingly violate the dental practice act of any State or Territory.

(6) Practicing in the employment of, or in association with, any person who is practicing in an unlawful or unprofessional manner.

The foregoing specifications of acts constituting unprofessional conduct shall not be construed as a complete definition of unprofessional conduct nor as authorizing or permitting the performance of other or similar acts not denounced, or as limiting or restricting the said court from holding that other or similar acts also constitute unprofessional conduct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 22, to strike out:

"SEC. 13. No action to revoke or suspend a license shall be taken until the accused has been furnished a statement in writing of the charges against him, together with notice of the time and place of hearing thereof. The accused may be present at the hearings in person or by counsel, or both. The statement of charges and notice may be served personally upon such person or mailed to him at his last known address at least 20 days prior to the hearing.

"SEC. 14. If upon such hearing the Board finds the charges sustained, it may suspend for a definite period or revoke the license of any such dentist. Such revocation or suspension shall take from the person named in such license all rights and privileges acquired thereby. Any dentist whose license has been revoked or suspended by the Board may, within 20 days after the order of revocation or suspension was entered, appeal from such order to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, where the case shall be heard de novo, and the court, after such hearing, shall enter such order as in its judgment the Board should have entered. During the pendency of such appeal the order of the Board shall remain in full force and effect unless the court shall otherwise order. Any dentist whose license has been suspended or revoked may be reinstated and a new license issued to him when in the judgment of the Board such action is warranted: Provided, That such reinstated dentist shall pay all the costs of the proceedings resulting in his suspension and reinstatement and in addition thereto a fee of $25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert:

SEC. 12. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may suspend or revoke any license issued and any registration upon evidence showing to the satisfaction of the court that the licentiate or registrant, as the case may be, has been guilty of misconduct or is professionaly incapacitated.

Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of a license or registration shall be begun by petition filed in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in the name of the Board of Dental Examiners and shall be verified by oath. Proceedings shall be conducted according to the ordinary rules of equity practice and such supplementary rules as said court may deem expedient to carry into effect the purposes and intent of this Act; and said court is hereby authorized to make such supplementary rules. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia to the United States Court of Appeals of said District. Any such appeal on behalf of the Board of Dental Examiners may be filed without bond. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may determine whether a license or registration shall be suspended or revoked, and if such license is to be suspended said court may determine the duration of such suspension and the conditions under which such suspension shall terminate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 17, after the word "give" to strike out "written clinical"; and on page 16, line 6, after the word "colleges" to insert: "Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, no person shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry who on the date of the enactment of this act is operating a radiographic laboratory for the purpose of making radiographs, or giving written clinical interpretations or readings of dental radiographs, to be used solely by dentists and physicians in making diagnoses", so as to read:

SEC. 15. Any person shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry who performs, or attempts or advertises to perform, any dental operation or oral surgery or dental service of any kind gratuitously or for a salary, fee, money, or other remunerations paid, or to be paid, directly or indirectly, to himself or to any other person or agency; or who is a manager, proprietor, operator, or conductor of a place where dental operations, oral surgery, or dental services are performed; or who directly or indirectly, by any means or method, furnishes, supplies, constructs, reproduces, or repairs any prosthetic denture, bridge, appliance, or any other structure to be worn in the human mouth, except on the written prescription of a duly licensed and practicing dentist; or who places such appliance or structure in the human mouth or attempts to adjust the same, or delivers the same to any person other than the dentist upon whose prescription the work was performed; or who advertises to the public, by any method, to furnish, supply, construct, reproduce, or repair any prosthetic denture, bridge, appliance, or other structure to be worn in the human mouth; or who diagnoses or professes to diagnose, prescribes for or professes to prescribe for, treats or professes to treat disease, pain, deformity, deficiency, injury, or physical condition of human teeth or jaws, or adjacent structures; or who extracts or attempts to extract human teeth, or corrects or attempts or professes to correct malpositions of teeth or of the jaws; or who gives or professes to give interpretations or readings of dental roentgenograms; or who administers an anesthetic of any nature in connection with a dental operation; or who uses the words "dentist," "dental surgeon," "oral surgeon," the letters "D. D. S.," "D. M. D.," or any other words, letters, title, or descriptive matter which in any way represent him as being able to diagnose, treat, prescribe, or operate for any disease, pain, deformity, deficiency, injury, or physical condition of human teeth or jaws, or adjacent structures; or who states, or advertises or permits to be stated or advertised, by sign, card, circular, handbill, newspaper, radio, or otherwise, that he can perform or will attempt to perform dental operations or render a diagnosis in connection therewith or who engages in any of the practices included in the curricula of recognized dental colleges. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, no person shall be deemed to be practicing dentistry who on the date of the enactment of this act is operating a radiographic laboratory for the purpose of making radiographs, or giving written clinical interpretations or readings of dental radiographs, to be used solely by dentists and physicians in making diagnoses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider the conference report on House bill 5138, the alien registration bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I

"(1) to advise, counsel, urge, or in any manner cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States; or

"(2) to distribute any written or printed matter which advises, counsels, or urges insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term "military or naval forces of the United States" includes the Army of the United States, as defined in section 1 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (48 Stat. 153; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 2), the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserve, and Marine Corps Reserve of the United States; and, when any merchant vessel is commissioned in the Navy or is in the service of the Army or the Navy, includes the master, officers, and crew of such vessel.

"SEC. 2. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) to knowingly or willfully advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence, or by the assassination of any officer of any such government;

"(2) with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States, to print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, sell, distribute, or publicly display any written or printed matter advocating, advising, or teaching the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence;

"(3) to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence; or to be or become a member of, or affiliate with, any such society, group, or assembly of persons, knowing the purposes thereof.

"(b) for the purposes of this section, the term 'government in the United States" means the Government of the United States, the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or the government of any political subdivision of any of them.

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to attempt to commit, or to conspire to commit, any of the acts prohibited by the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 4. Any written or printed matter of the character described in section 1 or section 2 of this Act, which is intended for use in violation of this Act, may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found, or from any person in whose possession it may be, under a search warrant issued pursuant to the provisions of title XI of the Act entitled 'An Act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 18, ch. 18).

"SEC. 5. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(b) No person convicted of violating any of the provisions of this title shall, during the five years next following his conviction, be eligible for employment by the United States, or by any department or agency thereof (including any corporation the stock of which is wholly owned by the United States).

"TITLE II

"SEC. 20. Section 19 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 155), as amended, is amended by inserting, after 'SEC. 19.', the letter '(a)', and by adding at the end of such section the following new subsections:

"'(b) Any alien of any of the classes specified in this subsection, in addition to aliens who are deportable under other provisions of law, shall, upon warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported:

"'(1) Any alien who, at any time within five years after entry, shall have, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(2) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have on more than one occasion, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien or aliens to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(3) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted of possessing or carrying in violation of any law any weapon which shoots or is designed to shoot automatically or semiautomatically more than one shot without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger, or a weapon commonly called a sawed-off shotgun.

"'(4) Any alien who, at any time within 5 years after entry, shall have been convicted of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.

"'(5) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted more than once of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.'

"No alien who is deportable under the provisions of paragraph (3), (4), or (5) of this subsection shall be deported until the termination of his imprisonment or the entry of an order releasing him on probation or parole.

"'(c) In the case of any alien (other than one to whom subsection (d) is applicable) who is deportable under any law of the United States and who has proved good moral character for the preceding 5 years, the Attorney General may (1) permit such alien to depart the United States to any country of his choice at his own expense, in lieu of deportation, or (2) suspend deportation of such alien if not racially inadmissible or ineligible to naturalization in the United States if he finds that such deportation would result in serious economic detriment to a citizen or legally resident alien who is the spouse, parent, or minor child of such deportable alien. If the deportation of any alien is suspended under the provisions of this subsection for more than 6 months, all of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the case shall be reported to the Congress within 10 days after the beginning of its next regular session, with the reasons for such suspension. The Clerk of the House shall have such report printed as a public document. If during that session the two Houses pass a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the suspension of such deportation, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law. If during that session the two Houses do not pass such a resolution, the Attorney General shall cancel deportation proceedings upon the termination of such session, except that such proceedings shall not be canceled in the case of any alien who was not legally admitted for permanent residence at the time of his last entry into the United States, unless such alien pays to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a fee of $18 (which fee shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipt). Upon the cancelation of such proceedings in any case in which such fee has been paid, the Commissioner shall record the alien's admission for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States and the Secretary of State shall, if the alien was a quota immigrant at the time of entry and was not charged to the appropriate quota, reduce by one the immigration quota of the country of the alien's nationality as defined in section 12 of the act of May 26, 1924 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 212), for the fiscal year then current or next following.

"'(d) The provisions of subsection (c) shall not be applicable in the case of any alien who is deportable under (1) the Act of October 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), entitled "An Act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes", as amended; (2) the Act of May 26, 1922, entitled "An Act to amend the Act entitled 'An Act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes', approved February 9, 1909, as amended" (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175); (3) the Act of February 18, 1931, entitled "An Act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics", as amended (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a); (4) any of the provisions of so much of subsection (a) of this section as relates to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other immoral persons, the mentally and physically deficient, anarchists, and similar classes; or (5) subsection (b) of this section.'

"SEC. 21. The Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics', approved February 18, 1931, is amended—

"(1) By striking out the words 'and sentenced';

"(2) By inserting after the words 'any statute of the United States' the following: 'or of any State, Territory, possession, or of the District of Columbia,'; and

"(3) By inserting after the word 'heroin' a comma and the word 'marihuana'.

"SEC. 22. No alien shall be deportable by reason of the amendments made by section 20 or 21 on account of any act committed prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

"SEC. 23. (a) The first paragraph of section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes', approved October 16, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'That any alien who, at any time, shall be or shall have been a member of any one of the following classes shall be excluded from admission into the United States:'.

"(b) Section 2 of such Act of October 16, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. Any alien who was at the time of entering the United States, or has been at any time thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this Act, shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this Act, irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States.'

"TITLE III

"SEC. 30. No visa shall hereafter be issued to any alien seeking to enter the United States unless said alien has been registered and fingerprinted in duplicate. One copy of the registration and fingerprint record shall be retained by the consul. The second copy shall be attached to the alien's visa and shall be taken up by the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival of the alien in the United States and forwarded to the Department of Justice, at Washington, District of Columbia.

"Any alien seeking to enter the United States who does not present a visa (except in emergency cases defined by the Secretary of State), a reentry permit, or a border-crossing identification card shall be excluded from admission to the United States.

"SEC. 31. (a) It shall be the duty of every alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is 14 years of age or older, (2) has not been registered and fingerprinted under section 30, and (3) remains in the United States for 30 days or longer, to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted before the expiration of such 30 days.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every parent or legal guardian of any alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is less than 14 years of age, (2) has not been registered under section 30, and (3) remains in the United States for 30 days or longer, to apply for the registration of such alien before the expiration of such 30 days. Whenever any alien attains his fourteenth birthday in the United States he shall, within 30 days thereafter, apply in person for registration and to be fingerprinted.

"SEC. 32. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 30 and 31—

"(a) The application for the registration and fingerprinting, or for the registration, of any alien who is in the United States on the effective date of such sections may be made at any time within 4 months after such date.

"(b) No foreign government official, or member of his family, shall be required to be registered or fingerprinted under this title.

"(c) The Commissioner is authorized to prescribe, with the approval of the Attorney General, special regulations for the registration and fingerprinting of (1) alien seamen, (2) holders of border-crossing identification cards, (3) aliens confined in institutions within the United States, (4) aliens under order of deportation, and (5) aliens of any other class not lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

"SEC. 33. (a) All applications for registration and fingerprinting under section 31 shall be made at post offices or such other places as may be designated by the Commissioner.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every postmaster, with such assistance as shall be provided by the Commissioner, to register and fingerprint any applicant for registration and fingerprinting under such section, and for such purposes to designate appropriate space in the local post office for such registration and fingerprinting. Every postmaster shall forward promptly to the Department of Justice, at Washington, District of Columbia, the registration and fingerprint record of every alien registered and fingerprinted by him. The Commissioner may designate such other places for registration and fingerprinting as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, and provide for registration and fingerprinting of aliens at such places by officers or employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service designated by the Commissioner. The duties imposed upon any postmaster under this act shall also be performed by any employees at the post office of such postmaster who are designated by the postmaster for such purpose.

"SEC. 34. (a) The Commissioner is authorized and directed to prepare forms for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens under this title. Such forms shall contain inquiries with respect to (1) the date and place of entry of the alien into the United States; (2) activities in which he has been and intends to be engaged; (3) the length of time he expects to remain in the United States; (4) the criminal record, if any, of such alien; and (5) such additional matters as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General.

"(b) All registration and fingerprint records made under the provisions of this title shall be secret and confidential, and shall be made available only to such persons or agencies as may be designated by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General.

"(c) Every person required to apply for the registration of himself or another under this title shall submit under oath the information required for such registration. Any person authorized to register aliens under this title shall be authorized to administer oaths for such purpose.

"SEC. 35. Any alien required to be registered under this title who is a resident of the United States shall notify the Commissioner in writing of each change of residence and new address within five days from the date of such change. Any other alien required to be registered under this title shall notify the Commissioner in writing of his address at the expiration of each three months' period of residence in the United States. In the case of an alien for whom a parent or legal guardian is required to apply for registration, the notices required by this section shall be given by such parent or legal guardian.

"SEC. 36. (a) Any alien required to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted who willfully fails or refuses to make such application or to be fingerprinted, and any parent or legal guardian required to apply for the registration of any alien who willfully fails or refuses to file application for the registration of such alien, shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not to exceed $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

"(b) Any alien, or any parent or legal guardian of any alien, who fails to give written notice to the Commissioner of change of address as required by section 35 of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not to exceed $100, or be imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both.

"(c) Any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien, who files an application for registration containing statements known by him to be false, or who procures or attempts to procure registration of himself or another person through fraud, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and any alien so convicted within five years after entry into the United States shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and be deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended.

"SEC. 37. (a) The Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General, is authorized and empowered to make and prescribe, and from time to time to change and amend, such rules and regulations not in conflict with this Act as he may deem necessary and proper in aid of the administration and enforcement of this title (including provisions for the identification of aliens registered under this title); except that all such rules and regulations, insofar as they relate to the performance of functions by consular officers or officers or employees in the Postal Service, shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General, respectively, upon recommendation of the Attorney General. The powers conferred upon the Attorney General by this Act and all other powers of the Attorney General relating to the administration of the Immigration and Naturalization Service may be exercised by the Attorney General through such officers of the Department of Justice, including officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, attorneys, special attorneys, and special assistants to the Attorney General, as he may designate specifically for such purposes.

"(b) The Commissioner is authorized to make such expenditures, to employ such additional temporary and permanent employees, and to rent such quarters outside the District of Columbia as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 38. (a) For the purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'United States', when used in a geographical sense, means the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands;

"(2) the term 'Commissioner' means the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

"(b) The provisions of this title shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act; except that sections 30 and 31 shall take effect sixty days after the date of its enactment.

"SEC. 39. The President is authorized to provide, by Executive order, for the registration and fingerprinting, in a manner as nearly similar to that provided in this title as he deems practicable, of aliens in the Panama Canal Zone.

"TITLE IV

"SEC. 40. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 41. This Act may be cited as the 'Alien Registration Act. 1940'.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether or not the bill as reported in the conference report is substantially the same as the bill passed by the Senate on last Saturday?

Mr. MILLER. I believe there are only three amendments. Two of them are technical and one relates to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. We changed that amendment and in the report we divided the penalty. We made the deportation penalty apply only to those convicted of making false statements and not to those guilty of failure to register. However, for willful failure to register we increased the maximum penalty from $100 to $1,000, and the maximum imprisonment from 30 days to 1 year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Outside of that, the House accepted the Senate amendments?

Mr. MILLER. Outside of that, the House accepted the Senate amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PRACTICE OF PODIATRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8692) to amend the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 4, line 25, after "United States", to insert "or has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States"; and on page 5, line 4, after "Board", to insert "Any license issued to a person who is a citizen of a foreign country and who has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall automatically terminate and the registration of the candidate be annulled in the event such candidate shall fail to submit to the Board satisfactory evidence within 6 years from the date of such license that he has become a citizen of the United States", so as to read:

SEC. 5. Any person who desires to begin the practice of podiatry within the District of Columbia shall file with the secretary-treasurer of the Board a written application for a license, and furnish satisfactory proof that he is a citizen of the United States or has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, not less than 21 years of age, of good moral character, and is a graduate of a podiatry college recognized by the National Association of Chiropodists and approved by the Board. Any license issued to a person who is a citizen of a foreign country and who has duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall automatically terminate and the registration of the candidate be annulled in the event such candidate shall fail to submit to the Board satisfactory evidence within 6 years from the date of such license that he has become a citizen of the United States. Such application must be upon the form prescribed by the Board, vertified by oath, and accompanied by the required fee and a recent unmounted autographed photograph of the applicant. The Board shall hold in January and July of each year, in such place as it may designate, examinations to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, to strike out "Board" and insert "District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia", and in line 4, to strike out "Board" and insert "court", so as to read:

SEC. 7. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may revoke or suspend the license of any podiatrist in the District of Columbia upon proof satisfactory to said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 23, after the words "act or", to insert "to knowingly violate", so as to read:

(5) Violating this act or aiding any person to violate this act or to knowingly violate the podiatry act of any State or Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 7, after the words "restricting the", to strike out "Board" and insert "said court", so as to read:

The foregoing specifications of acts constituting unprofessional conduct shall not be construed as a complete definition of unprofessional conduct nor as authorizing or permitting the performance of other or similar acts not denounced, or as limiting or restricting the said court from holding that other or similar acts also constitute unprofessional conduct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 9, to strike out:

SEC. 8. No action to revoke or suspend a license shall be taken until the accused has been furnished a statement in writing of the charges against him, together with notice of the time and place of hearing thereof. The accused may be present at the hearings in person or by counsel, or both. The statement of charges and notice may be served personally upon such person or mailed to him at his last known address at least 20 days prior to the hearing. If upon such hearing the Board finds the charges sustained, it may suspend for a definite period or revoke the license of any such podiatrist. Such revocation or suspension shall take from the person named in such license all rights and privileges acquired thereby. Any podiatrist whose license has been revoked or suspended by the Board may, within 20 days after the order of revocation or suspension was entered, appeal from such order to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, where the case shall be heard de novo, and the court, after such hearing, shall enter such order as in its judgment the Board should have entered. During the pendency of such appeal the order of the Board shall remain in full force and effect unless the court shall otherwise order. Any podiatrist whose license has been suspended or revoked may be reinstated and a new license issued to him when in the judgment of the Board such action is warranted, provided such reinstated podiatrist shall pay all the costs of the proceedings resulting in his suspension and reinstatement and in addition thereto a fee of $25.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 8. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may suspend or revoke any license issued and any registration upon evidence showing to the satisfaction of the court that the licentiate or registrant, as the case may be, has been guilty of misconduct or is professionally incapacitated.

Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of a license or registration shall be begun by petition filed in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in the name of the Board of Podiatry Examiners and shall be verified by oath. Proceedings shall be conducted according to the ordinary rules of equity practice and such supplementary rules as said court may deem expedient to carry into effect the purposes and intent of this act; and said court is hereby authorized to make such supplementary rules. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia to the United States Court of Appeals of said District. Any such appeal on behalf of the Board of Podiatry Examiners may be filed without bond. The District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia may determine whether a license or registration shall be suspended or revoked, and if such license is to be suspended said court may determine the duration of such suspension and the conditions under which such suspension shall terminate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 1, after the word "qualified", to strike out "physician or surgeon" and insert "practitioner of the healing arts", so as to read:

SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall apply to a bona fide student of podiatry in the clinic rooms of a reputable podiatry college; to a licensed and legally qualified practioner of the healing arts, to a podiatrist of the United States Army, Navy, Public Health Service, or Veterans' Administration, in the discharge of his official duties, nor to a lawful practitioner of podiatry in another State or Territory making a clinical demonstration before a bona fide society, convention, association of podiatrists, or podiatry college, or performing his duties in connection with a specific case on which he may have been called to the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a number of amendments which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 1, after the word "candidates", it is proposed to strike out the comma and insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "such" and insert the word "each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 4, after the comma following the word "license", it is proposed to insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "by it."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the word "heretofore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "will" and insert "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF STEAM AND OTHER OPERATING ENGINEERS

The bill (H. R. 8815) to grant per diem compensation to the appointed members of the Board of Steam and Other Operating Engineers of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 9804) to amend and clarify section 6, subsection 2, of the act approved June 1, 1938, known as "Juvenile Court Act of the District of Columbia", and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF LIFE INSURANCE ACT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 9299) to amend section 10 of chapter 5 of Public Act No. 436, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 19, 1934, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIENS ON MOTOR VEHICLES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 9907) to provide for the recording and releasing of liens by entries on certificates of title for motor vehicles and trailers, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3720) to create and establish a Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, on page 3, line 17, after the word "Board", to insert "and shall also be secretary-treasurer of said Board and shall give bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such amount as the Board may deem necessary"; and on page 4, line 8, after the word "cause", to insert "The members of said Board shall serve without compensation." So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint as members of said Board six persons who shall have been actively engaged at a place of business in the District of Columbia in the business or profession of funeral directing or embalming for a minimum of 5 consecutive years immediately preceding their appointment, a physician licensed to practice in the District of Columbia, and a representative from the faculty of any one of the medical schools located in the District of Columbia; each member of said Board shall be not less than 25 years of age, of good moral character, and a citizen of the United States. In addition thereto, the health officer of the District of Columbia or a member of the personnel of the Health Department of the District of Columbia designated by said health officer, shall serve, ex officio, as a member of said Board and shall also be secretary-treasurer of said Board and shall give bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such amount as the Board may deem necessary, but without added compensation for his services as such. The Commissioners shall appoint the first members of said Board within 30 days from the enactment of this act. Four members of the Board originally appointed by the Commissioners shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, and four members shall be appointed for a term of 2 years. Thereafter, the term of the members of said Board shall be for 2 years and until their successors are appointed by the Commissioners and have qualified. Members to fill vacancies shall be appointed by the Commissioners for the unexpired term. The Commissioners may remove any member of the Board at any time for neglect of duty or other just cause. The members of said Board shall serve without compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, on page 5, after line 1, to strike out "the Board shall appoint a secretary-treasurer of the Board, who need not be a member of the Board, and such secretary-treasurer shall give bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such amount as the Board may deem necessary", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. (a) The Board shall meet in the District of Columbia at least once each year on the second Tuesday of the month of January of each year and may hold other meetings at such time as it deems necessary; and the time and place of said meetings shall be fixed and determined by the Board in its rules and regulations. At the January meeting, which shall be known as the annual meeting, the Board shall elect from among its members a president and a vice president. Five members of said Board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at any meeting; if, however, such quorum shall not be present at any regularly called meeting, the members present may adjourn such meeting from time to time until such quorum is present. The Board is hereby authorized and empowered to make, and from time to time may alter, such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as it deems necessary for the conduct of its business and for the proper execution and enforcement of the provisions of this act. The Board shall adopt a common seal and from time to time may alter the same if it is deemed proper; the courts of the District of Columbia shall take judicial notice of such seal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 5, line 25, after "(a)", to strike out "The members of the Board shall serve without pay. The secretary-treasurer shall, however, be paid such salary as shall be approved by the Board, and such salary shall be paid out of the funds received by the Board and no part of such compensation shall be paid otherwise by the District of Columbia."; on page 6, line 13, after the word "The", to strike out "Board" and insert "Secretary-treasurer"; in line 15, after the word "as", to strike out "it" and insert "he"; at the beginning of line 16, to insert "subject to the approval of the Board"; in line 21, after the word "space", to strike out "furniture, stationery, heat, light, telephone, and other office facilities and proper conveniences", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary-treasurer shall perform such duties as the Board by its rules and regulations shall prescribe. The Board may appoint one or more inspectors whose duties shall be determined by the Board, and the salary and necessary expenses of such inspector or inspectors shall be paid out of the funds received by the Board and no part of such compensation shall be paid otherwise by the District of Columbia.

(b) The secretary-treasurer is hereby authorized and empowered to employ and fix the salary of such clerical assistants as he may, from time to time, deem necessary subject to the approval of the Board; the compensation of such employee or employees shall be paid out of the funds received by the Board and no part of such compensation shall be paid otherwise by the District of Columbia.

(c) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall provide, for the use of the Board, such office space as shall be reasonably necessary for carrying out the provisions and to effectuate the purposes of this act. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia shall act as counsel for the Board but without added compensation for his services as such.

(d) The Board is hereby authorized and empowered to receive, and the Anatomical Board of the District of Columbia (32 Stat. 174, ch. 638, sec. 9) is hereby authorized to deliver, under the terms and conditions of the act creating said Anatomical Board of the District of Columbia, to said Board, a sufficient number of dead human bodies for the purpose of enabling said Board to conduct the examinations in funeral directing and embalming provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, on page 9, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "for the succeeding calendar year", and insert, "All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. Within 60 days from the enactment of this act, every person registered prior to the enactment of this act with the Health Department of the District of Columbia as an undertaker and actually engaged in such business at the time of the enactment of this act at a fixed place or establishment equipped as a funeral home and desiring to continue those activities of an undertaker defined in this act as funeral director shall furnish proof satisfactory to the Board that he was so registered and so engaged in such business. Such proof having been made to the satisfaction of the Board, the Board shall cause the name of such person to be registered as a funeral director in a book provided for that purpose and kept by the secretary-treasurer of the Board, and upon the payment of a fee of $10 the Board shall issue to such person a license to engage in the business or profession of funeral directing in the District of Columbia. All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall be renewed annually on or before the 1st day of July of each year upon the payment of an annual renewal fee of $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, on page 9, line 14, after "act" to strike out "such person", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. After the enactment of this act any person desiring to engage in the District of Columbia in the business or profession of funeral directing, as defined in this act, who was not so engaged at the time of the enactment of this act, or any person so engaged at the time of the enactment of this act who failed to avail himself of the provisions of section 10 of this act, shall present himself before the Board for a license to practice funeral directing. Such person shall submit proof satisfactory to the Board that he is not less than 21 years of age, that he is of good moral character and free from any habits liable to interfere with the performance of his duties, and that he is a graduate from a recognized high school or its equivalent. Such person shall also submit proof satisfactory to the Board that he has had not less than 2 years' practical experience as an apprentice with a licensed funeral director in the District of Columbia and that he was registered as an apprentice with the Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers of the District of Columbia at the time he started to serve his apprenticeship and that such apprenticeship was served in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of this act. Such person shall be examined by the Board as to the proper sanitation and disinfection of the clothing and bedding of persons dying from communicable diseases and the premises in which they died; as to laws of the District of Columbia relative to death certificates, removals, burials, burial permits, and interstate shipment of dead bodies; and as to the proper care, preparation for burial, and burial of dead human bodies, and such other subjects as the Board deems necessary and proper. Each such applicant for a license to engage in the business or profession of funeral directing shall submit formal application, supporting data, photograph, and shall pay an examination fee of $25 which, if the applicant passes or fails the examination herein authorized, shall not be returnable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, on page 10, at the beginning of line 21, to strike out "therefore"; on page 11, line 3, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "for the succeeding calendar year" and insert "All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. When the Board shall find that the applicant for a license to practice the business or profession of funeral directing as defined in this act possesses the qualifications prescribed in this act, and when the applicant shall have passed the examination prescribed by the Board, the Board shall cause the name of such applicant to be registered in a book to be provided for that purpose and kept by the secretary-treasurer of the Board, and upon the payment of the license fee of $10, the Board shall issue to such person a license to engage in the business or profession of funeral directing in the District of Columbia. All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall be renewed annually on or before the 1st day of July of each year upon the payment of an annual fee of $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, on page 12, line 12, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "for the succeeding calendar year" and insert "All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. Within 60 days from the enactment of this act, every person registered, prior to the enactment of this act, with the Health Department of the District of Columbia as an undertaker and actually engaged in such business at the time of the enactment of this act at a fixed place or establishment equipped as a funeral home and desiring to continue those activities of an undertaker defined in this act as embalmer shall furnish proof satisfactory to the Board that he was so registered and so engaged in such business. Such proof having been made to the satisfaction of the Board, the Board shall cause the name of such person to be registered as an embalmer in a book to be provided for that purpose and kept by the secretary-treasurer of the Board, and upon the payment of a fee of $10 the Board shall issue to such person a license to engage in the business or profession of embalming in the District of Columbia. All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall be renewed annually on or before the 1st day of July of each year upon the payment of an annual renewal fee of $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, on page 12, line 24, after "act", to strike out "such person"; on page 13, line 6, after "equivalent", to strike out "and"; in line 9, after "study", to strike out "and", and in line 11, after "District of Columbia," to strike out "and", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. After the enactment of this act any person desiring to engage, in the District of Columbia, in the business or profession of embalming as defined in this act, or any person so engaged at the time of the enactment of this act who failed to avail himself of the provisions of section 14 of this act, shall present himself before the Board for a license to practice embalming. Such person shall submit proof satisfactory to the Board that he is not less than 21 years of age and that he is of good moral character and free from any habits liable to interfere with the performance of his duties. Such person shall also submit proof that he is a graduate of a recognized high school or its equivalent; that he is a graduate of an approved college of embalming whose course of instruction is not less than 9 months, comprising not less than 840 hours of study; that he has had not less than 2 years of practical experience as an apprentice with a licensed embalmer in the District of Columbia; that he was registered as an apprentice with the Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers at the time he started to serve his apprenticeship and that such apprenticeship was served in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of this act. Such person shall be examined by the Board, theoretically and practically, in anatomy, embalming, embalming fluids, sanitation, disinfection, the care and preparation of dead bodies for burial and the shipment of same, laws and regulations pertaining to communicable diseases, and such other subjects as the Board deems necessary and proper. Each applicant for a license to engage in the business or profession of embalming to be issued after examination shall submit formal application, supporting data, photograph, and shall pay an examination fee of $25 which, if the applicant passes or fails the examination herein authorized, shall not be returnable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, on page 14, line 13, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "for the succeeding calendar year", and insert "All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. When the Board shall find that the applicant for a license to practice the business or profession of embalming as defined in this act possesses the qualifications therefor prescribed in this act, and when the applicant shall have passed the examination prescribed by the Board, the Board shall cause the name of such applicant to be registered in a book to be provided for that purpose and kept by the secretary-treasurer of the Board, and upon the payment of the license fee of $10, the Board shall issue to such person a license to engage in the business or profession of embalming in the District of Columbia. All licenses issued shall date from the 1st day of July in each year and expire on the 30th day of June following. Every license issued under the provisions of this section shall be renewed annually on or before the 1st day of July of each year upon the payment of an annual fee of $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, on page 17, line 9, after "Board" to insert "in case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpena issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the Board, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpena and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. The Board is hereby authorized and empowered to investigate any alleged violation of the provisions of this act or any alleged violation or violations of the rules and regulations herein authorized to be promulgated by the Board; to summon alleged violators for hearing before the Board, to subpena witnesses or take the testimony of any person by deposition; to administer oaths to witnesses before the Board; to compel testimony of and from witnesses; to require the production of books, records, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise; and to aid in the prosecution of any alleged violation of this act or of the rules and regulations herein authorized to be promulgated by the Board. In case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpena issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the Board, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpena and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, on page 18, after line 5, to insert "It shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the Board at the end of each fiscal year and make a report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said auditor shall have free access to all books of accounts, papers, and records of the said Board", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. All fees and charges payable under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the secretary-treasurer of the Board and by him deposited as directed by the Board. The Board shall pay from the fund thus established all of the expenses of the Board, including such as may be incident to investigation and criminal prosecution. Disbursements authorized by the Board shall be made by check signed by the secretary-treasurer of the Board. The Board is hereby empowered to refund any fee or charge, or portion thereof, erroneously paid or collected under this act. At the close of each fiscal year any and all funds of the Board in excess of the sum of $1,000 shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia. It shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the Board at the end of each fiscal year and make a report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said auditor shall have free access to all books of accounts, papers, and records of the said Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 20, line 4, after the word "on", to strike out "the second" and insert "or before the third"; at the beginning of line 6, to strike out "during" and insert "for"; in line 6, after "preceding", to strike out "calendar" and insert "fiscal", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 26. The Board shall report annually to the Commissioners on or before the third Monday in January its proceedings under the provisions of this act for the preceding fiscal year with recommendations for such further legislation as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, since this bill has been reported a number of intelligent and respectable citizens of the District have called on me and asked that the measure be amended. The bill was reported by the able Senator from Mississippi. I do not feel like interrupting the proceedings in order to tender the amendments without their being referred to the committee. I simply give notice that I shall confer with the chairman and members of the committee, and if they feel that the bill should be amended, I may move to reconsider it at a later date.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not understand the statement of the Senator from Utah. He is referring to a District of Columbia bill?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Were the amendments submitted to the District Committee?

Mr. KING. They were not. That is the reason I do not feel like interrupting the proceedings now to offer them.

Mr. McCARRAN. But have they been offered?

Mr. KING. I have not offered them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under the circumstances, I think the bill should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BOULDER DAM

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. JOHNSON of California conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8450) to extend for 2 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner loans.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 2901. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Geraldine Ash;

H. R. 2354. An act for the relief of S. T. Enloe;

H. J. Res. 517. Joint resolution to clear title to certain real estate.

SIZE OF THE ARMY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have just seen a very interesting and thoughtful editorial in the New York Herald Tribune, and a particularly noteworthy article by the distinguished military writer, Maj. George Fielding Eliot, both of which make the point which I have tried to impress upon the Senate, that if we develop a well-trained Army of about 750,000 men now, we may avoid the cruel necessity of having a mass draft and a mass army later. Because of their excellence, I ask that the editorial and article be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial and article will be inserted in the RECORD as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The editorial and article are as follows:

THE UNIVERSAL-SERVICE BILL

Three months ago the mere introduction of a bill to establish universal service in the United States would have been politically unthinkable. The fact that on Thursday Senator BURKE could lay before the Senate the bill sponsored by the Military Training Camps Association, calling for the registration of 40,000,000 American men and rendering all of them between 21 and 45 legally liable, as needed, for 8 months' service, represents an enormous advance. With the purposes of the bill this paper is wholly in sympathy. We are convinced not only that the Nation should have the power to call on every citizen in its own defense, but that this common obligation should be made plain to all, and made plain now, by some such measure as this one.

Unfortunately, however, the obligation on every citizen to defend the state is one thing; the creation of an effective Army—an organized instrument technically adequate to our defense needs under the conditions of modern, mechanized warfare—is another thing. In an adjoining column Maj. George Fielding Eliot, as a qualified military technician, sketches what he believes to be the type of instrument required. It takes very little examination to see that the Burke bill would be wholly unsuited to producing this kind of army and might, indeed, only render the creation of such an army impossible.

Major Eliot, for example, fixes the total numbers required at no more than some 600,000 men, either under arms or else in fully trained reserve. But the Burke bill makes some 23,000,000 men liable; while even the age group between 21 and 31, from which the main drafts would be made, includes some 10,000,000. Major Eliot believes a 2-year period of active duty the minimum necessary to yield a force really trained to the highly intricate business of modern warfare; the Burke bill would allow only 8 months. Whether Major Eliot is right in this and other details we are not competent to say. But few would dispute his fundamental thesis. The immediate military need is for a relatively smaller force, with few men highly trained, thoroughly equipped with all the complicated machinery of war and thoroughly competent in its use; the Burke bill—thinking more, perhaps, of what might be called the "moral" need—is the sort of measure suited to producing great masses of men, imperfectly trained, for whom mechanical equipment could never be made available, and who would probably be slaughtered on any battlefield they ever reached.

There is, then, a certain conflict between the requirements of patriotism and morale and the requirements of efficient and practical military preparedness. In such a case it seems to us that a little reflection will show clearly that the practical military requirements should come first. The great value of universal service in instilling a sense of democratic obligation, discipline, and patriotism would vanish unless the men called up knew that they were being called to a real service, technically efficient and making the best possible use of their time and sacrifice. The Burke bill represents a great advance. But we believe it should be regarded only as a tentative draft, from which a more suitable measure may be designed. We believe in starting with the practical military requirements of the next few years and then devising a system of universal service which will fit them, not in starting with universal service and then trying to fit it, awkwardly, to the military requirements.

WANTED—A BATTLE-WORTHY ARMY

(By Maj. George Fielding Eliot)

We are going to build a new Army. That Army must be battle-worthy, in the modern sense of that term. Improvised forces are useless—worse than useless—in modern war. Half-trained militia forces cannot stand up under the terrific responsibilities of modern battle. It was troops with 2 full years of training, plus several additional months of mobilization, the experience of the Polish war, and again a winter of training which destroyed France. The coordination and individual familiarity with weapons which comes with long experience is not to be acquired in a few months.

Unless we are going to indulge in military adventures overseas—which may the God that watches over the destinies of this Republic forbid—we do not need a great army of millions. We need, as our first Commander in Chief put it, not a large Army, but a good one.

There is a bill now before Congress, prepared with the advice of the Military Training Camps Association, and introduced by Senator EDWARD R. BURKE, of Nebraska. It would create the illusion of military strength in the minds of the American people, without the substance. It is, therefore, not only useless but positively dangerous.

The proposed bill calls for universal military and national service under a selective plan. It would cause the men to be selected for the Army to be trained for the wholly insufficient period of 8 months, thereafter passing to the Reserve without provision for any further training. Such a plan will not serve our present needs. Our objective should be to create a military force which can fight under all conditions which may be demanded of it, and against the most formidable of enemies.

The primary objective of any scheme for selective service should be the building up of our Regular Army to the full strength required, and the gradual establishment of an adequate reserve therefor. This requires that a distinction be made between permanent personnel and annual classes of conscripted personnel. Permanent personnel should be obtained by voluntary enlistment only. In order to make a military career attractive to our young men, it is necessary that pay and allowances be placed on the same basis in the Army and Navy.

The objective should be that noncommissioned officers, specialists, and a proportion of the privates should be permanent personnel; the balance of the privates should be drawn by selection, with due regard to aptitudes, from the annual classes of conscripts. Direct voluntary enlistments should be for 5 years; the service of selected men should be for 2 years, with the option of extending for 3 additional years if desired. Reenlistments of qualified and suitable men should be encouraged. Nothing less than the periods of service stated will be of any use for the Regular Army.

The duties of the Regular Army should include:

(1) The defense of the outlying possessions of the United States.

(2) The provision of a suitable mobile striking force within the continental United States, for the immediate defense of the country and for expeditionary purposes within the sphere of our naval interests.

(3) The provision of adequate skeleton establishments for antiaircraft and harbor defense of the continental United States.

(4) The training of the Reserves and the National Guard.

(5) The provision of the command and administrative overhead for the entire Military Establishment.

The Reserve of the Regular Army should be drawn from two sources:

(A) Conscripted soldiers who have passed through their 2 years with the colors. These should be initially assigned as Class A Reservists to provide a reservoir of replacements at the permanent station of their unit; i. e., a depot establishment.

After serving 5 years as class A reservists such men should be transferred to class B, available for service under such conditions in an emergency as the President might prescribe, for a period of 15 years.

(B) Men called up under selective service but not drafted into the Regular Army should form the class C and D reservists. Class C should be composed of specialists whose occupations in civil life particularly fit them for military duties of certain sorts: Clerks, truck drivers, mechanics, cooks, hospital attendants, etc.

Class D should include the other young men of the country fit for military service, but without training. Service in class C and class D should be for a total of 22 years. The object of the class C reserve is that most such nonmilitary specialist jobs should be filled by class C reservists on active duty, leaving the time of the regularly serving soldiers free for wholly military instruction without the burdens of post housekeeping, administration, and supply.

Reserve noncommissioned officers should be obtained from men specially qualifying therefor after service in the Regular Army, under conditions to be prescribed by the War Department.

As an example of how this would work, let us suppose that the size of the Regular Army determined upon after study should be 600,000 men. About one-half of this should be permanent personnel—300,000. The rest would be composed of two classes of conscripts of 150,000 each, serving for 2 years. At any given time the Regular Army would include 300,000 men serving 5-year voluntary enlistments, 150,000 conscripts of more than 1 year's service, and 150,000 of less than 1 year's service.

Five years after the initiation of this plan there would be available 500,000 to 550,000 class A reservists, fully trained, who would come in on mobilization to fill up the ranks, and to provide an immediately available group of replacements. Reserve noncommissioned officers would be available to begin the training of new classes of raw recruits, or class D reservists, who might be called out in an emergency. The class C reservists would be available for all nonmilitary jobs, and a certain number of them would be serving with the colors at any given time.

If the size of the Regular Army had been correctly calculated for all M-Day assignments, there would never be any necessity for sending untrained, raw recruits into action. As fully trained reservists increase in number, the size of the peace establishment of the Regular Army can be reduced.

The duties of the National Guard should be confined to the provision of certain antiaircraft and harbor-defense units of coast artillery, line-of-communications troops, certain engineer, signal, and medical units for corps, army and general headquarters reserve troops, and the preservation of internal order. All idea of using National Guard infantry, cavalry, tank, and field artillery units as combat forces should be abandoned. They will never have enough training for the purpose, and we deceive ourselves if we suppose otherwise.

The National Guard should be obtained by voluntary enlistment from among class D reservists only, except that class B and C reservists who desire to enlist in the National Guard might be allowed to do so under suitable restrictions. The "home guard" proposed in the present bill should not be a national force but rather an expansion of the National Guard for the duties of internal order which should be arranged for by the States.

Annual quotas of requirements should be prepared by the War Department and passed along to the selective service authority, which should be a civilian organization with a permanent clerical force but with volunteer local boards as its chief functioning agencies. These quotas should be allocated to the local boards in order to enable them to make suitable selections.

Young men should be called up annually at the age of 20 for registration and selection. This will produce an annual class of about 1,000,000 young men. If World War experience is any guide, anywhere from 30 to 50 percent of the registrees will be rejected for physical disability. Indeed, the physical standards ought to be set very high, for many of these young men will be required for the Air Corps, for mechanized troops, and for service beyond the seas. We may expect, therefore, the higher percentage of rejections named—50 percent.

That leaves us 500,000, of which (as a rough guess) 200,000 may be excused from color service for reasons connected with essential industries, family conditions and so forth. Of the remaining 300,000, half would be chosen for 2 years' service with the colors and a good many of the remainder for 1 year's service as class C reservists on active duty.

So much for the permanent plan. But we must also keep in mind the immediate emergency; and this plan will not give us sufficient trained reserves for some years to come. Therefore if the Regular Army ought to consist of 600,000 men, we should raise it to that strength immediately, calling up under selective service as many young men of the age group 20 to 22 as may be necessary. Meanwhile we should call into Federal service the entire National Guard to take temporarily the place of the Reservists we do not have. We can release from guard service such men as are needed for essential industries and those on whom such service would entail extraordinary hardship, replacing them with recruits.

Meanwhile the training of the Regular Army and its gradual equipment with new weapons will be proceeding, and in due course the National Guard can again be released to State control. While the National Guard is in Federal service each State should organize a State guard for the preservation of internal order and for guarding key points—industries, railways, bridges, and so on.

Thus the needs of imminent emergency and long-range planning for a secure future for our country can go hand in hand. Vague talk of millions of men, tens of thousands of airplanes, national service for all, will not help us now. Neither will outworn theories and out-dated methods. What will help us is the forging of weapons which will not fail us in our hour of need.

LAWS RELATING TO FEDERAL PRISONERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7343) to amend certain laws governing Federal prisons, and for other purposes, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of May 13, 1930 (46 Stat. 272; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 723c), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The said Board, or any member thereof, shall hereafter have the exclusive authority to issue warrants for the retaking of any United States prisoner who has violated his parole. The unexpired term of imprisonment of any such prisoner shall begin to run from the date he is returned to the custody of the Attorney General under said warrant, and the time the prisoner was on parole shall not diminish the time he was originally sentenced to serve."

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 820; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 718), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That any officer of any Federal, penal, or correctional institution or any Federal officer authorized to serve criminal process within the United States, to whom such warrant shall be delivered, is authorized and required to execute such warrant by taking such prisoner and returning him to the custody of the Attorney General. All necessary expenses incurred in the administration of this act shall be paid out of the appropriation for the institution in connection with which such expense was incurred, and such appropriation is hereby made available therefor."

SEC. 3. Section 6 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 820; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 719), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. When a prisoner has been been retaken upon a warrant issued by the Board of Parole, he shall be given an opportunity to appear before said Board of Parole, a member thereof, or an examiner designated by the Board. The said Board may then, or at any time in its discretion, revoke the order and terminate such parole or modify the terms and conditions thereof. If such order of parole shall be revoked and the parole so terminated, the said prisoner shall serve the remainder of the sentence originally imposed; and the time the prisoner was out on parole shall not be taken into account to diminish the time for which he was sentenced."

SEC. 4. Section 5296 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 641) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5296. When a poor convict, sentenced by any court of the United States to be imprisoned and pay a fine, or fine and costs, or to pay a fine, or fine and costs, has been confined in prison 30 days, solely for the nonpayment of such fine, or fine and costs, such convict may make application in writing to any commissioner of the United States court in the district where he is imprisoned setting forth his inability to pay such fine, or fine and costs, and after notice to the district attorney of the United States, who may appear, offer evidence, and be heard, the commissioner shall proceed to hear and determine the matter. If on examination it shall appear to him that such convict is unable to pay such fine, or fine and costs, and that he has not any property exceeding $20 in value, except such as is by law exempt from being taken on execution for debt, the commissioner shall administer to him the following oath: 'I do solemnly swear that I have not any property, real or personal, to the amount of $20, except such as is by law exempt from being taken on civil process for debt by the laws of (naming the State where oath is administered); and that I have no property in any way conveyed or concealed, or in any way disposed of, for my future use or benefit. So help me God.' Upon taking such oath such convict shall be discharged, and the Commissioner shall give to the keeper of the jail a certificate setting forth the facts. In case the convict is found by the commissioner to possess property valued at an amount in excess of said exemption, nevertheless, if the Attorney General finds that the retention by such convict of all of such property is reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family, such convict shall be released without further imprisonment solely for the nonpayment of such fine, or fine and costs; or if he finds that the retention by such convict of any part of such property is reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family, such convict shall be released without further imprisonment solely for nonpayment of such fine or fine and costs upon payment on account of his fine and costs of that portion of his property in excess of the amount found to be reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family."

SEC. 5. The act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 325; U. S. C., title 18, secs. 753 to 753j), as amended, is amended by inserting after section 11 the following section:

"SEC. 12. Officers and employees of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice are empowered to make arrests without warrant for violations of any of the provisions of sections 9, 10, and 11 of this act, if the person making the arrest has reasonable grounds to believe that the person so arrested is guilty of such offense, and if there is likelihood of the person escaping before a warrant can be obtained for his arrest. If the person so arrested is a fugitive from custody, he shall be returned to custody, and all other persons so arrested shall immediately be taken before a committing officer. Officers and employees of the said Bureau of Prisons are authorized and empowered to carry firearms under such rules and regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will explain for us the provisions of section 4, which appear on pages 3 and 4 of the bill. The provision to which I particularly refer is that which will give the Attorney General the power to make inquiry into the property status of a convict and decide as to whether or not there will be a discharge of the convict despite nonpayment of the fine even if the convict owns property. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Under the present law one who is imprisoned as a poor convict because of his inability to pay the fine is liable to confiscation of his property above $20. The section would merely amend that provision by leaving it discretionary with the Attorney General as to whether or not confiscation should take place. The feeling was entertained by the committee that it would be improper, after the convict served his term, to run the danger of perhaps putting the convict's family on relief by the sequestration of his property.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator understand that the civil-judgment effect of an unpaid fine will still run against the convict's property even though he personally be discharged from custody?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that that would be the case.

Mr. DANAHER. That is exactly what I wish to have made clear. As I understand, an unpaid fine has identically the same effect as a civil judgment against the property of a convict would have, and even though the convict be discharged after taking the poor debtor's oath, the judgment could be levied upon and collected out of the property at any time thereafter if it be found sufficient to answer the amount of the fine.

I think we ought to understand if we pass this bill just what effect it will have on the uncollected fine.

I think, Mr. President, under no circumstances, even if the convict is discharged from custody by taking the poor debtor's oath, should his property be relieved of liability as in cases of a civil judgment, and I think it should remain answerable to the Government to the amount of the fine if the Attorney General finds in his discretion properly that collection should be enforced.

If the Senator from Wyoming will construe this particular clause to give that effect to this particular amendment——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I misunderstood the Senator. The bill does not have the effect of discharging the civil judgment. The civil judgment is retained.

Mr. DANAHER. So that it is enforceable at the option of the Attorney General in a proper case?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly.

Mr. DANAHER. I wanted that to appear in the RECORD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sorry I misunderstood the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that the committee report may be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1854) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7343) to amend certain laws governing Federal prisoners, and for other purposes, after consideration, report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill proposes to make certain changes, mostly of an administrative nature, in Federal penal laws. It was sponsored by and has the approval of the Attorney General.

Section 1 relates to defendants who, having been paroled, are arrested for violation of their parole. The section proposes to change existing law so that it will not be required to return such defendants to the institution from which they were paroled, as this process has often been found unnecessary and expensive. The existing law is set forth below, with proposed additions in italics and parts to be stricken out in brackets:

"SEC. 3. The said Board, or any member thereof, shall hereafter have the exclusive authority to issue warrants for the retaking of any United States prisoner who has violated his parole. The unexpired term of imprisonment of any such prisoner shall begin to run from the date he is returned to the [institution] custody of the Attorney General under said warrant, and the time the prisoner was on parole shall not diminish the time he was originally sentenced to serve."

Section 2, in order to conform to changes made by the first section, proposes to amend the law so as to make it possible for any penal officer to serve a warrant for the rearrest of a prisoner so violating parole.

Changes in the law are shown below:

"SEC. 5. That any officer of [said prison] any Federal, penal, or correctional institution or any Federal officer authorized to serve criminal process within the United States, to whom such warrant shall be delivered, is authorized and required to execute such warrant by taking such prisoner and returning him to [said prison within the time specified in said warrant therefor] the custody of the Attorney General. All necessary expenses incurred in the administration of this act shall be paid out of the appropriation for the [prison] institution in connection with which such expense was incurred, and such appropriation is hereby made available therefor."

Section 3 relates to hearings in cases in which a parole is to be revoked. The existing law provides that when a prisoner has been retaken on a charge of violating his parole, he shall receive a hearing at the next meeting of the parole board held at the prison to which he has been returned. The bill proposes to amend this requirement so as to provide that the prisoner shall be given an opportunity to appear before the parole board or a member thereof, or an examiner designated by the board. Such flexibility is desirable in the interest of administrative efficiency and economy.

This section proposes to change existing law as follows:

"SEC. 6. [That at the next meeting of the board of parole held at such prison after the issuing of a warrant for the retaking of any paroled prisoner, said board of parole shall be notified thereof, and if said prisoner shall have been returned to said prison,] When a prisoner has been retaken upon a warrant issued by the Board of Parole, he shall be given an opportunity to appear before said

[b]Board of [p]Parole, a member thereof, or an examiner designated by the Board [and] [t]The said [b]Board may then, or at any time in its discretion, revoke the order and terminate such parole or modify the terms and conditions thereof. If such order of parole shall be revoked and the parole so terminated, the said prisoner shall serve the remainder of the sentence originally imposed; and the time the prisoner was out on parole shall not be taken into account to diminish the time for which he was sentenced."

Section 4 relates to "poor convicts" who are incarcerated for the nonpayment of a fine. Under existing law, any person who is sentenced by any court of the United States to imprisonment and fine, or to fine alone, may, after he has served 30 days solely for nonpayment of the fine, request a hearing before a United States commissioner on the question as to whether he is able to pay such fine. If at such hearing it appears that he is unable to pay such fine and has no property exceeding $20 in value, except such as is exempt from execution, the commissioner administers to him the so-called poor convict's oath. Thereupon, the prisoner is discharged from imprisonment for nonpayment of the fine, although the fine itself remains a civil judgment until satisfied or otherwise disposed of.

There are cases, however, in which the prisoner may have money somewhat in excess of $20, but to require him to deliver all of his money or property in excess of that amount may cause his family to go on relief. In order to prevent such a consummation in meritorious cases, the bill adds a provision to the existing law to the effect that if, in such a case, the Attorney General finds that the retention by such convict of all of such property is reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family, he shall be released without further imprisonment solely for nonpayment of the fine. Likewise, if the Attorney General finds that the retention by such convict of a part of his property is reasonably necessary for such purpose, the prisoner is to be released without further imprisonment solely for the nonpayment of the fine upon payment of that portion of his property as is in excess of the amount so found. This provision will also make it possible to make an appropriate disposition of cases, which at times occur, in which a defendant may be without funds to pay a fine, but may own real estate, such as a farm, which is either nonsalable or which could not be sold except at a great sacrifice. Cases of this kind have at times given rise to considerable hardship. The new provision is found in the last sentence of the section, which constitutes the only addition or change in the existing law.

Attention is called to the fact that a fine is a civil judgment and collectible as such and that a discharge of the defendant from imprisonment for nonpayment of the fine does not liquidate the fine. The fine still remains as a civil judgment. This has always been the ruling of the Department of Justice, which has been accepted by the courts (United States v. Pratt, 23 F. (2d) 333).

A judgment entered in a court of the United States is a lien on real estate belonging to the debtor and located in that district. The Department of Justice has a unit known as the Bond and Spirits Division, one of whose functions is to check on outstanding fines, and to endeavor to collect them. If assets are discovered out of which a fine can be paid, appropriate steps are taken to collect the money.

It should be noted, however, that a judgment is not a lien against real estate located in a district other than that in which it was rendered. This is likewise true of a fine. If real property belonging to the debtor is discovered in another State, then a judgment has to be obtained in such other State and recorded therein.

Existing law will be changed by section 4 as follows:

"SEC. 5296. When a poor convict, sentenced by any court of the United States to be imprisoned and pay a fine, or fine and costs, or to pay a fine, or fine and costs, has been confined in prison 30 days, solely for the nonpayment of such fine, or fine and costs, such convict may make application in writing to any commissioner of the United States court in the district where he is imprisoned setting forth his inability to pay such fine, or fine and costs, and after notice to the district attorney of the United States, who may appear, offer evidence, and be heard, the commissioner shall proceed to hear and determine the matter. If on examination it shall appear to him that such convict is unable to pay such fine, or fine and costs, and that he has not any property exceeding $20 in value, except such as is by law exempt from being taken on execution for debt, the commissioner shall administer to him the following oath: 'I do solemnly swear that I have not any property, real or personal, to the amount of $20, except such as is by law exempt from being taken on civil process for debt by the laws of (naming the State where oath is administered); and that I have no property in any way conveyed or concealed or in any way disposed of, for my future use or benefit. So help me God.' Upon taking such oath such convict shall be discharged; and the commissioner shall give to the keeper of the jail a certificate setting forth the facts. In case the convict is found by the commissioner to possess property valued at an amount in excess of said exemption, nevertheless, if the Attorney General finds that the retention by such convict of all of such property is reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family, such convict shall be released without further imprisonment solely for the nonpayment of such fine, or fine and costs; or if he finds that the retention by such convict of any part of such property is reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family, such convict shall be released without further imprisonment solely for nonpayment of such fine or fine and costs upon payment on account of his fine and costs, of that portion of his property in excess of the amount found to be reasonably necessary for his support or that of his family."

Section 5 provides for the amendment of the act of May 14, 1930, by adding a new section designed to confer on the officers and employees of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice the power to make arrests without warrant in cases of escape and for violations of statutes which make it a criminal offense to aid or abet an escape, to procure an escape, or to conceal an escaped prisoner. This section would also confer legal authority on officers and employees of the Bureau of Prisons to carry firearms, under such rules and regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe. The desirability of this provision is to avoid possible conflict with State laws prohibiting or regulating the possession of firearms.

The first sentence of this section would confer on officers and employees of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice no greater powers than are possessed by any police officer in respect to arrests. Moreover, this authority is to be limited only to violations of the law against escapes and is not to be extended to all violations of law.

It is highly desirable that such power be granted, because even if a warrant is obtained and outstanding against a particular individual the warrant itself may be in the possession of an officer located in one place, while the person who is being sought after may be found at a far-distant point, and it may be necessary to take him immediately, without a warrant. Under existing law this can be done by any law-enforcement officer, and the present section would do no more than confer such authority on prison officers in case of escapes.

The text of the new section is as follows:

"Sec. 12. Officers and employees of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice are empowered to make arrests without warrant for violations of any of the provisions of sections 9, 10, and 11 of this act, if the person making the arrest has reasonable grounds to believe that the person so arrested is guilty of such offense, and if there is likelihood of the person escaping before a warrant can be obtained for his arrest. If the person so arrested is a fugitive from custody, he shall be returned to custody, and all other persons so arrested shall immediately be taken before a committing officer. Officers and employees of the said Bureau of Prisons are authorized and empowered to carry firearms under such rules and regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe."

TRANSPORTATION OF EMPLOYEES OF ALASKA ROAD COMMISSION

The bill (S. 3795) to authorize the transportation of employees of the Alaska Road Commission, and to validate payments made for that and other purposes, was considered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That funds heretofore or hereafter made available to the Alaska Road Commission may be expended for the transportation within the Territory of Alaska of any employees to and from points of hire and posts of duty and between the last post of duty and point of discharge, and any payments heretofore made for such purposes and for the furnishing of subsistence and quarters to supervisory field employees shall be allowed in the accounts of the paying officers if otherwise found correct, and no amounts so paid and not heretofore recovered shall be charged against the payees on account of such payments.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The bill (S. 4133) amending the Bankruptcy Act with respect to the basis of property and excluding certain corporations from the provisions of chapter XI was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that a similar House bill (H. R. 9864) is on the calendar. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9864) amending the Bankruptcy Act with respect to the basis of property.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation of the bill is requested.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the bankruptcy law in three chapters provides for reorganization of debtors, particularly corporate debtors. Chapter 10 deals with corporate reorganizations, chapter 11 deals with arrangements, and chapter 12 deals with real property arrangements. There is a section in each one of these chapters which provides that when reorganization has been made the basis of the debtor's property for the purpose of taxation shall be reduced by an amount equal to the reduction of the debt. That means it is the basis for taxation and upon it the income tax in the future is paid. It is the basis upon which depreciation is fixed. It has been discovered, in the operation of the law, that in some instances the disaster to the bankrupt is so great, and the reduction in debt is sometimes so large, that when deducted it leaves zero. So the property of the released bankrupt would be unable in future income-tax payments to claim any depreciation. Then, if the property was sold, the entire receipts would be taxable and no credit would be received for the fair value of the property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4133 will be indefinitely postponed.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN LAND IN NEW ORLEANS

The bill (S. 4063) declaring a forfeiture of certain land heretofore granted by the United States to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district, in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for levee and street purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there is on the calendar an identical House bill, House bill 9927, which, without objection, will be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I was about to say, if the Senate has the disposition to consider the measure, it should pass the House bill and indefinitely postpone the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9927) declaring a forfeiture of certain land heretofore granted by the United States to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district, in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for levee and street purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4063 will be indefinitely postponed.

UINTAH INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, UTAH

The bill (S. 3952) to provide relief for and to promote the interest of the landowners on the Uintah Indian irrigation project, Utah, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the action of the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to the authority contained in the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1803), in the cancelation, deferment, and adjustment of irrigation charges against lands within the Uintah Indian irrigation project, Utah, is hereby confirmed as follows:

(a) The cancelation of $283,170.73 of unpaid construction assessment obligations and $28,875.37 of unpaid operation and maintenance assessment obligations carried on the books of the project;

(b) The deferment until December 1, 1943, of the collection of $61,983.16 expended in drainage operations on said project; and

(c) The requirement for contracts with landowners covering $19,230.72 accrued operation and maintenance assessments, such contracts to provide for the payment of these assessments over a period of years.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer water rights, with the consent of the interested parties, to other lands under the said project and to make necessary contracts to effectuate such transfers.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make contracts transferring the operation and maintenance of any canal system or systems under the said project to an irrigation district, or districts, formed pursuant to State law.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,682.59 for the following purposes:

(a) To pay, for a period of not to exceed 5 years following the passage of this act (not to exceed $1,000 in any one year), 34 percent of the regular annual operation and maintenance assessments for class 4 lands in non-Indian ownership under the Redcap, Leland, and Henry Jim Canals, and 90 percent of such charges for class 5 lands in non-Indian ownership under said canals, $5,000: Provided, That no part of any money appropriated pursuant to this authorization shall be expended unless and until the owners of such lands shall have paid in full their respective shares of such assessments and shall have entered into an agreement with the Secretary of the Interior for the execution of a soil-rehabilitation program on such land; and

(b) To reimburse certain individuals, or their heirs, for payments made covering lands erroneously assessed for irrigation purposes, $682.59, which amount shall be payable from collections made from water users on this project and covered into the Treasury pursuant to section 4 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act of 1934.

SEC. 5. In order to prevent the accumulation of delinquent project assessments or other charges against the non-Indian-owned lands of the Uintah Indian irrigation project, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause liquidation of all delinquent assessments or charges by taking such action as may be necessary, including the foreclosure of the Government's lien covering any such delinquent charges or by initiating such other procedure as may be legally available, which action may be taken by him at any time when in his judgment the best interests of the project would be served.

ATLANTIC REFINING CO.

The bill (H. R. 9453) to provide a license to the Atlantic Refining Co., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOYBEANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7696) to amend the United States Grain Standards Act, to provide for the grading of soybeans, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, at the beginning of line 5, to strike out "(a)", and after line 6, to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Grain Standards Act is amended, as follows:

By inserting after "flaxseed", in the first sentence of section 2 thereof, the following: "soybeans."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, objection has been withdrawn to the consideration of Order of Business 1940, Senate bill 3720. I should like to have it considered and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3720) to create and establish a Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia have already been agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9575) to amend the Federal Aid Act approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "$93,750,000" and insert "$100,000,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the Senator from Arizona explain this bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. This is the biennial authorization for Federal-aid appropriations for the fiscal years 1942 and 1943 for Federal-aid highways. A bill to this effect was reported to the House of Representatives carrying $238,000,000. Each item in the bill was arbitrarily cut 25 percent, and the bill passed the House carrying a total of $178,500,000.

Your committee has rearranged the figures in this instance, increasing the amount of Federal aid and reduced other figures so that the bill now carries $160,500,000 for all purposes, which, in the judgment of the committee, is a satisfactory sum to carry on the activities of highway construction during the next 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think this bill is of such importance it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill which has just gone over, so that it may be pending when the bill is again considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF HOLDERS OF COTTON POOL PARTICIPATION TRUST CERTIFICATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2930) to provide for reimbursement to the holders of cotton pool participation trust certificates, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,320,000, or so much thereof as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture to accomplish the purposes hereinafter declared and authorized. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to, or upon the order of, the Secretary of Agriculture, such a part or all of the sum hereby appropriated at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to draw from the Treasury of the United States any part or all of the sum hereby appropriated, and to deposit same to his credit with the Treasurer of the United States, under special symbol number, to be available for disbursement for the purposes hereinafter stated.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to pay the sum of $2.40 per bale, from the sum hereby authorized to be appropriated, to all holders of participation-trust certificates of the cotton producers' pool, Form C–5–I, of record as of May 1, 1937.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, which purpose is here specifically stated to be to reimburse holders of Form C–5–I cotton producers' pool participation trust certificates for $2.40 per bale carrying charges deducted from the proceeds of the cotton-producers' pool.

SEC. 5. All expenses incident to the accomplishment of the purposes of this act are authorized to be paid by the Secretary from the appropriation authorized hereunder, and any balance remaining after reimbursements have been made in accordance with this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to know the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. And the amount involved.

Mr. LODGE. It is rather difficult for those who are not on the committee to grasp the bill as it now stands.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill is very simple. It has to do with the activities of the Department of Agriculture in dealing with cotton farmers.

The bill proposes an adjustment with cotton farmers who complied with the Government's program to limit and restrict the production of cotton in 1933 and 1934.

In 1933 the Government owned and held a large amount of cotton. In order to help the price of cotton, and thereby help the cotton planter, it was proposed by the Government that if the cotton farmers would plow under some of their already planted cotton land, such farmers could buy cotton from Government stocks at a normal price, and on such cotton sold, the Government would conserve, handle, and manage such cotton at no expense to the farmer purchasers.

The record shows that later, when the cotton was sold, the farmer purchasers were charged the sum of $2.40 per bale from the time the cotton pool was established on February 1, 1934, to September 30, 1934.

The amount of cotton involved is some 1,600,000 bales, and it affects some 350,000 cotton farmers.

The record further shows that some 80 percent of the cotton pool certificates are in the hands of the farmer producers, and that the remainder are in the hands of merchants who cashed such certificates for the farmer producers.

The certificates state on their face that they are negotiable, which accounts for the fact that some of the certificates are in the hands of storekeepers and merchants.

The bill proposes to reimburse cotton farmers who complied with the Government's cotton-reduction program and who hold certificates to the extent of $2.40 per bale. The bill is based upon the fact that the assessment of $2.40 per bale was erroneously and unjustly made and collected from the cotton farmers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is the American Cotton Cooperative Association connected with this bill in any way?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The A. C. C. A. has no interest in the bill, so far as I know.

Mr. McKELLAR. This measure has no reference to the claims which were presented by that association some time ago?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is another bill, and the Senator knows all about it. That matter is in the Court of Claims; but this has nothing to do with that. This bill is to pay the farmers who hold these certificates to the extent of $2.40 per bale for the certificates they hold.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask how much it will cost the Government? Is there any estimate of that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The report shows that about 1,600,000 bales are involved, and that about 350,000 cotton farmers are affected by the legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Does the bill have the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There was no opposition in the committee, and I know of no one who is opposed to the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of House bill 9575. I did that because in my own State the highway department is the most venal and most effective agency of political influence in the State. However, I am persuaded by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and other Senators that it is not fair to hold up a general authorization for the highway development of the United States because of the particular situation which happens to exist in my own State. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to return to House bill 9575 in order that it may be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the returning to the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9575) to amend the Federal Aid Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$93,750,000" and insert "$100,000,000"; and in line 3, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$93,750,000" and insert "$100,000,000", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended and supplemented: The sum of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$18,750,000" and insert "$15,000,000", and in line 9, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$18,750,000" and insert "$15,000,000", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. For the purpose of continuing the provisions of section 7 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1521), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943; said sums to be expended on secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural-free-delivery mail roads, and public-school bus routes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 18, after "(2)", to insert "that such special taxes are derived from rates or license taxes, in each category, equal to the average of the rates or license taxes similarly imposed by other States of the Union; (3)", and on page 3, line 3, after the word "and", to strike out "(3)" and insert "(4)", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. If within the fiscal years 1942 and 1943 the Federal Works Administrator shall find with respect to any State (1) that the proceeds of all special taxes on motor-vehicle transportation, as referred to in section 12 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 995), as amended, are applied to highway purposes as defined in said section; (2) that such special taxes are derived from rates or license taxes, in each category, equal to the average of the rates or license taxes similarly imposed by other States of the Union; (3) that at least 90 percent of such proceeds are applied to the administrative and operating expenses of the State highway department, the maintenance of the State and Federal-aid highway systems, and the payment of interest on, and the amortization of, bond obligations of the State for the payment of which such revenues have heretofore been pledged; and (4) that the portion of the proceeds of all such special taxes then available for construction and reconstruction, together with funds available to the State from any other sources for highway purposes, will be insufficient to match all, or any part, of the regular and secondary Federal-aid road funds apportioned to such State for such fiscal years in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended and supplemented, then such portion of such apportionment as the Federal Works Administrator shall find the State is unable to match shall be made available for expenditure in such State in accordance with said Federal Highway Act without being matched by the State: Provided, That any such funds made available to any State without being matched by the State shall be expended by the State on the system of Federal-aid highways and on secondary roads in the construction of projects desirable from the standpoint of national defense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 10, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$37,500,000" and insert "$20,000,000"; in line 11, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$37,500,000" and insert "$20,000,000"; and in line 12, after "1943", to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. For the elimination of hazards to life at railroad grade crossings including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad-grade-crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be apportioned on or before the 1st day of January of each year preceding the fiscal year for which it is authorized among the several States in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended and supplemented, except that such apportionment shall be one-half on population as shown by the latest decennial census, one-fourth on the mileage of the Federal-aid highway system as determined by the Federal Works Administrator, and one-fourth on the railroad mileage as determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to be expended in accordance with said Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented, except that no part of such funds apportioned to any State need be matched by the State: The sum of $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That when provision has been made for the elimination of hazards to life at substantially all of the railroad grade crossings on the State highway system in any State, such State may apply, with the approval of the Public Roads Administration, its available Federal-aid grade-crossing funds to the improvement of secondary or feeder roads in addition to any other funds provided for continuing the provisions of section 7 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1521): Provided further, That any Federal-aid grade-crossing funds so applied must be matched with State funds in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 25, after "SEC. 6", to strike out "for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act of 1921 (42 Stat. 218), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for forest highways, roads, and trails the following sums, to be available until expended in accordance with the provisions of said section 23: The sum of $10,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942; the sum of $10,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That one-third, but not less than $3,000,000, of the appropriation made for any fiscal year for carrying out the provisions of said section 23 may hereafter be expended for the purposes enumerated in the first paragraph of clause (a) of said section 23:" and to insert "For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 218), as amended and supplemented, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated (1) for forest highways the sum of $7,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $7,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That hereafter appropriations for forest highways shall be administered in conformity with regulations jointly approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal Works Administrator; and (2) for forest development roads and trails the sum of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943:"; on page 7, line 4, after the word "apportioned", to strike out "by the Secretary of Agriculture"; and in line 8, after the words "fiscal year", to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 218), as amended and supplemented, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated (1) for forest highways the sum of $7,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $7,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That hereafter appropriations for forest highways shall be administered in conformity with regulations jointly approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal Works Administrator; and (2) for forest development roads and trails the sum of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: And provided further, That the apportionment for forest highways in Alaska shall be for each of the fiscal years $500,000 and that such additional amount as otherwise would have been apportioned to Alaska for each of said fiscal years shall be apportioned among those States, including Puerto Rico, whose forest highway apportionment for such fiscal year otherwise would be less than 1 percent of the entire apportionment for forest highways for that fiscal year: And provided further, That apportionments among those States, including Puerto Rico, whose forest highway apportionments for such fiscal year otherwise would be less than 1 percent of the entire apportionment for forest highways for that fiscal year may be made without regard to the provisions of said section 23 relating to apportionments, but in no case shall the apportionment to any State under this provision be in excess of 20 percent of the total of funds affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 7, line 24, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,875,000" and insert "$1,500,000"; in line 25, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,875,000" and insert "$1,500,000"; and on page 8, line 2, after the word "expended", to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 3 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended by the act of June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the survey construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations the sum of $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, to remain available until expended: Provided, That apportionments of funds made under the second paragraph of section 3 of the Federal Highway Act, as amended by the act of June 24, 1940 (46 Stat. 805), shall be made on the basis of the area of such lands in each State as shown by certificate of the Secretary of the Interior which he is directed to make as of June 30 each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 8, line 17, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,625,000" and insert "$4,000,000"; in line 18, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,625,000" and insert "$4,000,000"; and in line 19, after "1943", to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. For the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks, monuments, and other areas administered by the National Park Service, including areas authorized to be established as national parks and monuments, and national park and monument approach roads authorized by the act of January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1053), as amended, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That hereafter appropriations for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of such park and monument roads shall be administered in conformity with regulations jointly approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Federal Works Administrator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 9, line 12, after the words "National Park Service", to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. For the construction and maintenance of parkways, to give access to national parks and national monuments, or to become connecting sections of a national parkway plan, over lands to which title has been transferred to the United States by the States or by private individuals, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That hereafter the location of such parkways upon public lands, national forests, or other Federal reservations shall be determined by agreement between the department having jurisdiction over such lands and the National Park Service: Provided further, That hereafter appropriations for the construction of parkways shall be administered in conformity with regulations jointly approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Federal Works Administrator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 9, line 20, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$2,500,000", and in line 21, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$2,500,000", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. For construction and improvement of Indian reservation roads under the provisions of the act approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 750), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the sum of $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943: Provided, That hereafter the location, type, and design of all roads constructed under the provisions of said act of May 26, 1928, shall be approved by the Public Roads Administration before any expenditures are made thereon, and all such construction done by contract shall be under the general supervision of the Public Roads Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 10, line 13, after the word "adjacent" to strike out "publicly owned or controlled"; in line 14, after the word "size", to insert "owned or controlled by the States or their political subdivisions"; in line 17, after the word "traffic" to strike out "and" and insert "as may be approved by the Public Roads Administration. Such construction likewise may include"; in line 22, after the word "Administration", to strike out "; and" and insert "Provided, That"; in line 23, after the word "exceed", to strike out "5" and insert "3", and on page 11, line 2, after the word "land", to strike out "without being matched by the States", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. Subsection (c) of section 1 of the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 633) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter the construction of highways by the States with the aid of Federal funds may include such roadside and landscape development, including such sanitary and other facilities as may be deemed reasonably necessary to provide for the suitable accommodation of the public, all within the highway right-of-way and adjacent recreational areas of limited size owned or controlled by the States or their political subdivisions, and with provision for convenient and safe access thereto by pedestrian and vehicular traffic, as may be approved by the Public Roads Administration. Such construction likewise may include the purchase of such adjacent strips of land of limited width and primary importance for the preservation of the natural beauty through which highways are constructed, as may be approved by the Public Roads Administration: Provided, That not to exceed 3 percent of the Federal-aid funds apportioned to and matched by any State under this act may be used for the purchase of such adjacent strips of land."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, beginning in line 3, to strike out:

SEC. 12. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, pursuant to its authority under existing law and subject to all the terms and conditions thereof, is authorized to cooperate with States to finance, or to aid in financing, the acquisition of real property or interests in property (any such acquisition being herein called a "right-of-way") necessary or desirable for road projects eligible for Federal aid under the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended and supplemented.

(b) Every loan or purchase of securities by Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance or to aid in financing the acquisition of a right-of-way, as defined in this section, shall hereafter be made only after approval of the project (including the plans, administration, and financing thereof) by the highway department of the State and by the Public Roads Administration of the Federal Works Agency. In order to furnish additional assurance of the regular amortization or retirement of State securities which are sold to, or pledged with, Reconstruction Finance Corporation in connection with any financing of the acquisition of a right-of-way as provided herein, and which are secured by a pledge of revenue from State gasoline taxes or from other special taxes on motor vehicles or on motor-vehicle operators, the Federal Works Administrator is authorized and directed, from time to time, upon the happening of any default in the payment by a State on account of any of its securities so held by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to deduct, or cause to be deducted, from the then unexpended Federal funds apportioned to such States as Federal aid for highway construction, pursuant to the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented, the total amount certified by Reconstruction Finance Corporation as being then due and payable on account of such securities, and to issue, or cause to be issued, a warrant in favor of Reconstruction Finance Corporation for such amount, whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury upon the presentation thereof shall pay to Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount of such warrant for application on account of the State's defaulted payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, beginning in line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 13. The Commissioner of Public Roads is hereby authorized upon the request of any State to perform engineering services and furnish technical aid and advice in connection with the location and development of "flight strips" adjacent to public highways or roadside development areas; for the landing and take-off of aircraft, when not in conflict with the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was at the top of page 13, to insert:

SEC. 12. The Commissioner of Public Roads, in cooperation with the State highway departments of the respective States, is hereby directed to investigate the service afforded to traffic, population, and lands by all highways of each State, as determined by Statewide surveys adequate for the purpose. Annually a report will be made to the Congress covering the progress made in classifying the highways into groups composed of roads of similar service importance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 13. The Public Roads Administration is authorized to pay transportation and subsistence expenses of its employees, and of persons appointed under schedule A, subdivision I, paragraph 7, of Civil Service Rules, hereafter assigned to perform engineering services beyond continental United States for any agency or governmental corporation of the United States, including transportation and subsistence expenses of members of the immediate family of any such employee or person in traveling from their headquarters or homes to the post of duty outside continental United States and return; and, with the approval of the Federal Works Administrator, the compensation of any such employee so assigned may be increased during such assignment by not to exceed 25 percent of his base pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 14. Any sums heretofore or hereafter withheld from the Federal-aid road funds apportioned to any State as a penalty for diversion of road-user taxes under the provisions of section 12 of the act approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 995), shall be reapportioned in the same manner as any other unexpended balance at the end of the period during which it otherwise would be available for expenditure, in accordance with the provisions of section 21 of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 217).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 15. Any amounts heretofore apportioned to any State under the provisions of section 7 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1521), for secondary or feeder roads, for which the period of availability will expire on June 30, 1940, and which shall remain unexpended on said date, shall not be reapportioned to all the States as required by section 21 of the Federal Highway Act, but shall remain available to such State until June 30, 1941, and any balance of such amounts then remaining unexpended shall be reapportioned to all the States in the manner now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 16. Federal funds shall be available for paying the engineering costs incurred by State highway departments in the survey and in the preparation of plans, specifications, and estimates for such urgent improvements of highways strategically important from the standpoint of the national defense as may be undertaken on the order of the Federal Works Administrator and as the result of request of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or other authorized national-defense agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, to change the number of the section from 14 to 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment previously submitted by me today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 17. In approving Federal-aid highway projects to be carried out with any unobligated funds apportioned to any State, the Federal Works Administrator shall give priority of approval to and expedite the construction of projects that are recommended by the appropriate Federal defense agency as important to the national defense.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment restated because I could not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be restated.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the text as given is quite similar to a provision originally adopted in the Highway Act of 1921. It was provided in that case that the preference should be given to the completion of projects which would result in an adequate and connected system of highways. In this instance preference is to be given to cases in which the construction would be of advantage to the national defense.

I am glad to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not any idea of objecting, but I should appreciate it if those of us who are not on the committees could get some kind of a connected statement as to just what this bill is. A succession of amendments have been put in, and I really should like to know just what this is all about.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before appropriations can be made for roads there must be an authorization. We first began to pass road bills in 1917, and we have been passing them ever since. In order to have an orderly method of handling Federal aid to roads, the authorization has been made for 2 years at a time, and this is the 2-year biennial bill which is invariably introduced.

Ordinarily we have been appropriating from $100,000,000 to $125,000,000 for class A roads, the appropriations for which have to be matched by the States. During recent years there has been an appropriation of a much smaller amount, usually $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, for second-grade roads under similar conditions.

A year or two ago we undertook to appropriate sums, or authorize the appropriation of sums, for railroad grade crossings, and there is again a provision authorizing that.

In addition to that, there are roads in our national parks, a much smaller sum being authorized for such roads.

Also, through national forests some roads are built.

Some roads also are built wholly out of Government funds for the Indians.

I believe those are all the provisions of this bill.

In other words, we have to do that in order that the persons who build roads may go ahead with their work. In this case Mr. MacDonald, of the Federal Works Agency, has been doing it for a number of years, and doing a good job. He has been building the roads under what is known as the Federal-aid system. This merely authorizes appropriations, and the request for appropriations will come before the Committee on Appropriations and the amounts decided then.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator tell me whether this is more or less in the nature of a routine piece of legislation which has to be considered every 2 years, or does it change the formula or the basis upon which these funds are to be allocated?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not change the formula at all from what it was during the last 2 years, and I believe for the last 4 years. There is no change in formula. There has been a considerable change in amount. I think the appropriation reached as high as about $238,000,000. This bill carries only $160,000,000 for all the purposes I have explained to the Senator and to the Senate. It is merely an ordinary road bill, like those we have been passing, and it is an authorization bill rather than an appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Was not an amendment adopted to the bill which would authorize certain priorities being followed in building these roads? Does not the bill as amended set up certain new priorities in the allocation of the money?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but the amendment I have just offered, and which is now pending, provides that when national-defense roads are submitted from any State in the Union there may be a priority, and I think that is very proper. It might be very necessary, for instance, to build a road——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose we were invaded and it were necessary to help build military roads in order to provide for the national defense; of course, priority would be given, and I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts would want the priority given.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I want roads built for national defense, and I should like to ask whether this bill carries any provision that there shall be consultation with the War Department or the military authorities to determine whether a road is or is not a military road?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is provided for in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. DANAHER and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DANAHER. First, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Chair rule that the amendment has already been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. DANAHER. I was on my feet seeking recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not when the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. I sought to achieve that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was agreed to some time ago, before the colloquy between the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Massachusetts took place.

Mr. DANAHER. Then I mistook the ruling of the Chair, and I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, as has been suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, those of us who are not on the committee are at a great loss to grasp this whole subject. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Schwartz
Bankhead	Gerry	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Gillette	McKellar	Sheppard
Barkley	Green	McNary	Shipstead
Bilbo	Guffey	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Hale	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Harrison	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Minton	Townsend
Byrnes	Hayden	Murray	Truman
Capper	Herring	Neely	Tydings
Caraway	Hill	Norris	Vandenberg
Chandler	Holman	Nye	Van Nuys
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, is the road bill still before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard; the bill goes to the calendar, and the clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think we have sufficient time today fully to consider this bill. Therefore I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEAVE WITH PAY FOR JURY SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 6507) to provide for leave of absence with pay for any employee of the United States or of the District of Columbia who may be called upon for jury service in any State court or court of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2524) to incorporate The Military Order of the Purple Heart, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "Frank A. Schrepfer, Pennsylvania", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-named persons, to wit: Charles O. Carlston, California; Wendell A. Lochbiler, Michigan; Marcus E. Diffenderfer, Massachusetts; Frederick K. Myles, Indiana; Harry C. Huston, Minnesota; Konstant Piniarowicz, California; Herbert E. Browning, California; George F. Bradfield, Illinois; Rev. James J. Guinea, South Carolina; Ludwig J. Nachtmann, Pennsylvania; Bernard J. Cummings, Illinois; D. Brandon Bernstein, California; Robert Patton, California; Herbert A. Church, Washington, District of Columbia; Earl B. Douglas, Iowa; Fred H. Surry, Washington; B. A. Schwebke, California; Lloyd Northrup, Illinois; Frank J. Monahan, Indiana; H. Hayes Landon, Massachusetts; Elmer G. Brackett, Michigan; Walter C. Stamm, Minnesota; T. M. Thomson, Minnesota; Frank Cushner, Connecticut; Edgar N. Bloomer, New Jersey; George L. Edmunds, Pennsylvania; and such other persons as may be chosen who are holders of the Purple Heart Medal, awarded by the War Department under General Orders No. 3, dated February 22, 1932, duly chosen, are hereby incorporated and declared to be a body corporate. The name of this corporation shall be "The Military Order of the Purple Heart".

SEC. 2. The said persons named in section 1, and such other persons as may be selected from among those who have been awarded the Purple Heart Medal by the War Department, may complete the organization of said corporation by the selection of officers, the adoption of a constitution and bylaws, and do all other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and at any meeting for that purpose any person duly accredited as a delegate from any chapter or State department, known as the Military Order of the Purple Heart, shall be permitted to participate in the proceedings thereof.

SEC. 3. That the purpose or object of this corporation shall be patriotic, fraternal, historical, and educational;

To preserve and strengthen comradeship among its members;

To assist worthy comrades;

To perpetuate the memory and history of our dead;

To maintain true allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and fidelity to its Constitution and laws.

SEC. 4. That the corporation created by this act shall have the following powers:

Perpetual succession with power to sue and be sued in courts of law and equity;

To receive, hold, own, use, and dispose of real estate and personal property as shall be necessary for its corporate purposes, including the right to mortgage, encumber, or exchange said real estate or personal property;

To adopt a corporate seal, and change the same at pleasure;

To adopt a constitution, bylaws, and regulations, to carry out its purposes, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, or any State, or of the District of Columbia;

To adopt for the purposes of the corporation emblems and badges;

To establish State, District, and Territorial organizations and units or chapters; and

To publish a magazine, or other publications, and generally to do any and all such acts and things as may be necessary in carrying into effect the purposes of the corporation.

SEC. 5. That the organization shall be nonpolitical and, as an organization, shall not promote the candidacy of any person seeking public office.

SEC. 6. That the said corporation and its State, District, Territorial, or local units, or chapters, shall have the sole and exclusive right to have and to use in carrying out its purposes the name of "The Military Order of the Purple Heart."

SEC. 7. That the said corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year make and transmit to the Congress a report of its proceedings for the preceding calendar year, including a full and complete report of its receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 8. That, as a condition precedent to the exercise in any State of any power or privilege herein granted or conferred, the Military Order of the Purple Heart shall file in the office of the secretary of state of such State the name and post-office address of an authorized agent in such State upon whom legal process against the Military Order of the Purple Heart may be served.

SEC. 9. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE TO POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 4116) amending the act of June 25, 1938, extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service is not present. I was wondering whether we should take this bill up in his absence. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JURISDICTION OVER AIR-MAIL SERVICES

The bill (S. 4061) extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority over certain air-mail services, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar 2035, House bill 9899, is an identical bill, and without objection the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9899) extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority over certain air-mail services, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4061 and Senate bill 4078 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Delaware whether the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is very much interested in air-mail matters, is acquainted with the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, Senate bill 4061, Senate bill 4078, and House bill 9899 are identical. Their provisions are alike.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been disposed of.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to recur temporarily to Calendar No. 1951, House bill 9575, in order to submit an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received, and printed, and will be pending. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the appropriate place in the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. The term "highway" as defined by the Federal Highway Act shall not be deemed to include any bridges hereafter to be constructed if located within 10 miles of an existing toll bridge, unless a reasonable offer is made to acquire the facilities of such toll bridge and such offer has not been accepted, and unless a finding as to the reasonableness of said offer, the failure of acceptance, and the percentage of amortization of such toll bridge has been made after public hearing by the Federal Works Administrator: Provided, That such finding by the Federal Works Administrator shall not be subject to review.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8372) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Chester, Ill., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, MEMPHIS, TENN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3929) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 1, line 8, after "August 10", to strike out "1939" and to insert "1940", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Memphis, authorized to be built by the Memphis & Arkansas Bridge Commission by an act of Congress approved August 10, 1939, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 10, 1940.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. MARYS RIVER BRIDGE, MICHIGAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3934) authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 3, line 19, after the word "tolls" to strike out "or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, under economic management", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, from a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan, to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

(b) There is hereby conferred upon the State of Michigan and the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Michigan needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations, or bridge authorities, or the State of Michigan, for bridge purposes in the State of Michigan, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

(c) The State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, and the rates of toll shall be so fixed and adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. An accurate record of the cost of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER TOLL BRIDGES, LAWRENCE, OHIO

The bill (S. 4091) authorizing the county of Lawrence, Ohio, to acquire and operate as a unit certain privately owned toll bridges across the Ohio River adjoining such county was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4091 is identical with House bill 9922, Calendar No. 1968. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and the immediate consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9920) authorizing the county of Lawrence, Ohio, to acquire and operate as a unit certain privately owned toll bridges across the Ohio River adjoining such county was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4091 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8621) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act and other retirement acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. If the Senator in charge of the bill is not present at the moment, let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WAPATO INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT, WASHINGTON

The bill (H. R. 3402) to authorize the appropriation for payment of the cost of providing additional water for the Wapato Indian irrigation project, Washington, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] on August 4, 1939, entered a motion to reconsider.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be perfectly willing to agree with my friend the Senator from Washington that the bill may be made the unfinished business so far as I am concerned, and taken up when the Senate meets again a week from now.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator from Utah understand that the bill which was passed by the Senate on the 4th of August last year, with respect to which he entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, called for $1,700,000, and is objected to by the Office of Indian Affairs while the bill now reached on the calendar calls for $800,000, less than half of the amount provided for in the other bill, and has been, as I understand, prepared and agreed upon by all the various departments, and now has the approval of the Director of the Budget?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a letter which I received indicates that there is some question as to the righteousness, if I may use that expression, of an $800,000 gratuity to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. There is probably very much merit in the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to suggest that probably at biweekly intervals since August 4, last year, I have been asking the Senator from Utah to look into the matter.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3402) to authorize the appropriation for payment of the cost of providing additional water for the Wapato Indian irrigation project, Washington, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion made by the Senator from Utah on August 4, 1939, with regard to Senate bill 1065, will be withdrawn, and Senate bill 1065 will be indefinitely postponed.

ALASKA SALMON FISHERY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8172) to amend section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, relative to the Alaska salmon fishery, which had been reported by the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 1, line 5, after the word "amended", to strike out "by striking the period at the end of the first sentence of said section and inserting a comma in lieu thereof and after said comma the following: 'nor shall such authority be exercised to prohibit any person from fishing for or taking salmon by hook and line, either for personal use or for sale, during any weekly closed period in any of the waters of Alaska where salmon fishing is otherwise permitted by law and the regulations based thereon.' ", and to insert "by inserting after the word 'barter' in the first sentence of said section a comma and the following: 'and except by hook and line for either personal or commercial use.' ", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," as amended, is further amended by inserting after the word "barter" in the first sentence of said section a comma and the following: "and except by hook and line for either personal or commercial use."

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The bill (H. R. 9972) authorizing the improvement of certain rivers and harbors in the interest of the national defense was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked for an explanation of House bill 9972. My attention was diverted at the time it was reached on the calendar. I am ready to make an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to Calendar No. 1973, being House bill 9972?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

OFFICIAL MAIL OF PAN AMERICAN SANITARY BUREAU

The bill (H. R. 8350) permitting official mail of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau to be transmitted in penalty envelopes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF ALASKA RAILROAD

The bill (H. R. 8046) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees of the Alaska Railroad, Territory of Alaska, who are citizens of the United States," approved June 29, 1936, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEQUEST OF THE LATE JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 258) to provide for the use and disposition of the bequest of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Homes to the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the committee selected pursuant to section 3 of Public Resolution No. 124, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938, to make recommendations to the Congress concerning the use of the bequest and devise made to the United States by Oliver Wendell Holmes, late an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, is authorized to execute the functions vested in it by this joint resolution. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of such committee (hereinafter referred to as the "committee") shall be filled by the selection of a person selected in the same manner as his predecessor was selected. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution, the committee is authorized to utilize voluntary and uncompensated services and, with the consent of any Federal agency, to utilize the facilities and personnel of such agency. The committee is authorized to make any additional recommendations to the Congress which it deems desirable. Upon the completion of its work, the committee shall transmit a final report to the Congress and shall thereupon cease to exist.

SEC. 2. The committee shall prepare for publication a memorial volume designed to perpetuate the memory of Justice Holmes and to make readily available to the public the best expressions of his thought. Such volume shall contain such of the writings of Justice Holmes as are selected by the committee, and shall contain such additional matter and such illustrations as the committee may determine. The Librarian of Congress shall make available to the committee the facilities of, and the services of the personnel of, the Library of Congress to assist the committee in the preparation of such volume.

SEC. 3. The Public Printer is authorized and directed to cause to be printed and bound in the Government Printing Office, in a manner and form approved by the committee, such number of copies of the memorial volume prepared by the committee as the committee shall determine. The Superintendent of Documents shall distribute free of cost copies of such volume to such libraries, institutions, and other organizations and persons as the committee may designate. Copies of such volume which are not distributed free of cost shall be made available by the Superintendent of Documents for sale to the public at a price, notwithstanding any other provision of law, determined by the Public Printer to represent the actual cost of printing, binding, and distribution. The cost of printing and binding all of the copies of such volume shall be paid from money appropriated from the money in the Treasury to the credit of the account "Donations to the United States, Bequest of Oliver Wendell Holmes" (hereinafter referred to as the "Holmes fund"). Receipts from the sales of copies of such volume shall be covered into the Holmes fund so long as that fund is carried on the books of the Treasury, and thereafter such receipts shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. The Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed, under the direction of the committee, to acquire on behalf of the United States, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, that part of the property in square 759 in the District of Columbia which the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee, determines will provide a suitable site for the garden to be established pursuant to section 5.

SEC. 5. (a) The Architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the committee, is authorized and directed to establish on the land acquired pursuant to section 4 a memorial garden designed to perpetuate the memory of Justice Holmes and to commemorate the love of beauty and of the quiet open spaces of the city of Washington, to which he often gave expression. The garden so established shall be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Garden.

(b) The plans and designs of such garden, including the plans and designs for all grading and landscaping and all structures to be erected and other improvements to be made on the land acquired pursuant to section 4, shall be selected by the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee and of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, from plans and designs submitted in open competition. The manner of holding such competition and the amount to be paid for such plans and designs shall be determined by the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the committee. Expenditures made for carrying out the provisions of this section shall be made from moneys appropriated from the Holmes fund.

(c) The committee is authorized to make arrangements for appropriate ceremonies for the dedication of such garden upon its completion.

SEC. 6. After the completion and dedication of such garden, it shall be maintained and cared for by the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with the provisions of law applicable with respect to the maintenance and care of the grounds of the United States Supreme Court Building.

SEC. 7. (a) For the purposes of this joint resolution, the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, under the direction of the committee—

(1) To provide for the demolition and removal of any structures on the land acquired pursuant to section 4 and for the sale or other disposition of any materials of which they are constructed.

(2) Pending the demolition of such structures, to lease any of the property so acquired for such periods and under such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the United States; to provide, out of such appropriations as may be made for such purpose, for the maintenance, repair, and protection of such property; and to incur such expenses as may be necessarily incident to the jurisdiction and control over such property. Any proceeds received under this paragraph or paragraph (1) shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Architect of the Capitol shall include in his annual report a detailed statement of his activities under this paragraph during the period covered by such report.

(3) To enter into contracts; to purchase materials, supplies, equipment, and accessories in the open market; to employ necessary personnel, including professional services, without regard to other laws relating to the employment or compensation of personnel; and to make such expenditures as may be necessary or appropriate.

(b) All lands within the area determined pursuant to section 4 which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are transferred to the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol. The Architect of the Capitol is authorized to close any alley within such area and is authorized, with the approval of the committee, to permit any portion of the land acquired pursuant to section 4 to be used as an alley so long as such use is necessary.

(c) All funds expended by the Architect of the Capitol pursuant to this joint resolution shall be disbursed by the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 8. (a) The Commissioner of Public Buildings, in the Federal Works Agency, is authorized and directed, on behalf of the United States, to sell and convey title to the land and improvements thereon known as 1720 Eye Street NW., in the District of Columbia, the former residence of Justice Holmes. Such sale may be made pursuant to advertisement or otherwise upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such covenants with respect to demolition of the building and such other restrictive covenants as may be approved by the committee. The Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized to provide, by contract or otherwise and subject to the approval of the committee, for the demolition of the building upon such land prior to the sale of the land.

(b) The costs of any advertisement, appraisal, broker's fee, or commission incident to the sale of such property, and any costs incurred under this section for demolition of the building, shall be paid from the proceeds of the sale; and the funds of the Public Buildings Administration shall be reimbursed from such proceeds for any of such costs which shall have been paid from the funds of such Administration. The balance of the proceeds of the sale shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the account of the Holmes fund.

SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the money in the Treasury to the credit of the Holmes fund, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 3 and 5 of this joint resolution; and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the other provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 10. Upon the transmission to the Congress of the final report of the committee, any money in the Treasury to the credit of the account of the Holmes fund shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

CLIFFORD J. WILLIAMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7843) for the relief of Clifford J. Williams, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first committee amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and to insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of Clifford J. Williams, postmaster at Bainbridge, Ga., in the sum of $10,068.28. Such sum represents a balance due on a shortage in the accounts of John A. Harrison, former assistant postmaster, which accrued prior to August 15, 1926, the date of the appointment of the said Clifford J. Williams as postmaster aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. The surety on the bond of the said Clifford J. Williams, as postmaster at Bainbridge, Ga., is hereby relieved of any liability on account of such shortage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

IMPORTATION OF ARTICLES PRODUCED UNDER PROCESS COVERED BY UNITED STATES PATENTS

The bill (H. R. 8285) to limit the importation of articles, products, and minerals produced, processed, or mined under process covered by outstanding United States patents; to define unfair trade practices in certain instances; and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that this bill grows out of a decision by the United States Supreme Court which permits certain commodities to be brought into this country in competition with the output of our own mines. It affects phosphate, bauxite, and several other minerals produced in this country, growing out of the fact that a foreign country, or some individual in such country, may appropriate the patent of an American citizen or entity, then process commodities with the patent which is illegally appropriated, and later send the products back into this country in competition with our own output, without paying any royalty or having any authority from the American patentee. This amendment was worked out by the Patents Committee of the Senate, with the complete concurrence of the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Tariff Commission, and one other agency of the Government. The able Senator from Tennessee knows about it. He was present at the hearings. It was designed to protect American interests. I think the Senator would find the bill satisfactory if he had the time to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I object to it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. McCARRAN subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of Calendar 2002, House bill 8285. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the importation hereafter for use, sale, or exchange of a product made, produced, processed, or mined under or by means of a process covered by the claims of any unexpired valid United States letters patent, whether issued heretofore or hereafter, shall have the same status for the purposes of section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as the importation of any product or article covered by the claims of any unexpired valid United States letters patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to limit the importation of products made, produced, processed, or mined under process covered by unexpired valid United States patents, and for other purposes."

COAL PRICES ESTABLISHED BY NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) making applicable to certain coal deliveries the prices established by the National Bituminous Coal Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, when the second Bituminous Coal Act was passed, it provided that the Government should not make contracts for coal for periods longer than 30 days. It provided that the Government should pay for its coal the price fixed by the Bituminous Coal Commission if an order were promulgated. Contracts were entered into on that basis, and an order was promulgated, but the order was then attacked in the courts and was temporarily enjoined, and the Bituminous Coal Commission did not proceed further along that line, but without coming to a final test of the legality of the order it retreated and took another line, so the question of the legality of that proceeding was never adjudicated. Some of the contractors were paid by the Government, and some were not, and the purpose of the joint resolution is to equalize those who were not paid with those who were paid, because the Comptroller General has advised that if the joint resolution is not passed the Government will have to sue to recover from those who were paid, who would be sued for doing what the Government had asked them to do. The situation has created a rather difficult administrative problem, which the Department has asked to have cleared up by this legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, what would be the cost to the Government?

Mr. MINTON. I do not have the exact figures, but the expense would not be very heavy.

Mr. GUFFEY. The expense would be very small.

Mr. MINTON. The joint resolution is recommended by the Department for the purpose of relieving a rather difficult administrative problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think we ought to have some idea of the cost.

Mr. MINTON. I am sorry I was not furnished with that information.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MORRISSEY CONSTRUCTION CO.

The bill (H. R. 5823) for the relief of Morrissey Construction Co. was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES P. MADSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3741) for the relief of Charles P. Madsen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "the sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,528.36", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles P. Madsen, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $3,528.36, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for payment of medical and hospital expenses and for compensation for personal injuries and property damage sustained by him as the result of being struck by a United States mail truck while walking on the sidewalk along the west side of the city post office in Washington, D. C., on December 26, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF FOREIGN MAIL BY AIRCRAFT

The bill (S. 4137) relating to transportation of foreign mail by aircraft was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i) (2) of section 405 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, approved June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 973; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 49, sec. 401, and the following), the Postmaster General shall have heretofore fixed and put into effect, or shall hereafter fix and put into effect, the rates of compensation to be charged foreign countries for the transportation of their mail by air carriers and where the collections from such foreign countries of the amounts owing by them for such transportation are required by such subsection to be made by the United States for the account of such air carriers, the Postmaster General may simplify and expedite the settlement of accounts for such carriage by offsetting against any balance due a foreign country resulting from the transaction of international money-order business or otherwise, such amounts as may be then due from such country to the United States and to the United States for the account of such carriers; and the Postmaster General and the General Accounting Office shall thereupon give the foreign country involved the appropriate credit for such payment by offset, paying to the carrier that portion of the amount so charged as may be owing to the carrier for its services in transporting the mail of such foreign country and depositing as "miscellaneous postal receipts" that portion of the amount so charged as may be due the United States on its own account: Provided, That no adjustment of accounts authorized by this act shall apply to appropriations for fiscal years prior to the fiscal year 1940: Provided further, That any adjustments made under the authority of this section shall be subject to the right of the United States to deduct from any sums due or thereafter becoming due to a carrier such amounts as may have been paid it on account of foreign countries which amounts, for any reason, the United States shall have been unable to collect, either by offset or otherwise, from the debtor country.

SEC. 2. If any case where collections are to be made by the United States from a foreign country for the transportation of mails of such countries for the account of an air carrier pursuant to section 405 (i) (2) of the Civil Aeronautics Act, whether such transportation occurred before or after the passage of this act, the Postmaster General, taking into consideration the state of the balance carried in the appropriation, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to make advances to such air carrier out of sums appropriated for "balances due foreign countries," upon determination by the Postmaster General from time to time of the amounts due from any such foreign countries for transportation, and thereafter such amounts shall be collected by the United States from foreign countries by set-off, or otherwise, in the manner hereinbefore provided, and the appropriation for payment of "balances due foreign countries" shall be reimbursed by collections so made by the United States: Provided, however, That if the United States shall fail to collect any such amount or any part of such amount from such foreign country owing same within 12 months after the United States has paid such amount to the carrier, the United States may deduct such uncollected amounts from any sums owing by it to the carrier.

SEC. 3. The General Accounting Office shall make the necessary credits and debits in the respective appropriations and accounts involved and adopt such procedure as may be necessary to conform to and effect the purposes of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3869) to authorize the participation of States in certain revenues from national parks, national monuments, and other areas under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An explanation is requested.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to know something about the bill. Suppose we pass it temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 9722) to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT TO MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

The bill (H. R. 9139) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. DANAHER. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow a word of explanation?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I can give an explanation of exactly what the bill is, and how important it is at this time.

The present act expires on June 30, 1940. The two important provisions of this bill have already received favorable action by the Senate by its action on Senate amendments to H. R. 6505, at the first session of this Congress. Those two provisions are (1) the extension of the expiration date of the Municipal Bankruptcy Act from June 30, 1940, to June 30, 1942, and (2) the inclusion of counties and parishes as taxing units entitled to use the act.

The third provision is restrictive in nature, in that it imposes safeguards by way of a limitation upon the source of payment for services rendered under any adjustment plan, it being provided that any compensation shall be paid by the taxing unit itself, or by creditors, but not by both.

The Senate receded from its amendments at the request of the introducers thereof, this move being made in order not to hold up H. R. 6505 while the House held hearings on a bill which embodied the substance of the Senate amendments.

Immediate action is necessary because of the June 30, 1940, expiration date of the present act.

In 1933 the Congress accepted the principal of municipal bankruptcy by enacting a Municipal Bankruptcy Act. This act was declared unconstitutional; but, upon being redrafted and reenacted by the Seventy-fifth Congress, the act was sustained. In this law counties and parishes were omitted, but evidence before the Senate and House committees leaves no doubt that counties and parishes may be included within the scope of the act.

Data compiled by the American Bar Association about a year ago shows that at that time there were 159 cases pending under the act, divided as follows: 2 from Arizona, 14 from Arkansas, 8 from California, 30 from Florida, 25 from Indiana, 48 from Kentucky, 1 from Michigan, 2 from Missouri, 2 from New Jersey, 1 from North Carolina, 2 from Oklahoma; 9 from Oregon, 1 from South Carolina, 2 from Tennessee, and 12 from Texas.

In view of the fact that the legislation forced operations along an uncharted course, many taxing units needing the provisions thereof were unable to proceed thereunder immediately because of the necessity of having the course charted by a few cases, thus reducing the cost. It is apparent from correspondence in my office that there has been a much wider resort to the act during the 12 months which have elapsed since the bar association survey. Further information indicates a wider use during the next 2 years.

The view of the American Bar Association was reflected in a committee report which read, in part, that the Municipal Bankruptcy Act—

> Has served a useful purpose to date, and since it is likely that the wreckage of the depression cannot be cleared away entirely by June 30, 1940, the act itself should be extended for another 2-year period.

This objective has also been recommended by the Chicago Bar Association.

It is interesting to see the widespread favorable support for the passage of this proposed legislation. It appears that the interest comes from creditor and debtor alike and covers about 40 States. The debtors have requested the legislation in order that they may have a vehicle for effecting a compromise of impossible debt structures with a reasonable majority without risk of interference by small minorities of holders, and the creditors have shown favorable interest because it appears that creditors generally want the privilege of working out a practical solution and then having that solution equally binding on all creditors, without priorities. Without the act reasonable creditors are unable to give effect to their desire to be fair because of a universal disposition of a small minority, usually owning less than 10 percent of the debt, to insist upon the "pound of flesh." Incidentally, evidence before the committees of the Congress indicates that this minority is frequently composed of persons who have purchased securities at depressed prices, following defaults, and who insist upon being paid, thus resulting in substantial profits at the expense of taxpayers and permanent investors alike.

Incidentally, the Government has a distinct interest in this legislation, particularly the part thereof which extends the expiration date of the act for 2 years. Present laws permit the R. F. C. to refinance drainage, irrigation, and levee districts; but the R. F. C. has found that resort to the Bankruptcy Act is essential because of the practice of minorities to hold out for preferences. The direct interest of the R. F. C. is shown by testimony given before the Senate and House committees by members of the legal staff of R. F. C.

In California alone the R. F. C. is now interested in the outcome of 10 municipal bankruptcy cases which have been appealed to the circuit court of appeals. It is understood that the legal question is largely one of procedure, and if the court should decide after June 30, 1940, that the procedure used was erroneous and require new proceedings, and if this act should not be passed prior to that date, the R. F. C. would be without remedy to protect its position by forcing minority participation in reasonable readjustment plans. Thus there will be lost for creditors and taxing units the benefit sought by the law which permits the R. F. C. to refinance these drainage, irrigation, and levee districts. All told, the R. F. C. has approximately 40 cases in the country which would be adversely affected by the failure to extend the act, according to information which has come to me.

In closing, attention is directed to the fact that this type of legislation is really misnamed. Bankruptcy usually connotes a wiping out of liabilities by a surrender of assets. The Municipal Bankruptcy Act merely permits a plan of composition and readjustment to become effective only after due court hearing and after it has been approved in writing by the holders of 66⅔ percent of the claims sought to be adjusted. It merely makes it impossible for "pound of flesh" minorities to profit at the expense of taxpayers and reasonable creditors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have to go to the Appropriations Committee for a conference, and I desire to have a formal matter attended to before I leave.

I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it receded from its amendments 35 to 39, inclusive, to House bill 9007.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this matter?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have explained it, I believe, four times today, but I will try to do it again.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very sorry that I missed the Senator's explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not happen to be here.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have been on the floor all day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I do not know why it was the Senator did not hear me previously. Perhaps I did not make myself plain, and I will have to explain it again. In House bill 9007, the appropriation bill for the Labor Department, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, there was one item which was in conference for nearly 2 months. That item provided that no part of the money should be paid for filling non-civil-service offices from States that already had their quota on a population basis. The House conferees insisted on that. The Senate conferees insisted that the provision ought not to be applied to the Labor Department alone without applying it to other departments. Of course, the disagreement was very pronounced, and we were finally forced, in order to get a bill at all, to agree to the House provision. It was finally agreed to, with an amendment excepting from the terms of the prohibition the C. C. C. camps. Under the amendment, which was agreed to, but which was left out of the report, C. C. C. camps would be excluded from the provision.

The motion to reconsider is for the purpose of having that amendment, which was inadvertently left out, inserted in the bill, so that hereafter C. C. C. camp foremen will be appointed from the State in which a camp is situated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask whether the Senate is now adhering to the proposed quota system or abandoning it?

Mr. McKELLAR. We are adhering to the quota system. We were forced to do it. The Senate conferees held out for 2 months.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. For what did the Senate conferees hold out? Are they for the system or against it?

Mr. McKELLAR. We were against the quota system unless it was applied to all departments of the Government alike.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator still believe that that is the correct position?

Mr. McKELLAR. I absolutely do, if all the departments are included; but I do not think, and the Senate conferees did not think, that it ought to be applied to the Labor Department and related agencies only, but should be applied to all the departments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the Senator, who is an expert parliamentarian——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I am not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What vote should a Senator cast who is thoroughly in favor of applying the quota system to all departments of the Government?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no provision of that kind in this bill, and none before the Senate, of which I know. I wish to assure the Senator that I believe the quota system ought to be applied to all departments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator that I want to go just as far as I possibly can in the application and enforcement of the quota system. What is the direct effect of the motion which the Senator has just made,

Mr. McKELLAR. It is to reconsider the vote by which Senate amendments 35 to 39, inclusive, were agreed to, so as not to apply the quota system to C. C. C. camps.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why should there not be an amendment to apply the quota system to all departments of the Government?

Mr. McKELLAR. Because there is no provision in this bill that will permit that. There was no such provision in the House bill; there was no such provision in the Senate bill; and the Senator, who is, I suppose, one of the most expert parliamentarians in the world, knows that unless a provision is in one bill or the other it cannot be agreed to in conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator's motion go as far as the Senate can at this time go in the enforcement of the quota system?

Mr. McKELLAR. It goes as far as it can go, if the Senator will let it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments numbered 35 to 39, inclusive, ask for a further conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

I may say that there is really only one amendment involved. The others are purely formal, merely involving a change of section numbers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

RESIDENCE OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1957, Senate bill 4116, so that I may make an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this is a bill sponsored by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. It corrects an injustice in the law with reference to the employment of postmasters under the civil service. All this bill does is this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that objection was interposed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is this the bill to which the Senator called my attention?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; and I will explain it.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to it.

Mr. MEAD. Very well; I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I objected when the bill was called the first time, and I still object.

Mr. MEAD. Will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withhold it.

Mr. MEAD. When the bill placing postmasters under the civil service was passed, it required that all postmasters brought under the civil service and appointed, promoted, or transferred thereafter should live within the jurisdiction of the post office. In at least three cases the postmasters cannot live within the jurisdiction of post offices. One of them is at Mount Vernon, Va., where the postmaster is not allowed to live in George Washington's home. Another one is an insane asylum in Michigan, and the postmaster must of necessity live outside the asylum grounds. The third is in a town owned by the Du Ponts in Washington, and the postmaster must, of course, because he cannot qualify under their household regulations, live outside the jurisdiction there. This bill would allow the appointment of a postmaster if he lives contiguous to the jurisdiction.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The same conditions the Senator from New York describes also exist at certain Army posts.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct. So the bill merely requires that the postmasters live within the jurisdiction or, in certain cases approved by the Civil Service Commission, contiguous to the jurisdiction. So in reality the bill does not change the law.

Mr. President, I now ask for the consideration and passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill goes over for the second time.

CONTINENTAL AEROSURVEYS CORPORATION

Mr. MEAD. I ask for the consideration of a House bill which is now on the desk, and that it be substituted for Senate bill 4156. I will then explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 4156 was reported today. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 4156) for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, there are many bills on the calendar in which a great many Senators are interested.

I do not see any rhyme or reason in permitting a bill to be taken up out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I reserve my objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation has, with the Department of Agriculture, a contract which will terminate on June 30. They are merely asking for an extension of 3 months in order to complete their contract. It is recommended by the Department of Agriculture. The bill was reported unanimously by the House committee and by the Senate committee; it has passed the House, and, unless it is considered and passed before the day is over, the extension cannot be considered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am sorry I could not hear the Senator's statement where I sit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate kindly be in order? Let Senators and the guests of the Senate desiring to carry on audible conversation either retire to the cloak rooms or leave the galleries.

Mr. MEAD. As I have stated, the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation, a photographic concern, has a contract with the Department of Agriculture which will terminate on June 30. Both the Department of Agriculture and the corporation desire an extension until November 15, in order that the company may complete their work. No additional appropriation is involved. It will merely permit their doing a completed job for the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 10087) for the relief of the Continental Aerosurveys Corporation was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4156 is indefinitely postponed.

PREVENTION OF PUBLICATION OF INVENTIONS IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST

The bill (H. R. 10058) to amend the act relating to preventing the publication of inventions in the national interest, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE WITH REGARD TO PETROLEUM STILLS

The bill (H. R. 6207) to amend section 2810 (a), Internal Revenue Code, to exclude petroleum stills from the requirement of registration, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTED PILE MATS AND COCOA FIBER FLOOR COVERINGS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6328) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 1529 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)), is hereby further amended by inserting "1022" after the figure "1006."

This act shall take effect on the day following its enactment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After line 7, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

Section 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

d. No duties collected prior to June 26, 1938, under paragraph 1115 (b) of this act shall be refunded, unless the claimant establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, or to the satisfaction of the trial court, under conditions set forth in section 902 (a) and section 902 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1936, that he bore the burden of such duties.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have an organization of which the chairman of the two fiscal committees—the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate—are the heads, to consider these refunds, I ask the Senator whether or not this matter ought to have gone before that joint committee.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment is not objectionable to the Treasury Department. It gives the Treasury Department authority over refunding duties collected prior to June 26, 1938, upon hat bodies made of wool felt.

Paragraph 1115 (b) imposed the following duty:

(b) Bodies, hoods, forms, and shapes, for hats, bonnets, caps, berets, and similar articles, manufactured wholly or in part of wool felt, 40 cents per pound and 75 percent ad valorem. * * *

The Treasury Department drew up regulations and collected the above duties in accordance with the intent of the Congress. However, in 1938 a decision by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals held that "wool felt hat bodies" were actually not manufactured of wool felt because the material did not become completed felt until the manufacturing process was completed. This case is now in the process of appeal.

Because of this decision the Congress, by act approved June 25, 1938, amended paragraph 1115 (b) for the purpose of clarifying the same.

As amended by this act, said subsection now reads:

(b) Bodies, hoods, forms, and shapes, for hats, bonnets, caps, berets, and similar articles, wholly or in chief value of wool but not knit or crocheted nor made in chief value of knit, crocheted, or woven material. * * * (The same duty of 40 cents per pound and 75 percent ad valorem was retained.)

If the Treasury Department is finally reversed in its interpretation of paragraph 1115 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, the Treasury will be placed in the position of having to refund over $4,000,000 in duties that were collected in accordance with the intent of the Congress between 1930 and 1938.

Duties collected since 1938, of course, have been properly assessed, because assessed under the 1938 amendment.

The duties paid between 1930 and 1938 were paid in accordance with Treasury regulations then in effect. The point upon which the court ruled in reversal of Treasury regulations was not even raised until 1938. Consequently duties paid prior to that period were paid in accordance with the intent of the Congress and in accordance with the importers' interpretation of this point.

The question now is whether, therefore, such duties should be refunded to these importers if the Treasury's interpretations are finally overruled by the courts.

Mr. KING. This bill could not be construed in any sense as an ex post facto law to relieve the Government of an obligation which legally would devolve upon it?

Mr. WALSH. No; it merely permits the Secretary of the Treasury, pending the decision in the courts—the matter having been appealed—not to pay back the refunds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SALOMON GEORG KAUFMANN AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 7563) for the relief of Salomon Georg Kaufmann; his wife Doris Kaufmann, nee Stern; and their child John Michael Peter Kaufmann was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHANN RUDOLF HUENEBERG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5641) to admit Johann Rudolf Hueneberg permanently to the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the immigration laws, the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to admit to the United States for permanent residence Johann Rudolf Hueneberg, a German, born in Germany.

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ANTAL OR ANTHONY OR TONY ZAICEK OR ZAICZEK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6056) for the relief of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "warrant", to strike out "and that by the terms of this act he shall not be permitted to become a naturalized citizen of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to record the permanent residence of Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek as of October 2, 1924, and that the warrant of deportation be canceled and Antal or Anthony or Tony Zaicek or Zaiczek shall not again be subject to deportation proceedings for the reasons set up in said warrant.

Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current quota year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEIER LANGERMANN AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 9651) for the relief of Meier Langermann, his wife, Friederike, and son, Joseph, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVA SOFIA BILDSTEIN ET AL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3596) to enable Eva Sofia Bildstein and her minor son, Jorg Bildstein, to remain permanently in the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of the immigration laws Eva Sofia Bildstein and her minor son, Jorg Bildstein, natives of Germany, admitted into the United States on May 22, 1939, at the port of New York for temporary residence, shall be permitted to remain in the United States permanently as though they had in all respects complied with the immigration laws upon entry, and that the residence in the United States of the said Eva Sofia Bildstein and her minor son, Jorg Bildstein, shall date from the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK BECK

The bill (H. R. 8910) providing for the extension of nonquota status to Frederick Beck was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VASIL DIMITROFF TECHOFF

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3703) for the relief of Vasil Dimitroff Techoff, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "warrant", to strike out "By the terms of this act the alien is hereby disqualified from ever acquiring United States citizenship and that

"SEC. 2. That", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws the Secretary of Labor be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the warrant of arrest and the order of deportation heretofore issued against Vasil Dimitroff Techoff, and that the alien shall not hereafter become subject to deportation for the cause contained in the present warrant.

SEC. 2. That upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOLPH ERNEST HELMS

The bill (H. R. 5156) for the relief of Adolph Ernest Helms was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD PAUL REHN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5640) to admit Richard Paul Rehn permanently to the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the immigration laws, the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to admit to the United States for permanent residence Richard Paul Rehn, a German, born in Germany.

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INSPECTORS AND EMPLOYEES OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3248) to amend section 2, chapter 368, Forty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 1467, March 2, 1931, relating to extra compensation of inspectors and employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after "109a", to strike out "of this title" and insert "title 8, United States Code", and in line 12, after the word "waterways", to strike out "when operating" and insert "or vessels operating exclusively between ports and places in the State of Washington and in ports and places in the British Columbia", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2, chapter 368, Forty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 1467, March 2, 1931, be amended so as to read as follows:

"The said extra compensation shall be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel or other conveyance arriving in the United States from a foreign port to the Secretary of Labor, who shall pay the same to the several officers and employees entitled thereto as provided in section 109a, title 8, United States Code. Such extra compensation shall be paid if such officers or employees have been ordered to report for duty and have so reported, whether the actual inspection or examination of passengers or crew takes place or not: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the inspection at designated ports of entry of passengers arriving by international ferries, bridges, highways, or tunnels, or by aircraft, railroad trains, motor carriers, or vessels on the Great Lakes and connecting waterways or vessels operating exclusively between ports and places in the State of Washington and in ports and places in the British Columbia on regular schedules."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in instances in which the Immigration Service are required to keep their inspectors overtime as a result of delays of ships, the company must pay the overtime charges. There are a number of exemptions, all based upon the theory that where the service runs upon a regular schedule there is not the overtime requirement. Railroads, for example, running between here and Canada are exempted. This bill provides exemptions so far as bus lines operating on regular schedules are concerned. It also provides for ferryboats between the State of Washington and the Province of British Columbia which operate on regular schedules. The present law exempts the boats running on the Great Lakes, and there happens to be just one ferry line running between the United States and Canada which is not exempt.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION ACT OF 1924 AS TO OFFICIALS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

The bill (S. 4149) to amend the Immigration Act of 1924 to require aliens admitted into the United States as officials of foreign governments either to maintain their status or to depart from the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of State, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A similar House bill was received from the House today. Without objection, the House bill will be considered.

The bill (H. R. 10112) to amend the Immigration Act of 1924 to require aliens admitted into the United States as officials of foreign governments either to maintain their status or to depart from the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of State, was read twice by its title, considered ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4149 will be indefinitely postponed.

PARTICIPATION OF STATES IN REVENUE OF NATIONAL PARKS, ETC.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Senate bill 3869, Calendar No. 2007.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3869) to authorize the participation of States in certain revenues from national parks, national monuments, and other areas under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Was objection formerly made, and by whom?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] objected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I asked for an explanation, and the Chair may recall that I asked that the bill go to the foot of the list. I should like to know what is proposed by the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the proposition is that where parks, national monuments, and the like exist, the contiguous counties of the respective States shall participate to the extent of 25 percent in the revenue taken in by the parks and monuments.

I will state the reason for it. We will use Yellowstone Park as an illustration. The contiguous counties of the respective States must of necessity take care of the policing, the sanitation, and so forth, of all surrounding conditions; so the thought of the bill was that those counties should participate to the extent of 25 percent in the revenue taken in.

Mr. DANAHER. May I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Do not the parks bring all sorts of advantages to the States in which they are located, which greatly outweigh the disadvantages?

Mr. McCARRAN. They bring all sorts of advantages, but they also bring many disadvantages. I do not want to dwell on the disadvantages, but the surrounding counties must of necessity take care of conditions growing out of the presence of great numbers of visitors. The Senator may realize what this means. For instance, the recreational park around Boulder Dam last year was visited by 750,000 persons. The counties surrounding that particular park were compelled to take care of the trials of cases, the policing of the situation, and everything pertaining to it. So it seemed to us it was quite essential that some compensation be accorded to the surrounding country which must of necessity take care of the burden.

That is the whole story of this bill.

Mr. DANAHER. How does the Department of the Interior feel about the matter, if the Senator knows?

Mr. McCARRAN. The Department of the Interior is in accord with the bill, but recommended an amendment providing that the Boulder Dam area should be excluded from the provisions of the bill. The reason was, as I recall—and I state it in substance—that the States of Nevada and Arizona have certain perquisites coming from the Boulder Dam area by way of taxation. In answer to that, however, I may say that it is a State taxation, and the State has the benefit of it. That matter is now involved in a bill which is pending before Congress; so we thought it was not best to exclude the Boulder Dam area, because the Boulder Dam area is the area which attracts the greatest number of persons to it as, for instance, 750,000 persons during the past year.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair]. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the next fiscal year following the approval of this act, 25 percent of the moneys derived by the Federal Government during any fiscal year from the collection of fees, including motor and other vehicular fees, from visitors to areas which are now or hereafter may be under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, as shall be certified by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as practicable after the end of each fiscal year, to the State in which each area under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service is situated.

When any such area is in more than one State, the distributive share therefrom to each State shall be proportional to its area therein, as shall be certified by the Secretary of the Interior. Such funds shall be expended for the benefit of the county or counties in which each area is situated, in such manner, and by such agencies of State or local government as the State legislatures shall prescribe: Provided, That for each fiscal year there shall not be paid to any State for the benefit of any county an amount in excess of 40 percent of the revenues derived by said county from all other sources during such fiscal year.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. SCHWARTZ subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day objection was made to the consideration of Senate bill 3869, Calendar No. 2007.

A little while ago, and evidently when I was not in the Chamber, when the matter was reconsidered the bill was taken up and passed. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed. I desire to enter an objection to the bill at this time, and have it go over. I merely want an opportunity to consider what effect the bill may have on the passage of House bill 6687, authorizing State taxation on personal property, uses, and sales in national parks and certain other reservations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which Senate bill 3869, Calendar 2007, was passed? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT TO MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we revert to Calendar No. 2009, House bill 9139.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9139) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the reading of the title this would appear to be a very comprehensive bill to consider under the 5-minute rule. I observe it is a House bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is really very important that this legislation be enacted. Certain parts of the law expire on the 30th of this month. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation are very much interested in getting this bill through in order that they may continue their operations under the law which has been in existence.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if there are any emergency features involved I would not object. If it is a mere modification or a repeal of some sections of the act, at this late day and time, I would object. If there is any necessity for immediate consideration of the bill I will withhold my objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, it is very necessary.

Mr. MILLER. In reference to the length of the bill, under the draftsmanship in the House they took up the entire municipal bankruptcy bill and set it out in this bill, which was the proper way to handle the matter, but they included counties and parishes in the amendment, and extended the period for 2 years. Those are really the changes that are made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that simplifies the whole situation, and I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have many objections to the extension of this measure, and particularly because it is broader than the original act. As indicated now by the Senator from Arkansas, it includes counties, and they are to be permitted to take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act. It seems to me that if we are not careful we will strike at the very foundations of credit. If municipalities and school districts and various other municipal organizations, including counties, are to be permitted to avoid their valid obligations by taking advantage of the Bankruptcy Act, I think we will impair very much the credit of all Federal agencies, including the Government of the United States.

Mr. ANDREWS. The procedure under the proposed law will absolutely take care of that situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION OF HAWAIIAN WOMEN

The bill (H. R. 159) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii," approved July 2, 1932, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPATRIATION OF NATIVE-BORN WOMEN

The bill (H. R. 4185) to repatriate native-born women residents of the United States who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARON PITT AND CECELIA PITT

The bill (S. 3361) for the relief of Aron Pitt and Cecelia Pitt, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws Aron Pitt (born Aron Pitkowski) and Cecilia Pitt or Cecelia Pitkowski (alias Anny Metz or Anny Metz Pitt), of West Hartford, Conn., the parents of two children born in the United States, shall be held and considered to have been legally admitted to the United States for permanent residence on March 1, 1925, and October 5, 1926, respectively.

SEC. 2. Any proceedings heretofore or hereafter instituted for the deportation of the said Aron Pitt and Cecilia Pitt on the ground that they fraudulently gained admission to the United States shall be null and void.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS

The bill (H. R. 6443) to permit certain aliens whose childhood was spent in the United States, if eligible to citizenship, to become naturalized without filing declaration of intention, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (H. R. 9618) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the city of Harrisburg, Pa., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS

The bill (H. R. 9509) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Ill., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENT

The bill (S. 3936) to extend the provisions of the act of May 22, 1934, known as the National Stolen Property Act, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794), is hereby extended to include and apply to any property which has been seized in violation of law or which has been confiscated.

SEC. 2. The word "confiscated" shall be deemed to include the taking of any property, by means of force by any foreign government, or by means of any law, decree, order, ordinance, or other act, direct or indirect, of any foreign sovereign or government or of any political subdivision or instrumentality thereof or of any official board, commission, or agency whereby private property is taken without payment in United States currency or its equivalent having been made or provided for in a manner acceptable to the owners of the property so taken.

SEC. 3. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or otherwise modify any part of the Act of October 29, 1919 (ch. 89), cited as the "National Motor Vehicle Theft Act", nor the act of May 22, 1934, known as the "National Stolen Property Act."

NORTH SLOUGH DAM AND DIKE, OREGON

The bill (H. R. 6408) an act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a dam and dike for preventing the flow of tidal waters into North Slough in Coos County, Oreg., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED CEDAR SHINGLES

The bill H. R. 9765, an act to provide for exercising the right with respect to red cedar shingles reserved in the trade agreement concluded November 17, 1938, between the United States of America and Canada, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OF THE ARLINGTON FARM, VIRGINIA

The bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Virginia, to the jurisdiction of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the control and jurisdiction of the lands, buildings, and improvements constituting the Arlington Farm, as created by the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900 (31 Stat. 135), west of the Rosslyn connecting railroad, are hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War, to take effect progressively as each area of said farm is turned over by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War: Provided, That the authority to remove such buildings, improvements, trees, and plants as shall be deemed necessary in order to promote the work of the Department of Agriculture shall remain in the Secretary of Agriculture until the transfer of the area involved is effected.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $3,200,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or donation of lands to provide a suitable site for the development and reestablishment thereon of the functions and activities of the Arlington Farm, and the construction and installation of such buildings, equipment, and utilities and appurtenances thereto, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary.

SEC. 3. There is also further authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $4,000,000 for the acquisition of adjacent lands and the construction and installation of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary for military purposes on the above-mentioned lands, including alterations, additions, and betterments to such existing improvements thereon as may be transferred by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. The control and jurisdiction of that portion of the Arlington Experimental Farm lying east of the Rosslyn connecting railroad is hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Interior, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,000,000 for the acquisition of adjacent lands in order that the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to this enlarged area the propagating gardens, shops, heating plant, tourist camp, and other facilities that are now located between the Washington Monument grounds, the Thomas Jefferson Memorial, and the Potomac River. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior a right-of-way 200 feet wide extending from a point near the southeast corner of the Arlington Cemetery in a northeasterly direction to the Boundary Channel, in order to provide a south approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge and the construction of an adequate road within this right-of-way is hereby authorized. The plans for location and development of this approach road as well as the development plans for the enlarged areas east and west of the railroad for the uses herein authorized shall be subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The development plan for the area under jurisdiction of the Secretary of War shall provide for a connecting road adjacent to the Rosslyn connecting railroad between the highways north of the Arlington reservation and those south of said reservation and upon the construction and opening of such road the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to close and abandon the present Military Road along the east boundary of the Arlington Cemetery.

PLEADING AND PRACTICE IN CRIMINAL CASES

The bill (H. R. 4587) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of pleading, practice, and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases prior to and including verdict, or finding or plea of guilty, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS ROSENSTONE

The bill (H. R. 7955) for the relief of Louis Rosenstone was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXATION OF INTANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4161) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act, 1939, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article III of title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, is amended by adding after section 14 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 15. Credits, securities, and other intangible personal property within the District not employed in carrying on any business therein by the owner shall be deemed to be located at the domicile of the owner for purposes of taxation under this title, and, if held in trust, shall not be deemed to be located in the District for purposes of taxation under this title solely because of the trustee being domiciled in the District: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to property owned by alien decedents, and that nothing herein contained shall affect the taxation by the District of any property owned by alien decedents which, at the time of the death of such decedents, shall be under the jurisdiction of the District or over which the District has control."

DEPOSITS OF PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to announce that Calendar No. 1880, House bill 6560, relating to placer-mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain was passed over earlier in the day and was to be called at the close of the calendar. The attention of the Senator from Nevada is called to the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, that goes over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does that conclude the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That concludes the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES ACT, 1930

Mr. McNARY. I have a little matter I wish to submit. I am at a disadvantage because of a parliamentary situation, which I think I can straighten out, with the consent of the Senate.

On May 6, 1940, the House passed a bill amending in a minor way the Perishable Commodities Act and the Senate also passed an identical bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which the House bill was referred, may be discharged from its further consideration and that it may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill 8628, and that it be considered by the Senate?

Without objection, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8628) to amend the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, as amended, to include as a perishable agricultural commodity cherries in brine, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 3464 to amend the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, as amended, was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

COL. DONALD H. CONNOLLY

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3550, a bill to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are two bills which were reported by the Committee on Commerce too late to get on the calendar. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is in charge of one of them, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] of the other. They are both emergency matters. Will the Senator permit them to be brought up?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If it is understood I do not lose the floor, and will have the right to call up Senate bill 3550, I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am interested in the bill in which the Senator from Missouri is interested.

One of the bills to which I have referred is the bill reported permitting the President to appoint Col. Donald H. Connolly Civil Aeronautics Administrator without regard to his position in the Army. I do not think there will be any opposition.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the able Senator from Kentucky whether a precedent has not been established for such action at the present session of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been in the case of Colonel Fleming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Kentucky restate his request?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill on the desk reported from the Committee on Commerce permitting the President to appoint Col. Donald H. Connolly Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority be taken up for present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 283) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 576), Col. Donald H. Connolly, being a commissioned officer on the active list, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is authorized to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce without loss of or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Army and if appointed to such civil office he shall receive in addition to his pay and allowances as such commissioned officer an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances as such commissioned officer and the salary prescribed by law for such civil office.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE AND REINSURANCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The other bill is a bill in charge of the Senator from Louisiana, regarding marine insurance, about which the President sent a message a few days ago, and it is regarded as an emergency measure.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6572, to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I can only agree to that with the understanding that I do not lose the floor, and that I may have the opportunity of moving to take up Senate bill 3550. I do not yield the floor for any other purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Without taking the Senator from Missouri from the floor, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Louisiana be permitted to call up the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6572), to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "commerce", to insert "due to extraordinary risks arising under existing war conditions", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a subtitle to read as follows:

"SUBTITLE—INSURANCE

"SEC. 221. (a) For the purpose of protecting the water-borne commerce of the United States from the impediments and burdens arising from the lack of adequate facilities for the insurance of such commerce, the Commission is authorized to provide marine insurance and reinsurance against loss or damage by the risks of war and reinsurance against loss or damage by marine risks, as prescribed in this subtitle, whenever it appears to the Commission that such insurance adequate for the needs of the water-borne commerce of the United States cannot be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States.

"(b) There shall be in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund to be known as the marine and war-risk insurance fund (hereinafter referred to as the fund), to be used for carrying out the provisions of this subtitle, and to be constituted of such sums as may be appropriated to such fund and of moneys and receipts credited thereto as herein provided. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to such fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subtitle. All moneys received from premiums and from salvage or other recoveries, and all receipts in connection with this subtitle shall be deposited to the credit of such fund. Payments of return premiums, losses, settlements, judgments, and all liabilities incurred by the United States under this subtitle shall be made from such fund.

"SEC. 222. The Commission may insure against loss or damage by the risks of war property, as follows:

"(a) (1) American vessels (including vessels under construction), (2) cargoes shipped or to be shipped therein: Provided, That in the event of the suspension of the present neutrality law no vessel or its officers and crew, carrying contraband and no cargo of contraband shall be insured under any provision of this act, (3) their disbursements, and freight and passage moneys, and (4) personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews of such vessels.

"(b) (1) Commercial vessels (including vessels under construction) owned or controlled by the United States or any department or agency thereof, (2) cargoes owned by the Government or in which the Government has an insurable interest, to the extent of such interest, (3) their disbursements, and freight and passage moneys, and (4) personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews thereof.

"SEC. 223. (a) The Commission may reinsure any company authorized to do an insurance business in any State of the United States on account of marine and marine war risks, including protection and indemnity risks, assumed by any such company, on (1) property or interests as set forth in section 222 (a) and (b) of this subtitle, and (2) masters, officers, and crews of American vessels (including any such vessel owned or controlled by or chartered to the Commission) against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture.

"(b) The Commission may reinsure, in whole or in part, with companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, war risks assumed by the Commission under this subtitle.

"(c) Any department or agency of the United States is hereby authorized to procure insurance from the Commission as provided for in section 222 (b) of this subtitle, except as provided in the Government Losses in Shipment Act, approved July 8, 1937 (50 Stat. 479).

"SEC. 224. Whenever the Commission determines that insurance for masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life, personal injury, or detention by any government except that of the United States following capture, arising from risks of war, cannot, with the aid of reinsurance provided for under this subtitle, be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from companies authorized to do an insurance business in a State of the United States, the Commission is authorized to provide such insurance on a basis corresponding to the war risk insurance protection supplied, prior to such determination, for such personnel by companies authorized to do business in a State of the United States.

"SEC. 226. (a) The Commission in the administration of this subtitle is authorized to adjust and pay losses, compromise and settle claims whether in favor of or against the Government, and to pay the amount of any judgment rendered in respect of any suit or settlement agreed upon in respect of any claim. The determinations of the Commission with respect to adjustments, compromises, settlements, and payments hereunder shall not be subject to review by any other executive or accounting officer of the Government.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to prescribe such forms and policies, to change or modify such forms and policies as may be necessary or appropriate under the circumstances, and to fix and adjust, as may be required by circumstances, the rates and changes of rates of insurance provided for in this subtitle.

"(c) The Commission is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subtitle. The Commission is authorized, in administering the provisions of this subtitle, to exercise its powers, perform its duties and functions, and make its expenditures, in accordance with commercial practice in the marine insurance business.

"(d) The Commission, without regard to the laws, rules, or regulations relating to the employment of employees of the United States, may appoint and prescribe the duties of such number of experts in marine insurance as the Commission may deem necessary in carrying out the provisions of this subtitle. The Commission, with the consent of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this subtitle.

"(e) The Commission shall include in the annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all activities and of all expenditures and receipts under this subtitle for the period covered by such report.

"(f) When used in this subtitle the term 'American vessels' means vessels registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 227. Nothing in this subtitle shall be deemed to affect the rights of seamen under any provision of existing law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the bill; I do not intend to ask for a roll call; but I certainly do want to register my opposition at this time, and to make it a matter of record that I am opposed to the bill, because this is just another step on the path which leads to war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri expresses his opposition, but does not object to the passage of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is entirely correct.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement similar to that made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I am not willing to object to the consideration of the bill, but I voted against a favorable report on it in the committee. I want it to be a matter of record that I do not approve the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has expressed his opposition to the bill. Will he not, for the enlightenment of some of us who are not members of the committee and who have not had an opportunity to learn of the merits or demerits of the measure, explain it, so we may obtain his view with regard to it? We shall be very happy to hear it.

Mr. WHITE. I voiced my opposition to the bill in the committee. The judgment of the committee was not my judgment, and I am not disposed to express my opposition here on the floor. I am content to let it remain a matter of record that I was against the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] please explain the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to provide insurance through the Maritime Commission for our vessels and cargoes, and for our seamen who are under the American flag. The bill becomes necessary by reason of the extraordinary conditions arising out of the war in Europe. It is patterned after, but does not follow entirely, the War Marine Insurance Act of 1917.

The bill authorizes the Maritime Commission to provide insurance against war risks and insurance against marine risks, and also authorizes the Commission to reinsure against war risks.

It provides for a revolving fund which would be initiated by an appropriation made by Congress and which would be maintained by the payment of premiums, and so forth, into this fund.

As the Members of the Senate probably know, the insurance premiums on vessels and cargoes are constantly rising. Our committee was advised today that the rates on the Pacific coast have gone up considerably in the last few days, and probably also on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why have the rates on the Pacific coast gone up? There is no war in the Pacific of which I know. Is not this simply another step, such as that which took place in the last war, to have the Government of the United States assume responsibility for insuring ocean freight? Was there any testimony before the committee—and I will say that I am a member of the committee, but I was unable to be present because it was necessary for me to be in another committee meeting this morning—was there any testimony before the committee that private companies were unwilling to take these risks?

Mr. OVERTON. The testimony before the committee was that all the private companies who are doing insurance business in the United States, so far as can be ascertained, are in favor of the enactment of this bill. It is not intended that the Maritime Commission shall compete with the companies that do insurance business in the United States. It also is shown that the shipowners desire the enactment of this bill, and no objection has been heard from them.

The parties in interest are in favor of the enactment of the bill, and it has been urged by the President of the United States. It was reported on favorably by the Department of Commerce, the Treasury Department, and by the Maritime Commission.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Everyone, of course, is always very willing for Uncle Sam to take the risk, bear the burdens, and pay the bills. If it is a good insurance risk the private insurance companies would be very glad to take it. If it is not a good insurance risk, I wish the Senator from Louisiana would explain to the Senate why the United States Government should take it, and I should like to ask the Senator further, if he will permit me——

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator does not ask me too many questions at one time. I shall be very glad to take them up one by one.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator can take them up as he pleases, but I should like to ask the Senator further if this is not another attempt on the part of the Maritime Commission, which, I suppose, is the most avaricious for power of any agency of the Government, to take another step toward further authority.

Mr. OVERTON. The answer to that question is "No."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not agree with the Senator. I think it is.

Mr. OVERTON. The answer to the first question is that it is not the purpose of the bill to put the Maritime Commission, as an agency of the Federal Government, into the insurance business in competition with other insurance companies. Such a situation may at any time arise, that insurance on the hulls, on American cargoes, and on the seamen who man the American vessels, cannot be obtained, with the result that the exportation and importation of products into and out of the United States may stop, by reason of the inability to obtain insurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the bill does not in any way authorize American ships to violate the neutrality law by going into belligerent ports or into waters regarded as combatant zones.

Mr. OVERTON. No. There is absolutely no change made by the measure in the Neutrality Act whatsoever, and it is not a step toward war. It is not a war measure insofar as the United States is concerned. It is simply a bill which is drawn in view of the situation that now exists in Europe, a situation which may become worse at any time, and it undertakes to provide insurance for our merchant marine that cannot be obtained under the existing extraordinary circumstances.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did the hearing before the committee develop any reasons as to why the insurance rates on American shipping should be increasing so rapidly in view of the fact that the Neutrality Act forbids American ships to go into the so-called danger zone?

Mr. OVERTON. No; the committee did not go into that, and I do not know that it is necessary, but the fact remains that they are increasing. If we judge the future by the past, we can very well surmise that they may at any time jump up to the point where they would be absolutely prohibitive.

Let me say further in explanation of the bill that 50 percent of the marine insurance is carried in England today. The British Government is today back of the insurance on their shipping, just as this bill contemplates that the Federal Government and the Maritime Commission shall be. Other countries are doing the same thing.

Mr. RUSSELL. England at present is at war, and, of course, that makes a very great difference.

Mr. OVERTON. That is very true. I cannot name them all, but I think that some countries which are not at war also are carrying similar insurance to this. I understand that throughout the world governments are getting back of the insurance on their shipping.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What government is getting back of insurance on its shipping?

Mr. OVERTON. I just stated to the Senator that I did not have the list, but it is my understanding that generally this policy is being pursued by different governments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the Senator another question, if he will permit me. What neutral powers, powers which are not at war, are engaging in this system of governmental insurance?

Mr. OVERTON. I will answer the Senator that I have not a list of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator know of any one neutral power that is?

Mr. OVERTON. No; I cannot name any one of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can the Senator name any neutral country which is not at war, which is engaging in this practice?

Mr. OVERTON. No. I cannot answer the Senator's question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Were hearings held on this bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Quite extensive hearings were held in the House committee, and hearings were held before the subcommittee of the Senate committee, and before the full Senate committee, but the hearings before the Senate committee were not reduced to writing.

Mr. McCARRAN. Can the Senator finally state to the Senate what authority on the subject appeared before the committee that gave warrant for his statement?

Mr. OVERTON. What statement?

Mr. McCARRAN. The statement that neutral nations are now making guaranties.

Mr. OVERTON. Representatives of the Maritime Commission so advised the Senate committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly state who it was? Does the Senator recall?

Mr. OVERTON. I do not recall their names. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can recall them. What were the names of the gentlemen who appeared before us?

Mr. BAILEY. The counsel for the Commission.

Mr. OVERTON. The counsel; and there were some others.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Something has been said about no war existing in the Pacific or in the east that requires the Government going into this business of insurance, and the question was asked, if there was no such war, why rates should be going up. Did the Senator observe in the press the report that mines were being sowed in eastern waters and that one vessel, at least, had come in contact with a mine and had been sunk? I believe the name of the vessel was the Niagara. It seems to me that the Germans have—at least someone has—sowed mines in the Pacific or in eastern waters, and vessels are now being sunk over there by coming in contact with mines.

Mr. OVERTON. I think it must be apparent to Senators that ships cannot put out to sea today without incurring much greater risks than they did a year ago, or 2 years ago, or 3 years ago. The marine risks, the wartime risks, are constantly increasing, and therefore the rates of insurance are rising. It is impossible for American vessels to obtain in the American market sufficient insurance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. OVERTON. I thought the bill was not being discussed under rule VIII with respect to the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not under the call of the calendar.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may proceed for 5 more minutes. I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to ask one or two questions. Because I was called from the Chamber, I am not sure that the Senator from Louisiana has not explained this matter, but in the event he has not, in order that the RECORD may be clear, I should like to ask him if we were not advised by the counsel for the Maritime Commission that this legislation had been urged by the insurance companies?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; and I have so stated.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to ask the Senator if we were not advised by the counsel for the Maritime Commission that the maritime labor unions which had previously objected now approve the legislation?

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. My understanding of the ruling of the Chair is that we are now proceeding under the 5-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was mistaken. The Senator from Louisiana obtained the floor when the Senator from Missouri moved to take up another bill. The call of the calendar had been completed. We are not operating under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. McCARRAN. And the bill is subject to unlimited debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is subject to unlimited debate and amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, as I was saying, the main purpose of the bill is to provide an American market for the insurance of American vessels and cargoes and their crews. The insurance market in the United States has increased considerably since the days of the World War. I think we are now insuring up to about 35 percent of American vessel-borne commerce. During the period of the World War we were insuring only about 7 to 10 percent. Some vessels are of such value that the domestic insurance companies are unable to carry the insurance, and therefore they must obtain reinsurance. They obtain reinsurance now mainly in Liverpool or elsewhere in England. A situation may arise at any time when it will be impossible to provide the necessary insurance in order to carry American commerce on American vessels. The purpose of the bill is to meet that situation. The committee has amended the bill, and the amendment will shortly be reported, providing that under its terms it shall expire by limitation on March 10, 1942. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate recognizes that it is an emergency measure, and therefore a limited time is prescribed in which maritime insurance companies may carry on this insurance.

Mr. President, if there be no further questions, I ask that the committee amendments be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, on page 1, line 10, after the word "commerce", to insert "due to extraordinary risks arising under existing war conditions"; on page 2, line 25, before the word "as", to strike out "war property" and insert "war, property"; on page 4, after line 23, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 225. In the event of disagreement as to a claim for losses or the amount thereof, on account of insurance under this subtitle, an action on the claim may be brought and maintained against the United States in the district court of the United States sitting in admiralty in the district in which the claimant or his agent may reside, or in case the claimant has no residence in the United States, in a district court in which the Attorney General of the United States shall agree to accept service. Said suits shall proceed and shall be heard and determined according to the provisions of an act entitled "An act authorizing suits agains the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1920, as amended (known as the Suits in Admiralty Act), insofar as such provisions are not inapplicable and are not contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle.

On page 6, after line 16, to insert:

SEC. 228. All the provisions of this subtitle shall expire by limitation March 10, 1942, or sooner upon a proclamation by the President that the extraordinary condition upon which it is predicated is passed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. OVERTON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERTON, Mr. JOHNSON of California, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3550.

Mr. KING. What is the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the prison-labor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after "whoever", to insert "knowingly", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever knowingly shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce in any manner or by any means whatsoever or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced or mined, wholly or in part by convicts and prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation), or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government: Provided further, That this act shall go into effect 1 year after its approval by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be very glad to have the Senator ask me any question.

Mr. KING. The District of Columbia, and I think some of the Federal organizations in the District, utilize some of the activities of the Lorton Reformatory in Virginia. That reformatory makes some commodities which are used in the District by the Federal Government, and by the District government. As I recall, it takes care of the laundry of some of the executive agencies in Washington. There is transportation in interstate commerce from the Lorton Reformatory to the District of Columbia. Would the bill cover transactions of that character?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In my opinion it would not; but if the Senator desires to offer an amendment to cover the situation, I shall be very glad to accept it. I do not apprehend that the bill would apply to governmental agencies.

Mr. KING. The other day when this bill or some other bill involving the same point was called up, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] invited attention to the fact that the license plates for some of the cars from his own State, as I recall, were manufactured in penal institutions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I dislike to discuss the subject in the absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]; but if the Senator from Ohio had thought about the subject a little further, I think he would not have made the remark he did. For instance, I do not think there is any lawyer—and I know the Senator from Ohio is a very good lawyer—who will question the proposition that when a license tag is attached to an automobile in the State of Ohio, or in the State of Missouri, or in the State of Wisconsin, or in the State of Utah, it is not in interstate commerce; and certainly it is not in interstate commerce for an automobile to move from Utah or Wisconsin or Missouri or Ohio to Washington or any other place with that license tag attached to it.

In other words, no matter what law may be passed with regard to the movement in interstate commerce of a suit of clothes, if I buy a suit of clothes in Missouri, as I usually do, and wear it myself from St. Louis to Washington, that suit of clothes is not moving in interstate commerce, because no transaction of commerce is involved in it. If I buy it in St. Louis and wear it myself, it is not in interstate commerce. If I get a license tag in Missouri, even though it may be manufactured by convict labor, and drive my car from St. Louis to Washington, it certainly is not in interstate commerce; and I am certain the Senator from Utah will agree with that proposition.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, which I think is acceptable to the Senator from Missouri. It reads as follows:

On page 2, line 10, add the following:

"Or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State or political subdivision thereof, to parts for the repair of farm machinery, or to agricultural commodities."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have had an opportunity of examining the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad indeed to accept it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I offer the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Government" on page 2, line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State or political subdivision thereof, to parts for the repair of farm machinery, or to agricultural commodities.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not a member of the committee which reported the bill, but, so far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 10, after the word "Government", it is proposed to insert the following:

and nothing herein shall apply to repair parts for farm machinery.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment, although I believe it is covered by the one of the Senator from Louisiana which has just been adopted. If the Senator from Wisconsin desires to insist on the amendment, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR HARRY S. TRUMAN

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on the 15th day of June the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] spoke at a meeting at Sedalia, Mo., in behalf of our colleague the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who is a candidate for reelection. The remarks of the Senator from Washington have heretofore been placed in the RECORD by the majority floor leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Some of us who have known the Senator from Missouri rather intimately throughout the years of his service in this body were delighted to learn the reports of the success of that meeting at Sedalia—a meeting which was in the nature of a demonstration in behalf of the junior Senator from Missouri. We who have known him intimately and well during his service in this body have come to know him to be not only an able lawyer and an industrious public servant but also a man of honor and integrity.

In that regard it seems to me to be desirable at this time to place in the RECORD—and I take pleasure personally in placing in the RECORD—certain testimonials and tributes which have appeared in the newspapers of the home State of the junior Senator from Missouri.

The first which I hold in my hand is under date of May 26, 1930, and relates to the service of the junior Senator from Missouri as presiding judge of the county court. The article itself will explain its connection with these remarks. I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Kansas City Times of May 26, 1930]

THE RECORD OF JUDGE TRUMAN

It should be a satisfaction to the people of Jackson County that Judge HARRY S. TRUMAN, presiding judge of the county court, has filed for renomination. When a public official makes a good record he has a particular claim on the support of his constituents, while his constituents, in turn, have in him the assurance they like to have in supporting a candidate.

Judge TRUMAN has been much more than a routine official. He is enthusiastically interested in county affairs. He has contributed leadership to an efficient county administration. He worked to bring in the outside supervising engineers for the $6,000,000 road bond issue, who are making such a fine record in the construction of the county highway system. He initiated and has considerably advanced the interesting and important regional plan proposed for the six counties about Greater Kansas City and has enlisted real cooperation from the other counties. His important achievements certainly deserve the reward of renomination.

Mr. HATCH. The second article appeared in the Kansas City Times of October 17, 1930. It also is an article referring to the record of Judge TRUMAN as county judge. I ask that it appear in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Kansas City Times of October 17, 1930]

THE SERVICE OF JUDGE TRUMAN

Kansas City and Jackson County are unusually fortunate in this year's nominees for presiding judge of the county court. Both HARRY S. TRUMAN and Herman W. Ritterhoff are men of outstanding character and ability. Judge TRUMAN is running for reelection.

He has given the country an able, honest, and efficient administration. Mr. Ritterhoff has had a notable business career, is a citizen of genuine public spirit, is keenly interested in county affairs and, if elected, could be depended upon to render effective service.

While the county is thus assured of a representative, competent and dependable presiding judge for the next term, Judge TRUMAN, we believe, should be reelected on his record, especially in the efficient and economical expenditure of the six and one-half million dollars' road bonds. It was Judge TRUMAN who proposed the plan that was adopted for the expenditure of this money under the supervision of the bipartisan board of engineers, made up of Col. E. M. Stayton and N. T. Veatch. The county court under his leadership has given wholehearted support to the engineers that was necessary to the success of the plan.

Judge TRUMAN has been sensible of handicaps due to the form of county government under which he has operated. He has been outspoken in favor of a simplification of the government in order to avoid duplication of service, division of authority, and the employment of unnecessary numbers in county work. He is in favor of consolidating city and county assessment and tax collection.

Furthermore, Judge Truman initiated and has carried forward the plan for regional planning in the six counties in contact with or adjacent to greater Kansas City. This plan is one of great importance. It means much for the future development of a large metropolitan and semimetropolitan area. It involves conservation of land values, the protection of residential areas, and the promotion of order and attractiveness, together with the best possible relation of connecting highways and transportation facilities. His leadership made him the choice of the six counties for chairman of the regional association.

Efficient, unselfish public service is not so common that it should be dispensed with merely for partisan reasons. The faithful and competent public servant should be retained in office. Such retention is not only a deserved reward, but the reward, when given, is stimulating to good public service generally.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on Wednesday, August 8, 1934, there appeared in the Kansas City Star an editorial entitled "Judge TRUMAN Wins," which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Kansas City Star of August 8, 1934]

JUDGE TRUMAN WINS

The local Democratic machine, with its State alliance, once more has demonstrated its strength in the nomination of Judge HARRY S. TRUMAN for United States Senator. The St. Louis organization was unable to overcome the tremendous vote rolled up in Jackson County with the out-State support.

There were other factors, of course. The attractive personality of Judge TRUMAN was a real asset, and there was weight to the feeling that it would be unfair that the eastern end of the State should have both United States Senators.

While Judge TRUMAN is not well known throughout the State, he is favorably known in Kansas City. As presiding judge of the county court he has made a good record. Jackson County has found him a capable and honest public official.

In the second consideration of location lies Judge TRUMAN'S great opportunity for service in the event of his election. The activities of the Federal Government at this time are on an unprecedented scale. Where these activities shall be centered depends in large measure on the alertness and energy of the congressional delegations.

Kansas City and the western part of Missouri have not received the attention their importance deserved. They have been treated as a stepchild by the administration and have virtually been forgotten. Should Judge TRUMAN be elected it would be up to him to be constantly on his toes to see that western Missouri gets more consideration in Washington than it has in the past—consideration of vital importance to this region.

Mr. HATCH. On Wednesday, November 7, 1934, there appeared in the Kansas City Star a very fine testimonial in behalf of the junior Senator from Missouri, which I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Kansas City Star of November 7, 1934]

JUDGE TRUMAN'S FINE SHOWING

Judge HARRY S. TRUMAN has been made the Democratic Senator from Missouri by the overwhelming majority vote of the State. The sentiment for Judge TRUMAN was as general as it was positive practically throughout Missouri.

The sweeping endorsement that has been accorded Judge TRUMAN was a reflection on his pleasing record as presiding judge of the Jackson County court. It was a response as well to his engaging personality and to his ready capacity to make and hold immense numbers of friends.

Judge TRUMAN was known in Kansas City, in the rest of Jackson County, and in Missouri as a whole as a man of unimpeachable character and integrity. There was confidence in the man as in the assurances he gave of a willingness to cooperate with the administration in Washington.

With Judge TRUMAN in the Senate, Missouri can expect that its interests will be safeguarded and advanced from a national standpoint. Kansas City and the western part of the State particularly can be assured of the zealous and conscientious representation to which they are entitled in the upper branch of Congress.

J. ROSS EAKIN—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING REPORT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on the desk lies a resolution, Senate Resolution 281, extending the time for the making of a report on the investigation of J. Ross Eakin as superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Under the original resolution, a subcommittee was appointed to conduct the investigation. The work of the subcommittee has been completed only in part. I do not know when adjournment is going to come. I know it is necessary for the subcommittee to conduct some additional investigations in connection with the original resolution. That resolution requires the subcommittee to report at this session of the Congress.

As I said, I do not know when the session will end, but, in order that there may be no mistake about the authority of the subcommittee, the resolution on the table merely extends until the next session of the Congress the time for making the report.

I have conferred with the majority floor leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and with the minority floor leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], both of whom are willing to have the resolution considered. I have also conferred with the author of the resolution, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who also agrees that the time should be extended.

I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken from the table and immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator identify the resolution by number?

Mr. HATCH. It is Senate Resolution 281.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 281. Is there objection?

Mr. MCNARY. What is the order number?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is on the table, and has no order number.

Mr. HATCH. It is lying on the table. It is the one about which I spoke to the Senator from Oregon. It extends until the next session the time within which the subcommittee of the Public Lands Committee may report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 281) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the findings and recommendations of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with respect to the examination of certain facts concerning J. Ross Eakin, authorized to be made by Senate Resolution 131, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to July 18, 1939, may be made at any time during the first session of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39 to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, agreed to the still further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TARVER, Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. HARE,

Mr. ENGEL, and Mr. KEEFE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion in connection with Senate bill 3982, relating to construction at Army posts, which passed yesterday. Since that time the House has passed a similar bill, House bill 9896, which has been received today. I ask that the vote by which the Senate bill was passed be reconsidered, that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that the vote by which the Senate bill 3982 was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the Senate now take up for consideration House bill 9896. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which Senate bill 3982 was passed is reconsidered, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McNARY. Are the bills identical or similar?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are identical. They passed almost simultaneously.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator said they were similar bills.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I meant identical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request that the Senate consider the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9896) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPEDITION OF NAVAL SHIPBUILDING—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WALSH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matters inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "similar equipment, with or without advertising or competitive bidding upon determination that the price is fair and reasonable, and deliveries of material under all orders placed pursuant to the authority of this section and all other naval contracts or orders and all Army contracts and orders shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over all deliveries for private account or for export: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every three months to the Congress the contracts entered into under the authority of this section: Provided further, That contracts negotiated pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be contracts for the purchase of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market within the meaning of section 9 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45): Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall relieve a bidder or contractor of the obligation to furnish the bonds under the requirements of the Act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793; 40 U. S. C. 270 (a) to (d)): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under the authority granted by this subsection to negotiate contracts; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under the authority of this subsection, or any War Department contract entered into in the form of cost-plus-a-fixed-fee, shall not exceed 7 per centum of the estimated cost of the contract (exclusive of the fee as determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be).

"(b) After the date of approval of this Act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the Act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

"(1) to pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 8 per centum (in lieu of the 10 per centum and 12 per centum specified in such section 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year;

"(2) that any profit in excess of 8.7 per centum of the cost of performing such contracts except prime contracts made on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis as are completed by the contracting party within the income taxable year shall be considered to be profit in excess of 8 per centum of the total prices of such contracts; and

"(a) that he will make no subcontract which is within the scope of such section 3, unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 4. In the case of every contract or subcontract for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or any portion thereof which is entered into (whether before or after the date of approval of this Act), the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, after agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, shall certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to (a) the necessity and cost of special additional equipment and facilities acquired to facilitate, during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the completion of such naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or portion thereof in private plants and (b) the percentage of cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be charged against such contract or subcontract. For all purposes of section 3 of the Act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended, such certification shall be subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe, but shall be binding upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, unless within five days after receipt of such certification, he make formal objection thereto to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War as the case may be. The part of such cost chargeable against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification, shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be considered to be a reduction of the contract price of the contract or subcontract. The amount charged against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be applied against and reduce the cost or other basis of such special additional equipment and facilities as of the date of installation thereof: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall report to the Congress, every three months, the cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be borne by the Government under each contract.";

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard and their field services shall be eight hours a day or forty hours per week during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the head of the Department concerned may prescribe, and where additional employees cannot be obtained to meet the exigencies of the situation, these hours may be exceeded: Provided further, That compensation for employment in excess of forty hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate shall be paid only to monthly, per diem, hourly, and piece-work employees, whose wages are set by the Act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat. 587), as amended or modified; and also to professional and subprofessional employees and to blue printers, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, supervisory planners and estimators, and supervisory progressmen, and assistants to shop and plant superintendents of the C. A. F. service, as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; U. S. C. 5, ch. 13), as amended: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for one day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries: Provided further, That the President is authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, for the War and Navy Departments and for the Coast Guard and their field services, during the period of the national emergency declared by him on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482; U. S. C. 5, 26 (a)), if in his judgment such course is necessary in the interest of national defense, and any regulations issued pursuant to the Act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 161; U. S. C. Supp. V, title 5, sec. 29 (a)), may be modified accordingly: And provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe regulations to establish such uniformity among the War and Navy Departments and the Coast Guard and their field services in regard to hours of work and compensation for overtime of their civilian employees as he may deem necessary in the interest of national defense.

"(b) During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the law prohibiting more than eight hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the Act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual naval project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this Act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the Native and Alien Schedules of Wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this Act.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary of the Navy finds it impossible to make contracts or obtain facilities to effectuate the purposes of this Act in the procurement or construction of items authorized in connection with national defense he is hereby authorized to provide out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for such purposes, the necessary buildings, facilities, utilities and appurtenances thereto on government-owned land or elsewhere, and to operate them, either by means of Government personnel or otherwise: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the compensation to the owner of such plant or facility: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress, every three months, the contracts entered into under the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment in section (b), insert the following:

"(b) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as the case may be are hereby requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the respective Chairman of the Committees on Military Affairs and the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of each contract, order, or agreement covering exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exchanged for other military or naval equipment, munitions or supplies, and a copy of each contract, order or agreement shall be furnished regarding any other disposition of military or naval equipment, munitions and supplies by which the title passes, either de jure or de facto, from the United States, or by which delivery of material thereunder is deferred, where the original cost of such military or naval equipment, munitions or supplies exceeded or exceeds $2,000. The copies of each contract, order or agreement herein referred to shall be transmitted to the respective Chairmen of the Committees not later than twenty-four hours after such contract, order or agreement is made, and the Chairman of each Committee shall consider such contracts, orders or agreements confidential unless a majority of the members of his Committee shall direct the particular transaction to be made public."

And the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID I. WALSH,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL VINSON,
LEONARD W. SCHUETZ,
MELVIN J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about this conference report. The bill relates to the one discussed in the Senate at length yesterday. The House has receded on practically all the Senate amendments. Two changes have been made, one relating to the profits of shipbuilders and airplane manufacturers. The percentage of profit has been increased from 7 to 8 percent in the case of contracts made on competitive bidding. The rate of 7 percent fixed in the Senate bill on negotiated contracts remains. The House felt that there should be a difference in favor of the contractor in the case of competitive contracts, and the Senate yielded to that position taken by the House conferees.

The labor provisions are not yet satisfactory to me or to the other conferees of the Senate. The Senate has insisted upon all Government employees being paid for overtime work, whether per diem or per annum employees. This now has been modified as a result of the House action. It may be necessary later, because of possible injustices, to request some changes in the laws affecting employees in private and Government plants engaged in Government work, and I shall take an early opportunity to do so if it appears necessary. The conferees of the Senate felt that this bill should not be delayed. Important as this amendment was, it was not of such immediate urgency as to permit holding up the conference report, which, as Senators know, seeks to advance the speeding of the building of naval vessels and airplanes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

STRENGTHENING OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 9850, to expedite the strengthening of the national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS REAL PROPERTY

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last call of the calendar before today the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a measure, and because an absent Senator called my attention to it and said he would like to be present when it was considered, my recollection is that I interposed an objection to immediate consideration. I discover that the bill is very satisfactory. It merely provides for the sale of certain property acquired by Federal agencies. It is Calendar No. 1423, House bill 7233. I ask that it be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7233) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies, and for other purposes."

The amendments heretofore agreed to were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NAVY VESSELS SCRAPPED IN 1922

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, several weeks ago the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] requested that I obtain definite, detailed figures in reference to naval vessels scrapped following the naval disarmament conference. I have the figures, and ask that they be inserted in the RECORD of the proceedings today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in that list are the American vessels and foreign vessels all included?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

There being no objection, the figures were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM PRESENTED BY SENATOR WALSH CONTAINING INFORMATION FROM THE NAVY DEPARTMENT WITH RESPECT TO NAVAL VESSELS SCRAPPED UNDER THE NAVAL ARMAMENT LIMITATION TREATY OF 1922

TRAVEL IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is on the calendar House bill 6884, to encourage travel in the United States. It was reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] on March 20 last. It is intended to continue the Travel Bureau now in existence in the Department of the Interior, the National Park Service.

This is only an authorization; it is not an appropriation. Of course, its continuance would depend on whether the Committee on Appropriations made the necessary appropriation.

The bill is supported by many associations in the United States, the American Hotel Association, the American Railway Association, the National Bus Traffic Association, the Transport Association by Air, and others. It is estimated that it will be instrumental in adding $150,000,000 a year to the income of the American people.

It is not intended that the bill shall induce people to travel who would not otherwise be inclined to, but it is intended to induce those who are travel-minded to travel in the United States.

Nearly every government in the world maintains a travel bureau in order to induce Americans, who are the greatest travelers in the world, to travel in those countries. Because of that situation this year, 1940, has been designated in the United States as "Travel Year." The Department of the Interior is undertaking, through its National Park Service and various other agencies to help develop travel in this country, and induce people from other countries to travel in the United States, and thereby not only add to our income but to bring other benefits to this country.

In that connection I may say that the travel trade has been $500,000,000 a year against the United States, because of our inclination to travel in all parts of the world, and that, of course, drains considerably from the income and resources of our country. In all estimates of income travel expenses in various countries are taken as important.

I ask that we may take the bill up for consideration.

Mr. McNARY. This is a House bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a House bill.

Mr. McNARY. And received the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have received many letters urging its early and favorable consideration. It is an authorization bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The purpose is to promote travel in the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "travel", to insert "to and", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, through the National Park Service, to encourage, promote, and develop travel to and within the United States, its Territories and possessions, providing such activities do not compete with the activities of private agencies; and to administer all existing travel promotion functions of the Department of the Interior through such Service.

SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of this act, the Secretary is authorized to cooperate with public and private tourist, travel, and other agencies in the display of exhibits, and in the collection, publication, and dissemination of information with respect to places of interest, routes, transportation facilities, accommodations, and such other matters as he deems advisable and advantageous for the purpose of encouraging, promoting, or developing such travel. Nothing in this act shall prohibit the preparation of graphic materials in foreign languages, designed to call attention to the attractions and places of interest in the United States and to encourage the use of American registered ships and planes. The existing facilities of the United States Government in foreign countries are hereby authorized to assist in the distribution of this material. The Secretary may enter into contracts with private publishers for such printing and binding as he may deem advisable in carrying out the purposes of this act. The Secretary is also authorized to make charges for any publications made available to the public pursuant to this act; and any proceeds from the sale of publications produced by the expenditure of contributed funds shall continue to be available for printing and binding as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to create an advisory committee to consist of a representative from each of the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the United States Maritime Commission, as may be designated by such Departments or agencies, respectively, and such additional members, representatives of the various sections of the Nation, including transportation and accommodations agencies, not to exceed six members, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to serve at his pleasure. Meetings of the committee shall be held at the request of the Secretary for the purpose of making recommendations concerning the promotion of tourist travel under the provisions of this act. The members of the committee shall receive no compensation for their services as members, but shall be entitled to reimbursement for such necessary travel and other expenses in connection with their attendance at committee meetings as may be authorized or approved by the Secretary.

SEC. 4. In the performance of his functions and duties under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized—

(a) To prescribe, amend, and repeal such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary, and to accept contributions for carrying out the purposes of this act; and

(b) To employ without regard to the civil-service laws, but subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, one special assistant and not to exceed five artists and illustrators.

SEC. 5. There is authorized to be appropriated annually not to exceed the sum of $100,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am interested in knowing how the enactment of this measure without any authorization of money would encourage travel in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is an authorization, not an appropriation. Unless it is followed by an appropriation, which, of course, would have to come through the Committee on Appropriations, it would be of no effect, but, as frequently happens, we have to authorize an expenditure before it can be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the amount to be appropriated?

Mr. BARKLEY. One hundred thousand dollars a year is the amount. The benefits to be derived by the activities of the Travel Bureau in the Department are estimated by those who are in a position to know to add $150,000,000 of income in the United States if they are enabled to induce those who travel in the world to come here instead of going to other places. The Senator from North Carolina himself is a great traveler.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am merely interested in knowing how it would work.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in behalf of the bill, I wish to say that the Senator from Kentucky is very modest in his estimate of what the results would be to the people of this country. Not only the money of travelers who live in the United States would be spent here, but there are those traveling from South American republics who have to go somewhere, and they cannot go to Europe.

This is the best we can do at this juncture to give business not only to the hotels in the United States, which are all behind the proposal, but to the public generally. It is a great scheme, and the small amount asked is infinitesimal when compared with what some other governments spend. The money spent in European countries from America alone is over $500,000,000. I think the amount provided is very small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REFUNDS OF TAXES

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Senate bill 963, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, providing for the refund of taxes under the act commonly known as the Bankhead Cotton Act. The Senate has on a previous occasion passed this bill, but it failed of passage in the House.

In order that all the facts and equities in this claim may be established, I ask that the bill be made the unfinished business, and I shall offer a resolution to refer the matter to the Court of Claims under the statute which provides for the reference of such cases, in order that the Court of Claims may adjudicate the rights of the parties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator asked that it be made the unfinished business. He wants it taken up for consideration, does he not?

Mr. RUSSELL. I want it considered, and then I wish to offer a resolution to refer it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not see how any one could object to the matter being referred to the Court of Claims. Such action has the approval of the committee.

I send the resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 286), as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 963) providing for the refund of taxes collected under public law numbered 169, Seventy-third Congress, known as the Bankhead Act, now pending in the Senate, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims pursuant to the provisions of section 151 of the act entitled "An Act to Codify, Revise, and Amend the Laws Relating to the Treasury," approved March 3, 1911; and such court shall proceed with such bill in accordance with the provisions of such section 151 and shall report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO STATES WITH RESPECT TO CONSERVATION LANDS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1717, Calendar No. 1712. It is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. HARRISON]. The purpose of the bill is to revise the method of determining the payments to be made by the United States to the several States with respect to conservation lands subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the bill.

Mr. BILBO. I will state to the Senator from Oregon that I have arranged with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to enter a motion to reconsider. If the bill is considered and passed the Senator will enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, so there will be an opportunity furnished to reconsider that action.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill is one of very great importance. It provides, as I understand, that the Federal Government shall make compensation to counties or political subdivisions in which the greater part of the lands are acquired by the Federal Government to the disadvantage of the communities and to the disadvantage of their school districts.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator has stated the facts correctly. Practically all the States of the Union are interested in this proposed legislation because they are affected by it. The Federal Government in its efforts to carry on its reforestation and conservation and farm tenancy has gone in with the States and bought up great bodies of land and practically bankrupted the school districts. There is one district in my State in which the Government has bought 90 percent of the land and bankrupted the schools. I should like to see the bill passed in the interest of the people who are being oppressed as the result of the Government's encroachment on their tax resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, recently—I am speaking wholly from memory—I have received some protests against the enactment of this bill. I am not quite conversant with the language of the protests, but at this late hour I think I shall have to object, so that I may have an opportunity to consider the data I have received in opposition to the bill. I shall be glad to have the Senator bring it up for consideration or debate some time after the 1st of July after we shall reconvene. I do not want to be in the attitude of causing a great delay. I shall be fair to the Senator and look into the matter.

Mr. BILBO. I appreciate the kindness of the Senator from Oregon. I am afraid the Senator did not hear me.

I had arranged with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to enter a motion to reconsider, which would give him all the time necessary to investigate the matter, and then if necessary, action could be had on that motion.

Mr. McNARY. That form of procedure does not appeal to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous consent request, and I ask to have the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

I ask unanimous consent to recur to House bill 9575, which is No. 1951 on the calendar, to amend the Federal Aid Act approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

The amendments have been agreed to, but there are a couple of other amendments to be offered, and I should like to have the bill considered and concluded now if it is agreeable to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no objection, assuming that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is included in the bill.

Mr. McNARY. What is the order number?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is Calendar No. 1951.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Among the amendments is there an amendment with reference to the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; there is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. McCARRAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Some time ago I inquired whether or not the call of the calendar had been concluded, and whether or not we were thereafter circumscribed by the same procedure as in the call of the calendar. I was advised by the then Presiding Officer that the calendar had been concluded and that the bill then pending was brought up on motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Has something transpired since that time by which we have reverted to the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only thing that has transpired, the Chair will say in answer to the Senator from Nevada, is that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has requested unanimous consent to take up this particular measure, which is calendar No. 1951.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am referring to the Federal Aid Highway Act.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, I have no objection to that. I am very much in favor of it. But I wanted to know whether or not we had returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We have not.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9575) to amend the Federal Aid Act approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask for action on the amendment previously offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the appropriate place in the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. The term "highway" as defined by the Federal Highway Act shall not be deemed to include any bridges hereafter to be constructed if located within 10 miles of an existing toll bridge, unless a reasonable offer is made to acquire the facilities of such toll bridge and such offer has not been accepted, and unless a finding as to the reasonableness of said offer, the failure of acceptance, and the percentage of amortization of such toll bridge has been made after public hearing by the Federal Works Administrator: Provided, That such finding by the Federal Works Administrator shall not be subject to review.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the matter which was under consideration by the committee. The amendment has been modified by the Senator from Texas to take into consideration whether or not owners of the present toll bridges have amortized their expenses, and I think it removes the objection that was made in committee. At least I shall be glad to take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have an amendment on the desk which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 3, after the word "pledged", it is proposed to insert "or that the constitution of the State provides that all of such proceeds shall be used for highway purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The amendment affects grants of Federal-aid money for State highways. There already is a provision in reference to this matter in the bill, and the amendment is in addition to that provision. It begins with the conjunction "or" and provides that in addition to the other provisions which are contained in the bill, or if a State has in its constitution a provision that all highway money collected by the State shall be expended for highway purposes, then the grants are possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, on two occasions Calendar No. 1617, House bill 6618, has been passed over, once on the objection of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and on another occasion on objection registered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. In both cases the Senators were under a misapprehension as to the nature of the bill.

The bill deals exclusively with trade-marks. It was the subject of 3 years of rather intensive study by the Patents Committee of the House. It was unanimously reported by that committee and passed in the House without any opposition whatever, as I recall. It was given serious consideration by the Patents Committee of the Senate, reported unanimously, and has been on the calendar for several weeks.

I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the bill, because he made the report on it. It is a codification of 17 different statutes dealing with trade-marks. I think lawyers in this body will realize the necessity for getting rid of some of the obscurities and uncertainties which have arisen out of such a large number of statutes all dealing with one subject. The bill is in harmony with the theory so long advanced by the American Bar Association, looking to the codification of laws.

When the bill came before the Senate Committee on Patents two major questions remained, one dealing with assignment, and the other with cancelation. Those questions were ironed out. I think it is the general opinion of all those who appeared before the committee that we have done the best job it was possible to do. The bill is worthwhile. It is a rather lengthy bill, but it certainly received most serious consideration. There was no objection from any member of the Patents Committee, and I am asking now that the bill be considered. The House has given it much attention over the years, and the able Members of the House who worked on it felt, as we in the Patents Committee felt, that it should be enacted. Therefore I am asking for its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington for the present consideration of House bill 6618?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am attracted by the statement of the able Senator that on a former occasion two Senators objected to the consideration of the bill. Have those objections been removed?

Mr. BONE. Objection was first register by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who advised me that he thought it was a copyright bill. The same idea was in the mind of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I would not even think of bringing a copyright bill to the Senate without having a long discussion of it, because every industry in the country would be interested, and it would be an atrocity to put a bill of that kind through at this time, because of the enormous field it would cover. This bill deals exclusively with trade-marks. I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], who has done much work on the bill, explain it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have immense confidence in the ability of the Senator from Washington and of the able Senator from Connecticut. However, I am reminded of the remark made by the Senator, who stated that on a former occasion two Members of the Senate objected.

Mr. BONE. They did; and they have since advised me that they completely misunderstood the nature of the bill. They thought it dealt with copyrights. It deals only with trade-marks and merely attempts to clarify existing law by putting 17 statutes into one.

Mr. McNARY. All I desired was assurance as to the objections.

Mr. BONE. Both Senators have assured me that they entirely misunderstood the purpose of the bill and asked that it go over only on that account.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered one and two.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Any moneys accruing for projects in New Mexico and appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1) the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico, and (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as adequately to protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, and, after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine: Provided, That if the said project shall be determined by the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Secretary of the Interior as being infeasible, or if any project presented in any State shall be declared to be infeasible, then such funds shall be equitably divided by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the necessity for the development of the projects in the various States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

KEY PITTMAN,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
KNUTE HILL,
CHARLES HAWKS, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senate receded on its amendments 1 and 2. Those amendments substituted the word "equally" for "equitably." The Senate receded from amendment numbered 3, with an amendment, which provides that if the project is determined not to be feasible, then the funds shall be divided equitably.

Mr. McCARRAN. That applies to the New Mexico amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Was the labor amendment in conference?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was not in conference. It was adopted by the House.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was of the opinion that the Senator from Washington had surrendered the floor and recognized the Senator from Nevada for the purpose of presenting a privileged matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington had not surrendered the floor. He was engaged in colloquy.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Washington to let the conference report be adopted.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I dislike to take up the time of the Senate at this hour, but I shall wish to discuss the conference report, probably at length.

Mr. BONE. May we not dispose of the trade-mark bill which is now pending?

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall not interrupt the Senator. I shall wait until he is through, and then shall move the adoption of the conference report.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 6618.

Mr. BONE. Let me say one word to my brethren before I yield the floor to the Senator from Connecticut.

In addition to going through the usual orthodoxies, when we had the trade-mark bill before the Patent Committee we invited members of the Patent Committee of the House to sit with us. We almost had a conference on the bill. What few amendments we suggested were adopted with House Members giving us whatever assistance they could. It was a rather unusual procedure, but I thought it might interest Senators.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I know of no objection to the bill from any Senator. The bill has been on the calendar for several weeks. The report demonstrates conclusively and clearly the purposes of the bill and the changes made from the House bill. If there be any questions with reference to this particular matter, I shall be very happy to answer them. If not, I suggest that the question be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington for the present consideration of House bill 6618?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6618) to provide for the registration of trademarks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents, with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Patents was, under the heading "Title I—The Principal Register", in section 1, on page 1, line 8, after "statement", to strike out "specifying" and insert "to the effect that the applicant believes himhelf, or the firm, corporation, or association in whose behalf he makes the application, to be the owner of the trademark sought to be registered, and that no other person, firm, corporation, or association, to the best of the applicant's knowledge and belief, has the right to use such trade-mark in the United States either in the identical form or in such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive, and specifying", so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. Trade-marks used in commerce may be registered in the following manner:

(a) By filing in the Patent Office—

(1) a written application, verified by the applicant, including a statement to the effect that the applicant believes himself, or the firm, corporation, or association in whose behalf he makes the application, to be the owner of the trade-mark sought to be registered, and that no other person, firm, corporation, or association, to the best of the applicant's knowledge and belief, has the right to use such trade-mark in the United States either in the identical form or in such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive, and specifying the date of first use of the mark, and the goods or services in connection with which it is used, in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner;

(2) a drawing of the mark; and

(3) such number of specimens or facsimiles of the mark as actually used as may be required by the Commissioner.

(b) By paying into the Patent Office the filing fee.

(c) By complying with such rules or regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner.

(d) If the applicant is not domiciled in the United States he shall designate by a written document filed in the Patent Office the name and address of some person resident in the United States on whom may be served notices or process in proceedings affecting the mark. Such notices or process may be served upon the person so designated by leaving a copy thereof at the last address so filed. If the person so designated cannot be found at the address given in the designation, such notice or process may be served upon the Commissioner.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I understand we are now on the calendar. I desire to address myself to a matter which has come to my attention, having transpired yesterday——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, have I the floor?

Mr. BONE. I understood that the Senator from Connecticut had the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to know whether or not I have the floor. I should like to address the Senate for a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 6618 is before the Senate for consideration. The first committee amendment was stated by the clerk. The Senator from Nevada sought recognition by the Chair and was recognized. He now has the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it will take only a moment to get this bill out of the way. I hope the Senator will be generous and let us get it out of the way.

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot ask the Chair to recognize me immediately after getting this matter out of the way, whatever it is.

Mr. KING. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. GERRY. I should like to ask the number of the bill.

Mr. BONE. It is Calendar No. 1617, House bill 6618.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask for the invocation of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

CLINTON M. HESTER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot yield at this moment. I shall not detain the Senate very long. I rise only to address myself to an item which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, in which a joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 283, was introduced by the able leader of the majority authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. President, I do not rise to express myself adversely to the suggested nominee.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for the purpose of moving the adoption of the conference report I presented?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, just a moment.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think I have the floor. I ask the Senator from New Mexico not to ask me to yield at this moment, until I can dispose of this matter.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Has the report of the conference committee been adopted?

Mr. PITTMAN. It has not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, reverting now to the subject-matter to which I desire to address myself, there are some men who are great by reason of their achievements; there are some men who are born great; but a man who, growing out of obscurity, works himself up to a position of greatness, should never be forgotten.

When the Senate refused to adopt my resolution against Reorganization Order No. IV, I realized that very serious changes would be brought about in the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I never realized how serious the changes would be until my attention was drawn to the fact that the man who had been Administrator from the very initial periods of the act until the present time was about to resign.

Administrator Hester was born and reared in a western State. He came to Washington, and worked his way for twenty-odd years through the various Departments here.

When the author of the Civil Aeronautics Act, the junior Senator from Nevada, was writing the act, calling to his aid everyone in civil aeronautics who might assist him in writing the act, no less a personage than the President of the United States and his son, who was then his secretary in the Executive Office, asked me to call to my assistance Mr. Hester, who was later appointed Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

I did that. Mr. Hester and I did not agree on many phases of the act. Mr. Hester and I have not agreed on many phases of the administration of the act; but I rise in the Senate today to say that in those things in which Mr.

Hester was not experienced he had the courage and the foresight to call to his assistance men who had the necessary experience and ability.

I was advised by Mr. Hester just a few days ago that he was going to resign. I shall not state more than his blunt statement to me that he was going to resign. I expressed my regret that he should resign. Here in the Senate, and publicly, I now want to express my regret that Mr. Hester, the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority during all of its existence, should now resign.

It is a bad situation. It is so sad that those of us who have given our whole thought and existence to this legislation for the past 5 years regret it from the bottom of our hearts.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMAN. I desire to say that I concur in what the able Senator from Nevada has to say.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am grateful to the Senator from Missouri, because the Senator from Missouri was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce which held three different hearings, if I correctly recall, and rendered three different very comprehensive reports.

Mr. President, it is unfortunate that the Nation should lose the services of men like Mr. Hester. I understand that he is to return to private life. I only say that the gain of private life is the loss of public life. In other words, Mr. Hester has served, and served splendidly. He has rendered a record that no one will excel, because it has been 100 percent. I do not envy the man who will take his place, because that man cannot exceed the record of Mr. Hester.

When one realizes that 86,000,000 plane-miles have been flown in a year, and some 215,000,000 passenger-miles have been flown in a year, over continental America and over extracontinental America, without a single fatality, and then compare that record with the ground record, the record of those who travel by automobile, by train, and by other surface facilities, and realizes what has been accomplished by a single individual with a single purpose in mind—namely, safety in the air—then we will realize that out of this confusion, out of the unhappy situation which grew out of Executive Order No. IV, the Nation is about to lose a most efficient servant.

In God's name, where will we stop? In the name of justice and fair play, in the name of national welfare, where will we stop when men resign who have rendered wonderful service, when men resign and hold back because of the honor and the integrity within their breasts, the reasons for their resignation, or, if they disclose the reasons, tell them in confidence?

I only regret that Hester is about to pass out of the Civil Aeronautics Agency; that a great man, a good man, a man who would meet you toe to toe, face to face, eye to eye, and argue a question with you, is about to retire from the public service.

I say again that day after day and time after time we disagreed, but our disagreements were honorable disagreements, our disagreements were very much worth while, our disagreements, I hope, led to some thought in his mind which contributed to his great record, and I know that our disagreements gave me fruit and food for thought.

When Mr. Hester goes out of the public service, the Nation will lose a great man. I do not know who is to succeed him, and I make no expression. I only hope that the man who will succeed him will be equal to him in competency and that his record may be equal.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6618) to provide for the registration of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, what is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment.

Mr. GERRY. To what bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 6618, Calendar No. 1617.

Mr. GERRY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment. The bill is before the Senate for consideration, having previously been taken up by the Senate, and an objection to a committee amendment is not sufficient. It must be voted up or voted down.

The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee, on page 1, line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Use by related companies", on page 5, line 13, after the word "the", to insert "registered mark or the", and in line 20, after the word "registration" and the period, to insert "Such mark shall not be used in such manner as to deceive the public.", so as to read:

SEC. 5. Where the registered mark or the mark sought to be registered is or may be used by subsidiary or related companies, or by the members of an association, such use shall be deemed exclusive in the holding, parent, or related company or in the association; and use of registered marks by companies subsidiary or related to the registrant or by the members of an association, shall not affect the validity of such mark or of its registration. Such mark shall not be used in such manner as to deceive the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Renewal", on page 9, after line 24, to insert:

If the applicant for renewal is not domiciled in the United States, he shall designate by a written document filed in the Patent Office the name and address of some person resident in the United States on whom may be served notices or process in proceedings affecting the mark, in the same way as provided in subsection (d) of section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Assignment", on page 10, line 8, after the word "assignable", to strike out "either with or without the goodwill of the business" and insert "upon such terms and conditions as the parties may agree", so as to read:

SEC. 10. A registered mark or a mark for which application has been filed shall be assignable upon such terms and conditions as the parties may agree. Assignments shall be by instruments in writing duly executed. Acknowledgment shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of the assignment and when recorded in the Patent Office the record shall be prima facie evidence of execution. An assignment shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, unless it is recorded in the Patent Office within 3 months from the date thereof or prior to such subsequent purchase. The Commissioner shall keep a record of assignments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 19, to insert:

If the assignee is not domiciled in the United States, he shall designate by a written document filed in the Patent Office the name and address of some person resident in the United States on whom may be served notice or process in proceedings affecting the mark, in the same way as provided in subsection (d) of section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Opposition", on page 11, line 13, after the word "many", to insert "upon payment of the required fee", so as to read:

SEC. 13. Any person who would be damaged by the registration of a mark may, upon payment of the required fee, file a verified notice of opposition in the Patent Office stating the grounds therefor within 30 days after the publication in the Official Gazette of the mark sought to be registered. For good cause shown, the time for filing notice of opposition may be extended by the Commissioner. An unverified opposition may be filed by a duly authorized attorney, but such opposition shall be null and void unless verified by the opposer within a reasonable time after such filing to be fixed by the Commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Cancelation", on page 12, line 11, after the word "mark", to insert "as theretofore used", so as to read:

SEC. 15. After the period for the cancelation of the registration of a trade-mark has expired, the right of the registrant to use his mark as theretofore used in commerce shall be incontestable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Interference", on page 12, after line 23, to strike out:

SEC. 17. In every case of interference, opposition to registration, or application to cancel the registration of a mark, the Commissioner shall give notice to all parties and shall direct the examiner in charge of interferences to determine the right of registration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 3, to strike out:

SEC. 18. The Commissioner may refuse to register the opposed mark, may cancel the registration of a registered mark, or may refuse to register any or all of several interfering marks, or may register the mark for the person or persons entitled thereto.

(a) In all inter partes proceedings the doctrine of laches and acquiescence, where applicable, shall be considered and applied. The provisions of this section shall also govern cases heretofore begun in the Patent Office and not finally determined, and the provisions of section 21 respecting remands shall be applicable to this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 19. Appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person from the final decision of the examiner of interferences. Appeals may also be taken to the Commissioner in person from all final decisions of the examiner in charge of trade-marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 20. If an applicant for registration of a mark, or a party to an interference as to a mark, or party who has filed opposition to the registration of a mark, or party to an application for the cancelation of the registration of a mark, is dissatisfied with the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, he may appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals on complying with the conditions required in case of an appeal from the decision of the Board of Appeals by an applicant for a patent or a party to an interference as to an invention, and the same rules of practice and procedure shall govern in every stage of such proceedings as far as the same may be applicable. The provisions of section 4915 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in trade-mark cases. The same right of review as provided in said section 4915 shall be accorded to all parties to opposition and cancelation proceedings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 11, to change the section number from 21 to 17, and in the same line, after the word "If", to insert a comma and "after due proceedings,", so as to read.

SEC. 17. If, after due proceedings, it shall appear that there has been in commerce an honest concurrent use of the same or similar marks for the same or similar goods or services for a continuous period of more than 5 years immediately preceding the date of a pending application by one of such users for the registration of one of such marks, without protest by any other such user within said period, the Commissioner, or on appeal the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the court in an action begun under the provisions of section 4915, Revised Statutes, may grant more than one registration of such marks, subject to such conditions and limitations, if any, as to mode or place of use of such marks as the Commissioner or said courts, or either of them, may require in order to minimize the probability of confusion arising from the concurrent use of such marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 18. In every case of interference, opposition to registration, application to register as an honest concurrent user, or application to cancel the registration of a mark, the Commissioner shall give notice to all parties and shall direct the examiner in charge of interferences to determine the right of registration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 19. The Commissioner may refuse to register the opposed mark, may cancel the registration of a registered mark, or may refuse to register any or all of several interfering marks, or may register the mark for the person or persons entitled thereto, as the rights of the parties may be established in the proceedings.

(a) In all inter partes proceedings the doctrine of laches and acquiescence, where applicable, shall be considered and applied. The provisions of this section shall also govern cases heretofore begun in the Patent Office and not finally determined, and the provisions of section 17 respecting remands shall be applicable to this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 20. Appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person from the final decision of the examiner of interferences. Appeals may also be taken to the Commissioner in person from all final decisions of the examiner in charge of trade-marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 21. If an applicant for registration of a mark, or a party to an interference as to a mark, or party who has filed opposition to the registration of a mark, or a party to an application to register as an honest concurrent user, or party to an application for the cancelation of the registration of a mark, is dissatisfied with the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, he may appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals on complying with the conditions required in case of an appeal from the decision of the Board of Appeals by an applicant for a patent or a party to an interference as to an invention, and the same rules of practice and procedure shall govern in every stage of such proceedings as far as the same may be applicable. The provisions of section 4915 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in trade-mark cases. The same right of review as provided in said section 4915 shall be accorded to all parties to interference opposition and cancelation proceedings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Registration is notice", on page 17, line 13, after the word "act", to insert "and the acts of March 3, 1881, February 20, 1905, and March 19, 1920", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. Registration of a mark under this act and the acts of March 3, 1881, February 20, 1905, and March 19, 1920, is notice of the registrant's claim of ownership thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I should like to have the parliamentary situation stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending bill was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. GERRY. I intended to object to the bill, and I wish to get some information in regard to it. I did not know that it was taken up by unanimous consent. Frankly, I should like to object to the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection of the Senator from Rhode Island would not be in order at this time.

Mr. GERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the bill be returned to the calendar?

Mr. GERRY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I made the request for the consideration of the bill, it was granted, and the Senator did not make his objection until we were well into the bill and considering the amendments. I object to any disposition of the bill other than through the method now being pursued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—The Supplemental Register—General Provisions", on page 21, line 3, after the numerals "10", to strike out "(except the provision for assignment without the goodwill of the business)", so as to read:

SEC. 26. The provisions of paragraphs (a), (c), (e), (f), and (g) of section 7, the provisions of section 10, and the provisions of section 11 and 22 of this act, are hereby made applicable to registrations on the supplemental register.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title VI—Remedies", on page 25, line 5, after the word "otherwise", to insert "use such reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation", so as to read:

SEC. 32. Any person who shall, in commerce, without the consent of the registrant, (a) reproduce, counterfeit, copy, or colorably imitate any mark on either register provided by this act, or (b) shall apply such reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation to merchandise or services of such a character that the use thereof is likely to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers, or to labels, signs, prints, packages, wrappers, receptacles, or advertisements intended to be used upon or in connection with the sale of such merchandise or services, or (c) shall otherwise use such reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation falsely to indicate that the goods or services are the goods or services of a person who shall have registered a mark under this act, shall be liable in a civil action by the registrant for any or all of the remedies hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 21, after the word "defendant", to insert "or those in privity with him", and on page 26, line 2, after the word "registration", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That when prior use shall have been established in the defendant or his predecessor, he shall be entitled to the exclusive development of his mark within the territory which he now holds", so as to read:

(1) That the mark whose use by the defendant, or those in privity with him, is charged as an infringement has been continuously used by the defendant or by his predecessors in business in the State or States where its use is charged to infringe from a date prior to the use by the registrant or his predecessors of the trade-mark described in the registration: Provided, That when prior use shall have been established in the defendant or his predecessor, he shall be entitled to the exclusive development of his mark within the territory which he now holds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 10, to insert:

(3) If goods have been put on the market by the registrant of a mark registered under this act or under any of the prior acts enumerated in section 46 hereof, in a package or other container bearing such mark, and said goods, or any part thereof, have been transferred, without the authority of the registrant, to another package or container, or if said goods have been in any way altered, it shall be unlawful and an infringement of such registered mark to make any use of or reference to such registered mark on or in connection with such altered or transferred goods or on or in connection with any packages or containers or display devices therefor, in the selling or displaying or offering for sale of any of the altered or transferred goods.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 12, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "district court of the" and insert "District Court of the United States for the", and in line 23, after the word "granted", to insert: "And it shall be the duty of the clerks of such courts within 1 month after the filing of any action, suit, or proceeding arising under the provisions of this act to give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner of Patents, setting forth in order so far as known the names and addresses of the litigants and the designating number or numbers of the registration or registrations upon which the action, suit, or proceeding has been brought, and in the event any other registration be subsequently included in the action, suit, or proceeding by amendment, answer, cross-bill, or other pleading, the clerk shall give like notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and within 1 month after the decision is rendered or a decree issued the clerk of the court shall give notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Patents on receipt of such notice forthwith to endorse the same upon the file wrapper of the said registration or registrations and to incorporate the same as a part of the contents of said file or file wrapper; and for each notice required to be furnished to the Commissioner of Patents in compliance therewith a fee of 50 cents shall be taxed by the clerk as costs of suit", so as to read:

SEC. 33. The several courts vested with jurisdiction of civil actions arising under this act shall have power to grant injunctions, according to the principles of equity and upon such terms as the court may deem reasonable, to prevent the violation of any right of the registrant of a mark registered under this act. Any such injunction granted upon hearing, after notice to the defendant, by any district court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, may be served on the parties against whom such injunction is granted anywhere in the United States where they may be found, and shall be operative, and may be enforced by proceedings to punish for contempt, or otherwise, by the court by which such injunction was granted, or by any other district court, or judge thereof, in the United States, or by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or a judge thereof. The said courts, or judges thereof, shall have jurisdiction to enforce said injunction, as herein provided, as fully as if the injunction had been granted by the district court in which it is sought to be enforced. The clerk of the court or judge granting the injunction shall, when required to do so by the court before which application to enforce said injunction is made, transfer without delay to said court a certified copy of all papers on file in his office, upon which said injunction was granted. And it shall be the duty of the clerks of such courts within 1 month after the filing of any action, suit, or proceeding arising under the provisions of this act to give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner of Patents, setting forth in order so far as known the names and addresses of the litigants and the designating number or numbers of the registration or registrations upon which the action, suit, or proceeding has been brought, and in the event any other registration be subsequently included in the action, suit, or proceeding by amendment, answer, cross-bill, or other pleading, the clerk shall give like notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and within 1 month after the decision is rendered or a decree issued the clerk of the court shall give notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Patents on receipt of such notice forthwith to endorse the same upon the file wrapper of the said registration or registrations and to incorporate the same as a part of the contents of said file or file wrapper; and for each notice required to be furnished to the Commissioner of Patents in compliance therewith a fee of 50 cents shall be taxed by the clerk as costs of suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 6, after the word "the" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "district court of the" and insert "District Court of the United States for the"; and in line 9, after the word "the", to strike out "circuit court of appeals of" and insert "United States Court of Appeals for", so as to read:

SEC. 38. The district and territorial courts of the United States and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia shall have original jurisdiction, and the circuit courts of appeal of the United States and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have appellate jurisdiction, of all civil actions arising under this act respecting trade-marks registered in accordance with the provisions of this act, without regard to the amount in controversy or to diversity or lack of diversity of the citizenship of the parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the heading on page 31, line 12, after the words "Names", to strike out the comma and "False Designations of Origin, or False Description", so as to read:

TITLE VII—IMPORTATION FORBIDDEN OF GOODS BEARING INFRINGING MARKS OR NAMES

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 6, after the word "customs", to strike out "laws. In order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this paragraph, the registrant may require a copy of the certificate of registration of his mark to be recorded in books which shall be kept for this purpose in the Department of the Treasury, under such regutions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of the same to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of customs"; and insert: "laws: Provided, That in order to aid the officers of customs in enforcing this paragraph, the registrant or owner of the trade-mark shall record the trade-mark in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.", so as to read:

SEC. 42. (a) Any merchandise, whatever may be its source or origin, which shall bear any registered mark or any infringement thereof, except a mark registered under section 1 (b) of the act of March 19, 1920, or in the supplemental register provided by this act, shall not be imported into the United States or admitted to entry at any customhouse of the United States unless the written consent of the registrant to such importation or entry be first had and obtained or unless such offending mark be removed or obliterated; and, if brought into the United States in violation of the provision of this section, any person selling, offering for sale, or dealing in such merchandise shall be amenable, at the suit of the registrant, to the liabilities for infringement provided in this act and, in addition, be required to export or destroy such merchandise or to remove or obliterate such infringing mark therefrom, and such merchandise shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture for violation of the customs laws: Provided, That in order to aid the officers of customs in enforcing this paragraph, the registrant or owner of the trade-mark shall record the trade-mark in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 11, after the word "customs", to strike out "laws. In order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this paragraph, any such domestic or foreign manufacturer or trader may require a statement of his business or commercial name and the locality where his business is located and where his goods are manufactured to be recorded in books which shall be kept for this purpose in the Department of the Treasury under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of such record to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of customs" and insert "laws: Provided, That in order to aid the officers of customs in enforcing this paragraph, such domestic or foreign manufacturer or trader shall record his trade or commercial name in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe", so as to read:

(b) Any merchandise, whatever may be its source or origin, which shall bear the name or a simulation thereof of any domestic manufacture or manufacturer or trader, or of any manufacturer or trader located in any foreign country which by treaty, convention, or law affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, shall not be imported into the United States or admitted to entry at any customhouse of the United States unless the written consent of such manufacturer or trader to such importation or entry be first had and obtained, or unless such offending name be removed or obliterated, and if brought into the United States in violation of the provisions of this section, any person selling, offering for sale, or dealing in such merchandise may be enjoined from dealing therein and in addition be required to export or destroy such merchandise or to remove or obliterate such name therefrom, and the merchandise shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture for violation of the customs laws: Provided, That in order to aid the officers of customs in enforcing this paragraph, such domestic or foreign manufacturer or trader shall record his trade or commercial name in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title X—Construction and Definitions," on page 40, line 19, after the word "by", to strike out "stock"; in the same line, after the word "ownership", to insert "or"; in the same line, after the word "relationship", to strike out "or otherwise", and insert "control of", and in line 21, after the word "is" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "controlled" and insert "exercised", so as to read:

The term "related company" means any individual, partnership, or person within the definition above where by ownership, or contractual relationship, control of the nature and quality of the goods upon which the mark is used is exercised by the registrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 48. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, H. R. 6618, was the read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island gives notice of a motion to reconsider.

Mr. GERRY subsequently said: I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 6618, Calendar No. 1617, was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The report has been read. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I dislike at this late hour to raise any objections to the conference report, but I wish to say that I happen to be one of the two Senators who have the honor to represent the State of New Mexico in the Senate. The question of Boulder Dam has been bothering the Congress and the American people and the States of the West for many years. The original Boulder Dam law was passed by the Congress of the United States after many conferences held by representatives of the States involved, and after a certain pact was made and adopted by the States involved, with the exception of the State of Arizona, which has not up to this minute ratified the pact between the States. I do not know why, but when the pact was made, notwithstanding that the interests of the people of the States of Wyoming, of Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico were involved, for some reason or other—I should hate to say that it was neglect on the part of their representatives—those States did not obtain any benefit whatsoever, either from the passage of the Boulder Dam law or from the construction of Boulder Dam.

The original law provided in effect that Boulder Dam should be constructed and that whatever power was developed at Boulder Dam should be used. The law also provided that whatever revenue was obtained at Boulder Dam or from the power developed at Boulder Dam should be distributed in a certain way.

I want Senators to follow me briefly. Remember that the water that goes to Boulder Dam and produces the power at Boulder Dam comes from New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah. One river alone in northwestern New Mexico sends a little more than 2,000,000 acre feet of water per year into Boulder Dam. Notwithstanding that, when the original law was passed the revenue that would be derived from the sale of power at Boulder Dam was to be distributed as follows: 18½ percent or a little more should go to the State of Arizona; 18½ percent should go to the State of Nevada, and the remainder was to be used to retire the debt incurred in the construction of Boulder Dam. Arizona obtains money from Boulder Dam and no one complains about that. Nevada obtains money from Boulder Dam, and one complains about that. California receives the benefit of the water and of lower power rates. New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, and Colorado will have to wait until all the debt incurred in the construction of Boulder Dam has been paid off before they will receive any benefits whatsoever from Boulder Dam.

For years California has been getting some benefits from Boulder Dam. For years Arizona has been getting some benefits from Boulder Dam, as has Nevada. The people in southern California, however, were not satisfied with the benefits they received from Boulder Dam. Remember that the upper-basin States were not receiving 1 cent, either directly or in the way of reduced power rates.

For the last 3 or 4 years interested persons dealing in electric power in southern California have been coming to Washington seeking to modify the original law by which they would pay still less for their power at Boulder Dam, and if the pending bill were to pass, it would provide that California would not have to pay $25,000,000 which it was supposed to pay the Federal Government in the way of flood-protection costs.

The bill was introduced in the House of Representatives at this session. Hearings were had and the bill was passed. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and that committee held hearings on the Senate bill, and studied the hearings had on the House bill. After the hearings in the Senate committee and after ascertaining the rights of the individual upper-basin States, the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation inserted three amendments in the bill.

The bill now provides that the rate for power shall be reduced, California again getting more than it did from the waters that flow from New Mexico and the other States.

The bill also provides that instead of 18½ percent, Arizona and Nevada each are to receive $300,000 a year during the time the law will be in effect, or up to the time the debt on the dam is paid. In order to encourage the upper-basin States to go along with them, the suggestion was made that out of the revenues of Boulder Dam $500,000 should be set aside every year—1938, 1939, and 1940—and given to the upper-basin States for the purpose of making further research, surveys, and plans if found feasible to develop their particular areas. The bill further provided, for the next 14 years, that those States should be allowed $500,000 a year, to be distributed equitably among the upper-basin States, and that in the rest of the period of time, some 25 years, it should be distributed equitably among all the States, including the three States of the lower basin.

We wanted to go along, but we felt, as did the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, that it was all right to have the law modified so that the lower States could get the benefit of the lower power and set off a $25,000,000 debt against the Federal Government. But we did insist that in the little mite the upper basin States were getting they should be protected.

So far as New Mexico is concerned, I know that I voice the sentiment of my colleague and the sentiment of the people of the State of New Mexico when I say that we do not want to interfere with the rights or benefits of any other State, but we do insist—and the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation agreed with us—that we shall get our small share on an equal basis.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Schwartz

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, before the suggestion of the absence of a quorum was made, I had stated to the Senate that under the provisions of the present bill New Mexico, Wyoming, Colorado, and Utah were getting at the rate of $500,000 a year for the four States for a period of 14 years. That money was to be distributed, according to the House bill, in an equitable way. The phrase used was "equitably distributed." The Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, at my insistence and after a complete hearing, changed the word "equitably" to "equally." That was done for this reason:

New Mexico is a small State in population. Wyoming is a small State in population. Utah and Colorado are smaller in population than California and some of the other States; and we felt that the only equitable thing to do was to give those States an equal share of that meager sum of money, the only amount of revenue we were deriving in any way from Boulder Dam; and what is wrong about that? Why should not New Mexico get an equal share of this small amount?

We have only one project that we can take care of under the proposed law—only one—which is on the San Juan River in San Juan County, N. Mex. That river sends to Boulder Dam, I repeat, 2,400,000 acre-feet of water every year. The project that we have in mind will take only some 350,000 acre-feet of water, so the balance will still go to be used in the lower regions of the Colorado at Boulder Dam and be a benefit to other States and not to New Mexico, where it comes from. The committee felt that the request was so just that it unanimously adopted that amendment, and so reported to the Senate.

When the original bill was passed, the other States that were getting the benefit did not say anything about equity or equitable distribution of anything. They just took our water, constructed the dam, got low rates, and got irrigation projects. Arizona and Nevada were amply protected, and I do not blame them. Evidently they had someone in the Congress who was really interested in taking care of their interests. But now the opportunity presents itself; and I ask the Senate in all sincerity, after we have suffered so long, after we have not been permitted to have any of the benefits of Boulder Dam, that the little mite they are now giving us in order to have California set off $25,000,000 charged against it on account of flood protection shall be equally distributed among the States; that if it is $100, New Mexico shall get its $25; that if it is $500,000 a year for a certain period of years, New Mexico shall get its just and equal share; and we have said something else:

New Mexico is a sovereign State. New Mexico knows what it needs. We have but this one project. Is there anything unreasonable in New Mexico asking the United States Senate and the Congress that whatever money we get under the provisions of this bill, New Mexico shall determine how that money shall be spent in New Mexico?

The modification made by the conferees in this bill subjects us completely to the whim and caprice of someone who may be in charge of the Reclamation Bureau, or may be Secretary of the Interior. I maintain that this money comes from a special fund brought about by legislation passed by the Congress of the United States. They want to modify that law and give us a little mite. I think it is fairly reasonable that what goes to New Mexico shall be New Mexico's, to be used in the particular project in which New Mexico wants to use it. The only one that it wants is the San Juan River project, in San Juan County, N. Mex. We could not use the water anywhere else, but we want to determine where it shall be used as long as this money does not come from the Federal Government or from a special appropriation. This money does not come out of the General Treasury. It is the little interest we have in the revenue which is being produced at Boulder Dam. Hence we stand in an entirely different situation than in the case of a general project which would be constructed or built under the reclamation law. The bill provides that a special fund shall be created, not from taxes, not paid by the people of the United States, but from the revenue obtained at Boulder Dam from water that flows from the State of New Mexico.

Mr. President, under the old law we were not getting a thing, nor could we get a penny until after the amortization of the debt. Under this bill we would be worse off. While the money is there, while the revenue is flowing into a special fund from a special source, the modification made by the conferees would put us completely in the hands of someone else in the city of Washington. We think that is unfair.

Mr. President, the bill would never have passed the Senate unless we had had an agreement with the House. Last night when the bill was called up the chairman of the House Committee on Reclamation and Irrigation was sitting right next to me. On his own volition, without any suggestion on my part, he said, "I understand you are going to amend the bill to include the New Mexico amendments." He said, "I will concur with them, as chairman of the committee, because we know that is the only way we could pass the bill, and you were good enough not to object to the bill being brought up and letting it go to conference."

Mr. President, I feel that the Senate owes it to the people of the West, to the people of the State of New Mexico, to a standing committee of this body who stood unanimously by the Senate amendments, to defeat the motion of the Senator from Nevada, and I think the Senate should insist on a further conference, and insist on the Senate amendments, which are very reasonable.

Mr. President, to recount to this body the history of Boulder Dam, the story of how the States were treated originally, would take a week. Who wants this bill? We did not want to put any obstructions in the way, but it is not desired. The only ones who want it, who have been here for months and years, have been the men who sell the power around Los Angeles.

This bill needs more attention than a temporary discussion on this floor. I am telling my colleagues that they will be doing justice, they will be carrying out their oaths, they will act in accordance with their duty, and faithfully to the people of the country, if they defeat the motion of the Senator from Nevada, and insist on the Senate amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have just examined the conference report, not having been a member of the conference committee, and I am sure that I speak the minds of the Members of this body from the various Colorado River basin States when I say that it would not be the intention of anyone to deprive the State of New Mexico of its proper share in the development funds. The representatives of these States have all stood together pretty well in trying to protect the interests of those States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. And the representatives of the same States, the ones who represent the people of those States in matters dealing with irrigation and water, all favor the Senate amendments, and said so at the committee hearings. The Representative of the State of Wyoming, the Representative of the State of Colorado, the Representative of the State of Utah, and the two Representatives who were here from the State of New Mexico, all agreed that they were just, and no objections were made whatsoever. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] attended those hearings; he listened to all the testimony adduced at that particular time, and it was unanimously agreed by the members of the committee, and by the representatives of the water users, that the amendments submitted by me were just and fair, and they had no objection, and recommended to the committee that they be inserted in the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to make a suggestion. I should be unwilling to agree to support the conference report tonight against the objection of the Senator from New Mexico, because I feel that the interests of his State should be protected, and that we should give ample consideration to the rights of the State. It is obvious that we are not talking against time tonight——

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; we are not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And, as the Senator has stated, this is a subject which requires consideration. Would it not be a satisfactory procedure to allow the conference report to lie on the desk? The Senate and the House are about to adjourn for a week, and at the termination of the recess, it will be possible for all concerned to examine the language and, if necessary, perhaps, to send the bill back to conference.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I would have no objection to that procedure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I suggest that unanimous consent be asked that the conference report lie over until the Congress has reassembled after the coming recess.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I certainly shall not object, but in deference to the chairman of the conferees, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who is not present, I should not like to have the matter taken up now.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is quite right about that. Let the request await his return.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has just entered the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. What is the question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Just before the senior Senator from Nevada entered the Chamber, having listened to the address of the Senator from New Mexico, and having read the conference report, and being impressed by the sincerity with which the Senator from New Mexico speaks in opposition to the conference report, but feeling also that perhaps the report of the committee is not susceptible of the interpretation he places upon it, I was asking unanimous consent that the report be allowed to remain upon the desk until Congress reassembles after the recess which is about to be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I may say that I did not have the pleasure of hearing all the Senator from New Mexico said, but this is a matter which has been under consideration by the governments of seven States, including the State of the Senator from New Mexico, together with three commissions from each State, and also by the power users, the Department of the Interior, and the Department of Justice. A bill was agreed on in the House of Representatives. A similar bill was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. The Senator from New Mexico desired to protect the rights of his citizens more than they were protected by the bill apparently. In other words, for the first time in history the Senator from a State insisted that a particular reclamation project be mentioned in a bill.

If I am incorrect in that statement, I should like to know in what respect I am not correct. I pause for correction. [A pause.] Since no correction is made I assume my statement is true.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is it not a fact that in the original bill the State of Nevada and the State of Arizona were mentioned?

Mr. PITTMAN. No reclamation project was mentioned.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Boulder Dam project was mentioned.

Mr. PITTMAN. No reclamation project was mentioned.

Mr. CHAVEZ. But they are mentioned by name in this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. No reclamation project was mentioned. I think it is peculiar that it should be sought to have a reclamation project mentioned. When benefits are divided among seven States, it seems peculiar to me that one State should insist on having a particular project mentioned. I could ask that a project in the State of Nevada be included. Possibly the Senator from Wyoming also has in mind a project he could mention. I do not know whether or not he has a project in view. Possibly he is more interested in defeating the measure. There are parts of it he does not like.

Mr. President, for 2 months the Governors of the States interested in the Colorado River Basin, representatives of the States, and representatives of State commissions, have worked with the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice, and they have agreed on this matter.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is it not a fact that the representatives of the Governor of every State the Senator has mentioned attended the committee hearings and that the representatives of each and every Governor who attended the committee hearings agreed and recommended the amendments?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know whether that is true, but if the Senator says it is true I accept it as true. At the last minute after the bill had been agreed upon the Senator from New Mexico offered the amendments. If he says the representatives in question agreed upon them, I accept his statement.

Some of the Senators interested in this matter, representing States interested in the Colorado River Basin, have objected to the amendments. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to the amendments. I pause for a moment to give opportunity to contradict that statement. [A pause.] Apparently it is not contradicted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to say that speaking for myself I read the amendments, and was uncertain as to their effect, and there was not so much an objection to the amendments as a desire to make certain as to what their effect would be.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator's explanation is entirely satisfactory to me.

I asked unanimous consent to have the conference report considered. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and other Senators objected. I judged from their objection that they were opposed to the measure.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming was that the conference report at this time be passed over until after the adjournment, and then be taken up for consideration. I had a conversation with the Senator from Nevada, who probably wrote the provision in question in the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I did not write it.

Mr. HATCH. I myself have interpreted that provision, and I think my colleague has also interpreted it, as being adverse to the interests of our State. The report has been here for only a few moments. I know the Senator from Nevada expressed himself to me as believing that the conference report really protected the interests of New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. He so expressed himself.

Mr. HATCH. I want to thank the Senator from Nevada for his courtesy in doing that. I know the Senator from Nevada tried to protect the interests of New Mexico. We simply have a confusion of mind. Perhaps, after all, there is no real difference between us.

Mr. PITTMAN. There will be no difference when we get through with the matter.

Mr. HATCH. During the recess we can consider this matter.

Mr. PITTMAN. There will be no recess now. I shall go downstairs and eat, and then come back to the Senate Chamber.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has no objection, then, to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PITTMAN. I reserve the right to object. I wish to say that I am very fond of both Senators from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have the same fondness for the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thought I was doing the Senators a favor by retaining in the measure a reference to the project proposed by him in New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Nevada probably is.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thought I was. I have done everything I could to accommodate the Senator. I am willing to let this bill die—I have done everything I could do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was temporarily absent from the Chamber when the suggestion was made to allow the conference report to go over until after the recess. The concurrent resolution has not reached here from the House, but it is contemplated that we shall adjourn tonight until Monday a week. I was wondering if any real harm would come from postponing consideration of the matter for a week.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall object.

Mr. BARKLEY. There might be a conference, and perhaps there will be an interpretation of the language that will satisfy everyone.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say that I have tried to show the importance of the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I understand the situation

Mr. PITTMAN. There are two Senators who are trying to kill this measure, after their Governors——

Mr. HATCH. Oh, Mr. President, I cannot let that statement pass unnoticed. There is no desire on the part of my colleague or on my part to kill this legislation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if that is the attitude of the Senator from Nevada, and if he wants the bill to die, so far as I am concerned, let it die.

Mr. PITTMAN. We will let it die, then.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I sympathize with the view expressed by the able Senator from Nevada. I think the bill should be enacted into law at an early date, and I sincerely hope that no condition will arise that will be regarded as an obstruction to the early adjustment of any controversy with respect to the measure, and that it will be enacted into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I objected to the suggestion of the Senator, who suggested that the matter go over.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have made no such suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. The report is still before the Senate?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator objected to a request made by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from New Mexico yielded to me?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yielded to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PITTMAN. I raise the question that the Senator from New Mexico cannot yield except for a question.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall continue to raise that objection. If the Senator wants to fight, let us proceed.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is not the purpose of the Senator from New Mexico to run away from a fight.

Mr. PITTMAN. Go ahead and fight, then.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am not speaking now with the idea of saying anything contrary to what has been said by the Senator from Nevada. I wish to say a few words. Possibly the Senator from Nevada will object.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not at all.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Nevada knows that there is much of interest in this matter. The Senator from New Mexico wants to cooperate with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. The commission from the Senator's State knows more than he does.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The commission of my State insisted that we put the amendments in the bill. The senior Senator from Nevada did not attend the committee hearings one day. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] did attend the committee hearings, and voted to insert the amendments.

I ask the Senator from Nevada please to do me the courtesy of listening to my request. The Senator from Nevada knows that the committee hearings have not even been printed as yet.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Nevada knows that this report was drawn in a hurry. It contains what the Senate conferees agreed to. In order to obtain a copy to examine its provisions, we have had to go to the desk.

Mr. President, I feel that I am about to make a reasonable request of the Senator from Nevada. I ask unanimous consent that this matter go over for a week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Under the circumstances, I think that is about all I care to say.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words.

The amendment involved in this controversy was adopted by the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and deals solely and only with a project in New Mexico. That is the whole subject of the amendment. It relates to no waters in any other State. It does not touch the waters of Colorado, or of Nevada, or of Wyoming, or of Utah, or of any of the other Colorado River Basin States. These amendments relate only to the waters of the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico.

Upon amendments offered by my colleague, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senate adopted what the Senators from New Mexico wanted concerning the waters in their own State. It was very gracious of the Senate to adopt those amendments, and we appreciate it.

The bill went to conference, and the conferees representing other States rewrote the amendments. Neither Senator from New Mexico was on the conference committee. The majority of the conferees—three out of four—are from the lower basin States. There is one conferee from California, one from Nevada, one from Arizona, and one from Colorado. The amendments relating to waters in New Mexico were rewritten in the language of California, Nevada, and Arizona.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator's inference was that I had been influenced by California.

Mr. HATCH. Not at all. I made no inference. I made my statement as plain as I knew how to make it, and I make it again. I said that the conference report dealing with waters in New Mexico was not written by New Mexico Senators.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is that what the Senator said?

Mr. HATCH. I said it was written in the language of California, Nevada, and Arizona.

Mr. PITTMAN. Did the Senator mean to intimate that I was influenced in the conference by California?

Mr. HATCH. No; I do not intimate that the Senator from Nevada was speaking for California at all. I do not intimate anything. I would not make that statement, because I think the Senator from Nevada really thought he was conserving and protecting the waters of New Mexico. However, it happens that the Senators from New Mexico do not agree with the distribution and division of waters in New Mexico as written by California, Nevada, and Arizona.

If the conferees had thought the amendments offered by my colleague and adopted by the Senate were unjust, if the House had refused to agree to them, they might have been entirely eliminated; but in rewriting the amendment, I submit that in a matter affecting the waters of one's own State, and no other State, the Senators from that State ought to have something to say about it. The only opportunity we now have to reach the question at all is for the Senate to defeat the conference report, because the only thing to be considered relates to waters in New Mexico. The Senators from New Mexico are not satisfied with the provision.

Mr. President, I submit that the conference report should be rejected. I do not say that with any desire to kill the bill. Let it be returned to the conferees, and let them again take up their labors and try to preserve the Senate amendments. If they cannot do so, if the House will not agree, then let them bring back another bill; but do not turn over the waters of New Mexico to the Commissioner of Reclamation, as the conference report does, and deprive the Senators of that State of the opportunity of having a single, solitary word to say about how those waters shall go.

Mr. President, I am ready for the vote to be taken.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, having signed the conference report, I feel that the Senator from New Mexico has been a little inaccurate in his statement.

The first thing that is sought to be divided is the money which comes from the Boulder project operations. There is a certain sum derived in a certain way, which is for the benefit of the upper-basin States. That is the thing that is to be divided.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I make no point of that, because that was a matter in which the other States were interested. If the matter goes back to the conferees, and the conferees say what should be done in that connection, I say that is a matter about which all the conferees have something to say; but the point I make is that they approved the report which relates to the waters in New Mexico and the establishment of our project.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator said that it affected only waters in New Mexico. As a matter of fact, the State of Colorado is involved in this particular amendment. The amendment is drawn with the purpose of protecting the Colorado interests. That is, the water which would be used for this project arises substantially in Colorado. You do have floods in Canyon Largo, I know, at times, because they washed out a ranch I had down there.

Mr. HATCH. Let us not have any confusion between the Senator from Colorado and me about the division of the water. Let us not get that point mixed up.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply wanted to make clear the situation that what was sought to be done was to work out a distribution of funds. That is the fundamental thing in the bill. The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, which is under discussion, specified a particular project in New Mexico—the only project, as I gathered, which is available in New Mexico from these waters.

Mr. HATCH. The only one that could be built.

Mr. ADAMS. The only one that could be built. I think the intentions of the Senator from Nevada have been misunderstood. I think the Senator stated that if this project should prove to be infeasible—I think that is the term he used——

Mr. HATCH. I could suggest a better term.

Mr. PITTMAN. Wait a minute. Who determines whether or not it is infeasible?

Mr. ADAMS. I should say the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall determine it.

Mr. ADAMS. But if in fact the project is not feasible, then the provision of the conference report applies to New Mexico. The same thing applies to every State. If projects in other States are found not to be feasible, moneys which have been allocated to those States should go into this fund which is to be divided and is again to be divided. The unfortunate physical fact that affects New Mexico is that if this project is not feasible, they are confronted with a great difficulty as to what they are going to do; and I do not assume that the State of New Mexico feel that they should have the fund in cash to do what they please with. That is, it was a fund for the development of the water of the Colorado River Basin.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the Senator from Colorado that he has correctly explained the physical situation; but we do not want, in New Mexico, in the case of our one lone project—and there is just one little project there, on the San Juan River—to say that we will give to the Commissioner of Reclamation or the Secretary of the Interior the sole power of determining whether or not that project is feasible, and if they say it is not feasible then we are just out.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator a question? Of course, if the project in fact is not feasible, the consequences are inevitable.

Mr. HATCH. The consequences are inevitable, with this exception: The Commissioner of Reclamation might say, "From a Federal standpoint this project cannot be built as a Federal reclamation project"; but the State of New Mexico might say, "We have $10,000,000 that we will put into the project with the fund that comes from this other source, and we will build the project."

Mr. ADAMS. If an amendment were made in such form that the project would not be feasible with the share of New Mexico and other funds that might be contributed from any other source——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I want to say to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senator from Colorado that the Senator from New Mexico has not any doubt at all that if this matter can go over for a week, we can agree on satisfactory language.

Mr. PITTMAN. Why?

Mr. HATCH. That will remove——

Mr. PITTMAN. I still ask the question, "Why"?

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that it will remove any objection he may have or we may have.

Mr. PITTMAN. The conference report cannot be changed.

Mr. HATCH. This is new language which has just been written, late this afternoon. I have not any doubt that the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Nevada, and my colleague can get together next week or the week after and write language that will be perfectly satisfactory to everybody and protect the rights of everyone.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, I am interested, as the Senator knows. We have this problem in the upper-basin States. We have a certain amount of water allocated to us by the Boulder compact. We have never attempted to distribute that water. We have a certain sum of money, and the problem is as to an equitable distribution of the fund. We have reached the first point of division; and, using the term that has been used here, it is very infeasible for us to fall out over this division and lose the opportunity to get the fund.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator from Colorado any doubt that we could work out this language as I suggested?

I think the Senator from Colorado understands the situation perfectly. The Senators from New Mexico would be entirely willing to enter into any sort of negotiations or any way to work out the matter that would be possible; but we do not want to be in the attitude of being forced here on the floor of the Senate to take this or nothing. I know the Senator from Colorado does not want to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of agreeing to the conference report will rise. [After a pause.] Those opposed to agreeing to the conference report will rise. [A pause.]

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the point of no quorum while I make application to place something in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico withhold the call for a quorum until the Senator from Washington can submit his request?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

OPPOSITION TO MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, upon previous occasions I have asked consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, copies of letters which I had written to constituents in the State of Washington about a controversy being carried on in that State affecting public power development, and an attack upon this public power development which is being carried on in connection with the federally owned power plants in the State. I ask consent at this time that the two letters which I send to the desk be incorporated in and made part of my remarks. These are letters Nos. 4 and 5.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER NO. 4 ON INITIATIVE 139

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

DEAR FRIEND: I have been publicly challenged by a spokesman for the Let the People Vote League, sponsor of initiative 139, to quote any statement of the league that is a distortion of the truth. It will be recalled, from my three previous letters, that this so-called league is a propaganda agency of the private power companies. These companies, through initiative 139, are trying to impose on public-utility districts restrictions that would prevent them from functioning.

I accept the league challenge, and give on this page samples of false assertions the league has made in advertising mailed to voters throughout the State. Side by side with the league's statements I quote passages from the State constitution and our State supreme court's decisions. The public can decide which to believe—the league or the law, the league or the supreme court.

THE LEAGUE VERSUS THE LAW

The league says: "P. U. D. commissioners can now incur unlimited public debt without your approval."

The State constitution says: "No county * * * or other municipal corporation shall, for any purpose, become indebted in any manner to an amount exceeding 1½ percent of the taxable property in such county * * * or other municipal corporation without the assent of three-fifths of the voters therein * * *."

The league says: "P. U. D. commissioners can * * * issue revenue bonds * * *" which "constitute a public debt which the people must pay."

The State supreme court says: " * * * All obligations arising from the acquisition, operation, and maintenance of the utility must be met from its revenue, and, in any event, by no action of the city or its officers can the burden be shifted to the shoulders of the taxpayers * * *."

To demonstrate further how far from the facts and the law the league goes in its assertions, I have obtained the following opinion from the State's attorney general, Mr. Smith Troy:

"A utility or a revenue bond is an obligation against the revenue of the utility and can only be paid from other than that source with a special vote or authorization of the taxing district. The courts of our State have maintained this rule continuously since the question has first been raised."

Faced with such proof, spokesmen for the league now retreat to a hitherto unheard of definition of "public debt." They have been asserting that P. U. D. revenue bonds are a general tax obligation. Now they admit that is not so, but assert—and I quote—that "they constitute public debt just as surely as general obligation bonds, since all utility users in such projects must pay their power and water bills monthly or have their service cut off."

By exactly the same reasoning, the people should have the right to vote on securities of every private power company. To make this particular point more clear, suppose the spokesmen for the league had said in their advertising:

"Private power company stocks and bonds constitute public debt just as surely as general obligation bonds, since all utility users in such companies must pay their power and water bills monthly or have their service cut off."

Of course, the Let the People Vote League in framing Initiative 139 was cute enough not to employ this sort of argument and attempt to apply it to private power companies as well as public systems. Securities of both are in exactly the same position: both kinds of securities are payable by the actual users of utility services and are not payable by taxation. But in its anxiety to kill public power development the league is forced to use this utterly illogical argument.

This league is not really interested in your right to vote, or it would now be fighting to give you a vote on private power company securities and franchises. The league's real purpose—the purpose for which it was set up by the private power companies—is to put public-utility districts out of business.

The league so far has not attempted to refute with proof my declaration that it is a fake organization. It has not produced any statement of where and when it was organized; who are its members; and where its money comes from.

C. C. Dill, Ervin E. King, the master of the State Grange, our Congressmen, and other men you know and can trust, have told you the truth about this initiative. You don't know what the league is or what reliance you can place on its statements. Play safe. As the league says: "Don't be misled."

Vote "no" on Initiative 139.

Yours sincerely,

HOMER T. BONE.

This letter has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and is a part thereof.

LETTER NO. 5 ON INITIATIVE 139

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

DEAR FRIEND: In the interest of national defense "the time has come," says a private power company advertisement in our State, "to call off the war between public and private power."

Fine! Excellent! Let's call it off, and as a first step—all, of course, in the interest of national defense—the private power companies should immediately dissolve their sham Let the People Vote League and abandon their efforts to cripple public-utility districts through passage of initiative 139.

From now on every private power attempt to gouge the public will be cloaked in the magic words "national defense." Electric Bond & Share Co., Wall Street holding company which controls large power systems in our State, is seeking to avoid compliance with a Federal law by pleading that it is engaged with problems of national defense. I am for real national defense and lots of it, but flag waving for commercial purposes is hardly good sportsmanship.

And now back to initiative 139. This trick bill is so worded that it would, in practice, prevent public-utility districts from financing their operations. Thus it would put them out of business, which is exactly what the private power companies planned when they drafted it.

Experience in our State shows the requirements of No. 139 are impossible to meet. This bill specifies that the total vote at a special bond election must exceed 50 percent of that cast at the preceding general election. It has been found that special bond elections do not attract half as many voters as cast ballots in general elections. Private power companies are trying to capitalize the apathy over special elections to destroy the usefulness of our Grange power law.

Consider this typical case. On November 21, 1933, Spokane voters went to the polls to approve or disapprove six bond issues. The merit of the issues is unimportant here: The point is that a majority of those voting approved the bonds, but the total vote was less than 50 percent of the vote cast at the preceding general election.

The figures:

All votes cast on 1933 bond issue	24,057
Total vote cast in 1932 election	51,588
Total vote essential under No. 139	25,795

In Spokane it has been found so impossible to obtain the necessary votes at bond elections that no bond issue has been placed on the ballot since 1936. Yet Spokane has for years issued utility revenue bonds, payable out of water revenues, and the courts have sustained such action. Spokane and other cities have a privilege that the Let the People Vote League now seeks to take away only from public-utility districts. Apparently the power companies are afraid to tackle the cities just yet, but if initiative 139 goes through, we may expect similar action against the cities.

This initiative places a premium upon not voting, despite the specious slogan "Let the people vote." Those who oppose the operations of a public-utility district can make their opposition more effective by staying away from the polls than by voting "no."

To illustrate, suppose 100,000 voted at last general election; 50,001 votes would be needed at P. U. D. bond election; 50,000 "yes" votes would be insufficient; one "no" vote added would validate bonds. By staying away from the polls, one person could defeat the unanimous will of 50,000 persons; whereas thousands of voters going to the polls and voting "no" would insure passage of bond issue.

In addition to such lopsided requirements, initiative 139 contains 12 trick words that might be interpreted as requiring a three-fifths majority to validate P. U. D. bonds. These words are as follows: "Or by such greater percentage vote as may be required by the constitution." This refers to article 8, section 6, which provides for a three-fifths vote.

Analysis of this tricky initiative, as well as examination of the Let the People Vote League that sponsors it, reveals the dubious nature of the whole campaign to put over this bill.

Is it not good sense to support the well-known and honored State Grange in its fight against this initiative 139, rather than support the questionable activities of a league about which few know anything and which has suddenly turned up with a pocket full of money to "protect" our citizens against some vague and undefined peril?

When in doubt about the desirability of such a peculiar initiative measure as this one, the safe thing to do is to vote against it. If the signers of the initiative petition are now in doubt as to its validity and honesty, the safe thing to do is to withdraw their signatures.

Yours sincerely,

HOMER T. BONE.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 6328. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)); and

H. R. 7736. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 7865. An act to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, and acts amendatory thereof;

H. R. 8285. An act to limit the importation of articles, products, and minerals produced, processed, or mined under process covered by outstanding United States patents; to define unfair trade practices in certain instances, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8692. An act to amend the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 9791. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 8202. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10039. An act to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 544. Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has asked and obtained unanimous consent to insert certain correspondence in the RECORD.

Mr. PITTMAN. What was the result of the division?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico made the point of order of no quorum, and the Chair asked him if he would withhold that point until the Senator from Washington could state his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator withheld it, it is all right.

Mr. HATCH. I was withholding the point of no quorum for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had not announced the vote. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico withhold his suggestion a moment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Must not the Chair decide the result of a question of division? Division was called for and the Chair was called upon to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order was made.

Mr. McCARRAN. A point of no quorum was made before the Chair announced the decision. Can a point of no quorum intervene between an aye-and-nay vote and the statement of the result?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in the discretion of the Chair to withhold the decision on the vote, which the Chair did, and the point of order was entertained.

Mr. McCARRAN. If that be true, of course I will abide by the decision of the Chair. But my understanding is that when division is called for the Chair must note the numerical standing on the division. I may be wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be true except for the point of order of no quorum being made. When the point of order of no quorum is made——

Mr. McCARRAN. My recollection is that the point of no quorum cannot be made during the pendency of a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair made a notation of the vote, but without announcing it, because of the intervention of the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point of order of no quorum of course automatically requires a roll call, but the Chair asked the Senator to withhold the point until the Senator from Washington could insert something in the RECORD, and that was done. So, I presume, when the matter is inserted in the RECORD, the point of no quorum automatically comes up, if the Senator renews it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator intended to renew it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I still insist on my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is overruled. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McCARRAN. A point of order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

Mr. McCARRAN. I was on my feet insisting on a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. My point of order is that when a viva voce vote has been taken and then a standing vote, on division, has been called, and the Chair has not announced the decision on the division vote, he must announce it before a roll call can be insisted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it is the universal practice of the Senate, without any question, that when a point of order is made of no quorum that suspends proceedings relating to the matter under consideration.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have made the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the "ayes" have it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in order that we might have some order and some understanding, I ask unanimous consent that the point of no quorum be withdrawn without any prejudice.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Schwartz
Bankhead	Gerry	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Gillette	McKellar	Sheppard

Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 36, 37, 38, and 39.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and at the end of the matter so restored insert the following: ": Provided further, That this section shall not apply to positions in the Civilian Conservation Corps outside the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
PAT MCCARRAN,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. C. TARVER,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
BUTLER B. HARE,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report back favorably from that committee without amendment the bill (H. R. 10127), to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill and that the pending business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10127), to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (e) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by striking out at the end of the first sentence thereof the words "for such foreign correspondents or agencies", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for foreign banks and bankers, and for foreign states and governments, agencies, and instrumentalities thereof".

SEC. 2. Section 25 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph reading as follows:

"Whenever any Federal Reserve bank has received from a foreign state recognized by the Government of the United States or from a central bank of any such state, or holds or controls any property in which such a foreign state or a central bank thereof has, or may have, any interest and a state of war or insurrection exists in such foreign state or the laws, orders, or regulations of the United States impose controls or restrictions by licensing arrangement or otherwise on the export of, or dealing in, property in the United States belonging to such foreign state or central bank, payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property to or upon the order of the person who the representative of such foreign state duly accredited to the Government of the United States shall certify to the Secretary of State has authority to receive, control, dispose of, or otherwise exercise dominion over such property, provided and so long as the Secretary of State recognizes and accepts the authority so certified to him, shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability for or with respect to such property. The Federal Reserve bank shall not be subject to any claim or liability in any court by way of suit, counterclaim, set-off, recoupment, or other affirmative action or defense in its own name or in the name of any of its officers, agents, or employees, as a consequence of any action which it takes in accordance with this paragraph. No court shall, at the instigation of any third party, by attachment, injunction, or other similar proceeding, in any way, directly or indirectly, restrain or prevent a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property herein referred to. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'property' shall include, without limitation, gold, silver, currency, credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein; the term 'foreign state' shall include, without limitation, any foreign government or any department, district, province, county, possession, or other similar governmental organization or subdivision of a foreign government, and any agency or instrumentality of any such foreign government or of any such organization or subdivision; the term 'central bank' shall include any foreign bank or banker which performs any one or more of the functions of a central bank; and the term 'person' shall include, without limitation, any corporation, partnership, association, or other similar organization."

Mr. BROWN. The bill was unanimously favorably reported by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate this morning. It was unanimously reported out by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House yesterday and was passed by the House today.

Briefly the bill deals with deposits of foreign governments and foreign banks, central banks, Government banks, particularly in countries that are in a distressed condition because of the war. It permits the Federal Reserve banks to transfer the deposits upon their books, upon the certificate, request, or demand of a person designated by the Secretary of State of the United States.

Applying it to a practical situation, the Secretary of State determines who is the accredited representative of a government of a foreign nation with respect to the control of the deposits of that nation in our Federal Reserve banks. It does nothing more than that. But incidental to that, it takes away from any foreign government any right it may have had to come into our courts to obtain an injunction or other legal relief, and makes the determination of our Secretary of State final as to who is in control of that deposit.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I was compelled to leave the Banking and Currency Committee this morning by reason of duties in connection with a conference committee. Does the measure protect the Federal Reserve banks in making payments to any foreign government, or the central bank of any foreign government, provided the payments were made to the individual who is recognized by the Secretary of State, as representing that government.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. It gives to the Secretary of State the right to determine, so far as the Federal Reserve Banks are concerned, the person who shall be recognized as the representative of the foreign government or the central bank?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. My inquiry is based on this fact. There are the funds of foreign nations, there are the funds of central banks deposited in national and State banks. Why is it not possible to furnish to privately owned banks protection equal to that which is furnished by this measure to the Federal Reserve banks? It seems to me that when the Secretary of State says that Count So-and-So is the representative of a certain foreign government, the Secretary of the State has performed his function, and then the Federal Reserve bank is justified in making payments to him, because he is the accredited representative. The accredited representative having been established, why might we not permit the First National Bank of New York, or some other national or State bank, to make payments of funds on deposit with them from a foreign nation, or a central bank, and have the same protection? That is, it is sought to avoid controversy which might involve liability upon the Federal Reserve bank by representatives of two factions in a foreign government making claims for funds, by saying that the Secretary of State shall be the final determining factor. I am wondering if we could not protect other banks which would be in the same dilemma.

Mr. BROWN. I think we could, and I think we should. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that if he had been at the committee meeting, and had presented the matter in the manner in which he has now presented it, I think an amendment along that line could have been adopted.

The practical situation is that the bill as originally introduced was not satisfactory to the Senate committee, as the Senator well knows from the two meetings we had. We completely revised the bill, with the assistance of the Federal Reserve counsel, and the legislative counsel, and sent the bill to the House. The House agreed to our bill, as we in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee had agreed upon it, and reported it in the hope that we would be able to give it immediate consideration in the Senate.

The State Department made one objection to the Senator's suggestion. By the way, the Senator from Colorado made two suggestions in connection with the bill, one of which was adopted. The bill applies to any situation, and not only to the situation in which war might be the immediate cause of the difficulty.

The Secretary of State felt that the State Department would be considerably burdened by requests from the many banks in the United States which may have deposits of this kind.

Second, there was a little feeling on the part of the Federal Reserve officials and on the part of the Department of State, who agreed that the bill should pass, that there might be some question as to whether or not we should take the right of action in the courts away from depositors in privately owned banks as distinguished from a Federal Reserve bank, which, of course, is in a certain sense a public or Government bank.

Those were the two principal reasons why we did not adopt the second suggestion made by the Senator. The great problem is not in the private bank. It is not in the Morgan bank, for example, or the First National Bank of New York. It is mainly in the great central bank of the United States, the Federal Reserve System.

While I think we should cover the situation to which the Senator from Colorado alludes, I think we would cover a great part of the problem by passing the House bill tonight; and I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I shall join the Senator in legislation which will simplify the situation with respect to all the private banks, in line with the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator feels that, in view of the particular hour and time, it would be unwise to seek to amend the bill at this time?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; it would have to go back to the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10127) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill relating to foreign accounts in Federal Reserve banks."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an executive session in order to confirm a number of appointments, so that the President may be notified. After the executive session we shall go back into legislative session.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator assures us that we shall go back into legislative session?

Mr. BARKLEY. I assure the Senator.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the Chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Herbert S. Phillips, of Florida, to be United States Attorney for the Southern District of Florida. (Mr. Phillips is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired June 6, 1940.)

ORDER FOR NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, it was—

Ordered, That the President be at once advised of all confirmations this day made, and that all resolutions of confirmation of nominations now in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate be transmitted to the President.

NAVY DEPARTMENT—ADMIRAL SAMUEL M. ROBINSON

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I submit a report approving the nomination of Rear Admiral Samuel M. Robinson to be Chief of the Bureau of Ships in the Navy Department.

This is a new department in the Navy, which was provided for by recent legislation. In view of the fact that it is perhaps the most important department in our Government at the present time, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Admiral Robinson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS FAVORABLY REPORTED

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I have reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, all of which have been approved by Senators from the respective States. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations be confirmed en bloc and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc; and, without objection, the President will be notified.

HERBERT S. PHILLIPS—UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination of Herbert S. Phillips to be United States attorney for the southern district of Florida. The nomination was favorably reported earlier in the day from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ANDREWS. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

MAURICE FRANCIS DONEGAN—UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report favorably the nomination of Maurice Francis Donegan to be United States attorney for the southern district of Iowa, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President, the nomination has the approval of the Judiciary Committee, and also of my colleague and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HERRING. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs, I report favorably a number of routine Army nominations, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, are these routine nominations?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are routine nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance, I report favorably a number of nominations in the Public Health Service, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Benjamin Harrison to be United States judge for the southern district of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert H. Hinckley to be Assistant Secretary.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask that that nomination go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that, as I understand, the House has passed a resolution providing for an adjournment until the 1st of July. I think it would be unfortunate for this nomination to go over for that length of time, in view of the fact that there is a vacancy to which Mr. Hinckley has been appointed. I hope the Senator will not insist that it go over, so that the Senate may take action on it, and the nomination may be confirmed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am at a loss to know what motion to make. I did not know that the nomination was on the calendar. I had no advice that it was on the calendar. I am not a member of any committee from which I could gain such advice. I am advised that it went on the calendar only this morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the nomination is not confirmed tonight, and we should recess until July 1, it would have to go over until then.

Mr. McCARRAN. For 1 week?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I must ask that the nomination go over until the Senate next convenes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Calendar.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a few moments ago a bill was passed protecting the Federal Reserve Bank in the matter of payments of foreign governmental central bank accounts. The understanding of the Senator from Michigan, the understanding I had, the statement made on the floor of the Senate, was that the bill as it was passed was the bill which had been approved by the Banking and Currency Committee this morning. It turns out that that is not the case; that the bill which we have passed is the original bill which was being considered yesterday and not the bill which we thought was being reported. It seems to me, under that condition, that we should reconsider the vote by which House bill 10127 was passed, it having been passed under a misunderstanding; and I so move.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have just consulted with the majority leader in the House, and I find that the statement made by the Senator from Colorado is correct. I was reliably informed that the House had passed the bill as the Senate committee reported it. I think that was the understanding of everybody here; so I concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado. In addition to that request, I think we ought to ask that the bill be reconsidered and passed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which House bill 10127 was passed is reconsidered.

Mr. BROWN. I now ask that the text of the Senate bill be substituted for that of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That subsection (e) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof the following: ", or for foreign banks or bankers, or for foreign states as defined in section 25 (b) of this act".

SEC. 2. Section 25 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Whenever (1) any Federal Reserve bank has received any property from or for the account of a foreign state which is recognized by the Government of the United States, or from or for the account of a central bank of any such state, and holds such property in the name of such foreign state or such central bank, (2) a representative of such foreign state who is recognized by the Secretary of State as being the accrediated representative of such foreign state to the Government of the United States has certified to the Secretary of State the name of a person as having authority to receive, control, or dispose of such property, and (3) the authority of such person to act with respect to such property is accepted and recognized by the Secretary of State, the payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property by such Federal Reserve bank to or upon the order of such person shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability of the Federal Reserve bank for or with respect to such property. No Federal Reserve bank shall be subject to any suit or other proceeding in any court, in its own name or in the name of any of its officers, directors, agents, or employees, as a consequence of any action taken by such bank, or with respect to any property disposed of, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph. No court shall have jurisdiction to restrain or enjoin a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph. For the purposes of this paragraph, (1) the term 'property' includes gold, silver, currency, credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein; (2) the term 'foreign state' includes any foreign government or any department, district, province, county, possession, or other similar governmental organization or subdivision of a foreign government, and any agency or instrumentality of any such foreign government or of any such organization or subdivision; (3) the term 'central bank' includes any foreign bank or banker authorized to perform any one or more of the functions of a central bank; and (4) the term 'person' includes any individual, or any corporation, partnership, association, or other similar organization."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry, and to put myself on record.

I do not understand why this legislation is necessary unless it is that we, as a Government, wish to recognize some one as owning and having the right to take and dispose of moneys or properties deposited in our Federal Reserve Banking System, or in any member thereof, who might not otherwise be entitled to receive the money. I am as confident as I am of anything on earth that ultimately this Government will be compelled to recognize the right of the real depositor in any of our banking institutions, and I do not see why it should not be.

I know that we can take away the right to sue; but whenever the United States resorts to that crude, barbaric method of denying the right of anybody, I do not care who he is, whether we like him or do not like him, the United States will cease to be the United States. We may take away the right of action on the part of any alien, on the part of any one who resides outside the United States; but it is not in keeping with the basic principles on which the American Government has rested.

I do not understand why this should be done. I do not understand why we should go to the utmost extremes to do anything that is not at all necessary. If it were necessary to impound moneys and to preserve the moneys or things of value until title could be asserted, that is one thing; but this proposal goes far beyond that.

This proposal simply says that whoever the Secretary of State recognizes as the proper person to withdraw funds on deposit shall have the exclusive right to do so. Yes; he may have it, but by what? Not by right; not by justice; not by the things upon which we have builded this Republic; but by the simple ipse dixit that we have the right to say to any foreign government or to any foreign depositor, "We will not let you have any access to our courts"; that is all.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield, because I should like to know why this extraordinary kind of thing is necessary.

Mr. BROWN. In answer to what the Senator says about the ipse dixit of an administrative officer, I desire to state that only 2 or 3 weeks ago we passed a similar bill—which I think passed the Senate without objection and unanimously—by which the President of the United States was authorized to determine through his agents, as between private depositors in foreign countries, the control of their bank deposits and their other credits, such as stock in corporations. We have to put that authority somewhere. This situation arises because of the fact that in the case of the Government of Denmark—I do not know whether or not it does arise in the case of Denmark, but I use that merely as an illustration—in the case of Holland, in the case of Belgium, and in the case of France, the accredited governments, accredited to the Secretary of State, are entitled to that money, not 5 years from now, not 10 years from now, but now. We have to place in somebody the authority to determine who is the accredited representative of the government, and we placed it in the Secretary of State.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to that, Mr. President. If the Senator is correct in regard to what we did some weeks ago—of which I was not personally aware, although I am charged with constructive knowledge as a Member of this body—I want to put myself on record right now, not as denying the power of the United States, through the Secretary of State or anyone else, to do what this bill proposes to do, but as denying the moral right to exclude from the courts the true owner of any property or money on deposit.

I understand that there must be some way of solving the problem perhaps quickly, and we can assume that responsibility, but I think we should not do it in an arbitrary way and say, "You have not access to our own courts to test your right to this property."

It seems to me perfectly plain that what is desired here is to let the proper person get the money out of the bank. I may sympathize with that; I am in position to understand it; but I do not think that the United States should say that if we have in fact made a mistake, although we have the power, we are going to deny to anyone else the right to come into our own courts, under our own procedure, under our own law, under our own system of equity, complying fully with all that we require of anyone to assert his rights—the right to an adjudication in the court.

Mr. President, my good friend the Senator from Michigan has referred to some other legislation we passed. I do not exactly understand what it was. I know he is reporting it accurately, but I do not think that the United States is called on to take a position, now or at any time, contrary to what we should take at all times. I understand, of course, that there may be deposits of foreign governments which have had their governmental machinery upset, and perhaps their sovereignty has changed or passed under the control at least of some other power, but I do not see why we should go clear out of our way to find some method of saying to people we do not like, "We will not recognize you at all," but, far more than that, "We will deny you the right, now or hereafter, to come into our own courts, under our own procedure, under our established principles of law and of equity, to assert your rights in our courts." It may be all right, but it is not necessary. It cannot be necessary.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield a moment, does he believe that it is the duty of the Federal courts of the United States to determine who constitutes the de facto government of another nation? That is a matter which it seems to me is exclusively within the hands of those who have charge of the foreign relations of the United States. I think it is perfectly proper to say that our courts are closed to a contest the sole end of which is to determine who the de facto government of another nation may be. I think historically, constitutionally, by custom and practice that has always been in the hands of the executive who has charge of the foreign relations of the United States, and in accordance with that theory this bill was drawn.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is not the question of a de jure government, as well as a de facto government, involved in the proposition?

Mr. BROWN. I think so.

Mr. KING. And the State Department obviously has the right to determine the de jure government as well as the de facto government.

Mr. GEORGE. Where are there any de facto governments?

Mr. KING. There are many in the world.

Mr. GEORGE. Where are they?

Mr. BROWN. That is the uncertainty.

Mr. GEORGE. Where are they?

Mr. BROWN. Is the Senator able to say who is the Government of Denmark tonight, or the Government of France? I think our Department of State should determine that question, and that is right where we put it in this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; that is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to do one more thing which should not be done, to arrogate to ourselves the right to determine whom we wish to favor and whom we wish to discriminate against. That is the way I feel about it. I have no objection to the Government determining who is the de facto or who is the de jure government, and I have no objection to the Government acting upon that in all matters of government.

Mr. President, to complete my statement, it is one thing to assert a power which we may have; it is quite another thing arbitrarily to exclude our own courts, to oust them of jurisdiction to determine what are actually the facts in any particular case.

I am not opposing the measure, but I wish to report myself as saying that I am quite sure that sometime in the future—I may not be here and others may not be here—we will be undoing exactly the kind of thing we are now doing, and we will be recognizing the actual owner of property, although for the time being, and under the pressure of the excitement of the moment, we may wish to arbitrarily designate who is entitled to receive money or other things of value on deposit in a banking institution which is, of course, largely under the control of the Federal Government. We will come back to it, and we will recognize the right of the real owners of the property, and we will be compelled, ultimately, finally, to admit that we had no right at all simply to say, "We are going arbitrarily to determine that your government, your official representative here, is not entitled to act for your government."

Talk about de facto governments! There are none. France is not a de facto government. Denmark is not a de facto government. Certainly, so far as central Europe is concerned, there are no de facto governments. There is no one there asserting the right to control the powers of any government in Europe whose power is actually challenged. There are countries in war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. If there are no de facto governments—and I am not quarreling with the Senator—then there must be de jure governments; and if they are de jure governments and our Government has recognized them, or, if it has not, it has the authority to recognize them, obviously it has the right in a controversy to determine that Government "A" is de jure and we recognize it, our State Department recognizes it, and obviously, if the bank here had under its control money of that de jure government, they would receive the decision of our State Department that government "A" was the de jure government, and, so far as they were concerned, they would say to the bank, "You are authorized to turn over the money to de jure government "A."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Georgia says there are no de facto governments in Europe today.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean those which are concerned in the war.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator says these countries are at war.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know whether Belgium is at war with Germany or not. The king says they are not at war. A cabinet which met for a time in Paris says that they are at war. A parliament, a legislative body, at a meeting somewhere in France—it was a rump parliament, it was not a majority of the legislative body of Belgium—determined they were still at war. I do not think the Senator or any one can determine right now who is governing Belgium. The situation may be different in France. However, that is the situation, I think, in Belgium.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question about any de facto governments in Europe. I think Hitler, with all that has been said about him, knows exactly what government he is dealing with tonight. He is not questioning whether they are de facto or de jure governments. He knows they are the governments. The countries have been overrun or conquered, but the governments stand.

This is not a bill to let the Secretary of State say who is the government, so much as it is to permit the Secretary of State to say who is the authorized representative or agent entitled to take out these deposits. The method proposed to be employed is a method which I think is not worthy of Americans. It is proposed to say, "We will not give you the right to come into our courts subsequently and assert your rights."

I merely want to put myself on record in that respect.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 20 to the bill, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 32 to the bill.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 83), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, June 22, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 1, 1940.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 16, 18, 27, 38, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 14, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 57, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 75; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For payment to Preston L. George, William S. Houston, John G. Nalley, and William H. Wannall, messengers on night duty during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $450 each; in all, $1,800, to be paid from the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year 1941."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$3,000,000" proposed in said amendment insert "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$16,200,000" proposed in said amendment insert "$15,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

"Enforcement of Tea Importation Act: For enabling the Federal Security Administrator to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897 (21 U. S. C. 41–50), entitled 'An Act to Prevent the Importation of Impure and Unwholesome Tea,' as amended, including payment of compensation and expenses of the members of the Board appointed under section 2 of the Act and all of the necessary officers and employees, both in Washington and in the field, fiscal year 1941, $30,094: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1940, no tea, or merchandise described as tea, shall be examined for importation into the United States, or released by the Collector, under said Act unless the importer or consignee of such tea or merchandise, prior to such examination, has paid for deposit into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, a fee of 3.5 cents for each hundredweight or fraction thereof of such tea and merchandise."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Appraisers Stores Building, Houston, Texas: The limit of cost of the Appraisers Stores Building Project at Houston, Texas, is hereby increased by $75,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numberd 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure "$75,000,000" proposed in said amendment insert: "$50,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$13,980" proposed in said amendment insert "$7,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, That no part of this sum allocated for expenditure in connection with the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle shall be used in any State without the request of the Governor of such State"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "to remain available until expended,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"All moneys available on July 1, 1940, under the appropriation 'Construction of Buildings, Utilities, and Appurtenances at Military Posts' may be used in connection with the purposes of such appropriation for the employment of personnel at the seat of government or elsewhere without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law relating thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Not to exceed 5 per centum of any of the appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1941 may be transferred with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to any other of such appropriations, but no appropriation shall be increased more than 5 per centum thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 20 and 32.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 10104, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 22, 1940.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending

June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

"Subdivision (3) of subsection (b) of section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1941, is hereby amended by inserting the following after the word 'training': 'for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national-defense purposes' "; and

That the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 32 to said bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 32.

The motion was agreed to.

BOULDER DAM—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder Power Plant by the United States, directly or through agents, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I regret very much that there has been a difference of opinion between the two Senators from New Mexico and me. The matter in question is of great importance to my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada perhaps did not understand that the bill in charge of the Senator from Michigan has not been acted upon.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, may we dispose of that bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. If the bill will not be acted upon immediately, I shall proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is just as convenient for me to speak at the present time as at any other time.

As I have said, the matter in question is of vast importance to my State. It is of very slight importance to New Mexico.

We spent 5 years trying to get the Colorado River States together so we could build the Boulder Dam. The Boulder Dam is not in New Mexico. It is not in Colorado. It is not in Wyoming. It is between Nevada and Arizona. We divided the waters; half went to the upper States and half to the lower States, and when the upper States received that they got all that was coming to them. Ever since that they have been trying to graft their projects on our State.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wanted to be sure what the Senator said. Did I understand the Senator to say "graft"?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes. Mind you, I was not referring to the Senator from New Mexico. If the Senator thought that——

Mr. HATCH. I understand, but the Senator was referring, as I understood, to the upper basin States.

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly. There is a little stream that runs down through New Mexico, which sometimes has water in it. Sometimes it has too much water in it. There is a question of whether or not a dam can be installed there which will pay for itself by furnishing water in sufficient amount for irrigation. As a matter of fact, the engineers have reported on it, and they say it will not pay.

Nevertheless we have desired to please the people of New Mexico. When I say "we," I mean those who would pay for these projects in New Mexico; that is, the users of power in Nevada, Arizona, and California.

What do we propose? We propose that some of the power allotted to our people shall be allocated to New Mexico to develop a project there, if there is a project there. That is what we propose. Our people will pay for it out of our half of the water. After working for 20 years, an agreement was reached to divide the water power. We built a project, paying for it out of the money received from the power—paying back the money advanced by the Government. The upper States say, "We want a part of the profits of your dam, profits derived from users of power in your States, to build up our States."

The Boulder Dam bill was passed in 1928, and a number of Senators were interested in it. It took us 5 years to pass the bill. Why did it take so long? Because of the greed of certain States. It was finally passed. The upper States had nothing to do with it, but they had their half of the water.

However, in the hasty legislation of 1928 it was agreed to pay too much interest to the Government. When we tried to readjust the matter so as to give our citizens the same cheap power that citizens of other States received, what happened? The Senators from New Mexico rose, as they rose tonight, and said, "Very well, we will let you have this legislation to reduce the interest rates. We will let you have this legislation to postpone the interest rates on $25,000,000 for flood control"—for what? "If you will give us something." That is the whole story. "Give us something. Give us something."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I decline to yield. The question of the right to power is a matter of State interest. The question of the development of reclamation in the State of New Mexico is a State question. It might be imagined that the State has never considered this question. The Governor of the State of New Mexico did consider it. He joined in with the Governors of the seven other Colorado River States and appointed a commission, which conferred for months and months with the Interior Department and with the power users, to see how much money could be gotten out of the project; and they finally unanimously agreed on a bill which passed the House of Representatives, which is identical with the bill which passed the Senate, except that after the bill was passed by the House the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] offered an amendment which provided that a certain project in his State should be recognized, and that some of the money might be used to investigate to see whether or not it was feasible; and, if the project were found feasible, some of the money was to be used to do something with it.

It is the first time in any such bill as this that a special project has been mentioned. Members of the Senate agreed to the amendment largely by reason of their love for both Senators from New Mexico. It was felt that New Mexico had only one project in the State, and that it should be investigated and built immediately. In the conference between the two Houses today I fought to have that provision retained in the bill. The Senator from New Mexico himself wrote the provision that the project should be immediately investigated from these funds, and, if found feasible, should be built. I thought that was the most extraordinary proposal I ever heard in my life, but I supported it. It is now in the bill. It is now in the conference report. The Senators from New Mexico do not want it. Why? Because there are two other amendments. So far as I am concerned, I should agree to them, of course. They would be of interest to the State of Nevada. It is to the interest of the State of Nevada to use the word "equal" instead of "equitable" in referring to the division. We say that if the project is held to be not feasible, the money should not be divided seven ways. It should be equitably used in the distribution and development of projects in the seven States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senators from New Mexico are not objecting to Nevada doing what Nevada pleases with whatever money Nevada obtains under the bill. All we ask is that New Mexico be allowed to do as she pleases with the crumbs which have been given to her since Boulder Dam was built.

Under the provisions of the modification made by the conferees, the division is to be equitable; but someone else, not New Mexico, is to determine what is equitable. We usually get the short end of it. Under the modification made by the conferees, the Department of Interior and the Bureau of Reclamation are to decide what is feasible. We maintain that under the standards of the Reclamation Bureau it is possible that a project might not be feasible according to those standards; but if it is not feasible under the standards applied to reclamation projects, and the crumbs belong to us, we still maintain that New Mexico could possibly find a feasible project under New Mexico regulations. That is all we ask.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am addressing the question to the junior Senator from New Mexico. Is it not true that under the present set-up of the Boulder Dam project, the State of New Mexico would not receive anything until after the amortization had been completed?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. And that would be when?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Probably 1983.

Mr. McCARRAN. So the proposal with respect to New Mexico is very much more favorable than the existing law.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Provided it satisfies someone in Washington. We want the proposal to be favorable if it suits the people of the State of New Mexico.

Mr. McCARRAN. It might be possible in the future for the State of New Mexico to get something.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Under the present law, the State of New Mexico has a definite program within a reasonable time.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Very well. However, it is also true that if the pending bill does not pass, and the existing law continues, we shall be paying higher rates than we are now paying for the power developed by Boulder Dam.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. Let me ask a further question. Would the State of New Mexico gain anything by that circumstance?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; but we desire to decide what is beneficial for New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 83

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, June 22, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 1, 1940.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I still have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the resolution laid down by the Chair a privileged resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have not yielded to the Senator from Kentucky. I am still discussing the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As a matter of parliamentary procedure, the Chair will say to the Senator from Nevada that he yielded for the purpose of receiving a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. PITTMAN. I decline further to yield.

As a matter of fact, as the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has said, there never was such a landfall from Nevada to Arizona and New Mexico in the history of this Government. The money which is to be given to New Mexico comes from the people who buy power in Nevada, Arizona, and California. Is not that true?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is not that power developed by water that goes to Nevada from the State of New Mexico?

Mr. PITTMAN. Very little from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. There is more water going down the San Juan River into Boulder Dam in Nevada than there is from the whole State of Nevada. More than 2,400,000 acre-feet of water go into Boulder Dam, which develops the power which, under the bill, will be sold for practically nothing elsewhere, not in New Mexico, developed by water that comes from the State of New Mexico; and they want to give us a few crumbs and then tell us how we may use it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Did we not leave half of it for you to use?

Mr. CHAVEZ. But until we have that project it will go to Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. But until you use it you want our money, do you not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Until we build the project you are going to get the water, and you are still getting the water. That is what we are complaining about. We want the project so that the water will not go to Boulder Dam.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is nothing new. Away back in 1928, after 5 years of fighting, we had the seven-State compact, the treaty between the seven States. We divided the water half-and-half—half of it to the three lower States of Nevada, Arizona, and California; half of it to New Mexico, Colorado, and Wyoming. We proceeded to use ours. We sold it to our people; and when we commenced to get a little revenue the upper States, which had their water but were not using their water and had no use for their water, commenced to try to get some of this money. Under the bill they could not get any money until after the dam was paid for, in 50 years.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield; yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I may, I will state the situation as I see it and as I have seen it.

The State of New Mexico has nothing coming now, under the existing law, within the memory of man or within the contemplation——

Mr. PITTMAN. Probably after 50 years.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill now proposed will give to the State of New Mexico a sum of money very much worth while. I am not in possession of the figures, but I should say a division of about $7,000,000.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. May I conclude my statement? I am interrupting my colleague.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the Senator is not interrupting me.

Mr. McCARRAN. The fact of the matter is that the whole Boulder Dam project was worked out by the State of Nevada. It was worked out in contemplation of a great future. It was worked out along scientific lines. It was worked out so that all the lower basin and the upper basin States might profit thereby. Not a single selfish move was put forward by Nevada.

Let me illustrate, if I may, in the time of my colleague. During the existence of the present law the State of Nevada may enjoy something over $1,000,000 per year, according to the Mead tables, set down and published; but we have relinquished that for a stabilized situation. In other words, instead of a million dollars a year this year and perhaps $200,000 some years hence, we have struck a mean amounting to $300,000 a year; but in striking that mean we saw to it, or at least worked along with the State of New Mexico, the State of Arizona, and the other States of the upper and lower basins, to the end of having greater benefit come to the State of New Mexico. That greater benefit was admitted by the able junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] in reply to my questions propounded only a moment ago. I am only drawing this matter to the attention of the Senate, in the time of my colleague, so that something of the whole situation may be understood by the Senate. The State of New Mexico, if this bill passes, will be 100,000 times—and I use that figure very loosely—better off than if it rests on the present existing law. If this bill is defeated, what becomes of the increment that goes to the State of New Mexico? There will not be any.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Suppose New Mexico is willing to stand for that. If New Mexico is not getting anything now, why is there such anxiety to have the bill passed without New Mexico being protected?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. McCARRAN. Who is anxious to have it passed?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I mean the proponents of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. The State of New Mexico is one of the proponents of the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly; go right ahead. We have all evening.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from Nevada stated that Nevada is getting some benefits from this bill; and no one is complaining. We want Nevada to get everything to which it is entitled, and to do with those benefits as Nevada pleases; but in the case of the little share we may have—and a penny would be more than we are now getting—we maintain that as a free State that penny should be spent and used as the State of New Mexico desires. That is the complaint.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt my colleague again?

Mr. PITTMAN. For a little while.

Mr. McCARRAN. I voted in the committee on the very principle the junior Senator from New Mexico has now announced; but let it be remembered that we were voting to give to New Mexico something that New Mexico was going to get under the new law, not under the old law.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is true; but New Mexico was also giving something else to the other States. I know that the Senator from Nevada on my right [Mr. PITTMAN] has said there was not any water there; but let me state to the junior Senator from Nevada that 2,400,000 acre-feet flow into Nevada from the State of New Mexico, and into Boulder Dam. Of that 2,400,000 acre-feet, the most that New Mexico wants and can use is 350,000 acre-feet, and Nevada will get the benefit of the remainder that flows from the State of New Mexico; so the other States are not giving New Mexico a thing. We are giving the other States something. But we insist, and I think justly so, that whether we get a penny or a million dollars, there shall be no provisions in the law which will prevent New Mexico from doing with her penny or with her million dollars as New Mexico pleases. That is the question.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for yielding to me.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, we will end the talk about furnishing water to the lower basin, because under an act of Congress we divided the water. New Mexico has her water and we have our water.

Mr. CHAVEZ. We cannot use our half of it until we get a project.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then do not graft on our part, because we are having a tough time for ourselves. As a matter of fact, we are not using New Mexico's water, we are using our half of the water. We are taxing our people to pay for the electric lights to pay the amortization cost. If there is anything over, we are going to pay some of it to New Mexico, not because we owe it to them but because we like them. But the amount we will pay New Mexico will depend on whether this bill passes. If it does not pass, we will not pay them anything for 50 years. If the bill passes, we will pay them seven or eight million dollars. They are not satisfied with that. They think there is a little chance of getting some more.

The Senator offered an amendment to the House bill, and I wish to say that the House bill was worked on for two and a half months by the Governors and commissioners of seven States, and agreed on. It came to the Senate, and the Senator was not satisfied with what his commission in New Mexico did, he was not satisfied with what the Governor did, and he offered an amendment.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The commission of New Mexico never did agree until the amendment was inserted.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will not disagree with that; but the commission agreed to the House bill. Did the commission agree to the House bill?

Mr. CHAVEZ. They certainly did, because the Senate bill was acted on before the House bill was acted on in committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. I mean, did they testify in the committee that they were in favor of the House bill, or not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. They did not, but the commissioner from Nevada and the commissioner from Wyoming and the commissioner from Colorado and the commissioner from Arizona testified before the Senate committee that they were satisfied, and they supported the amendment I inserted in the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. A commissioner of Utah testified before our committee—and the Senator heard him—that all 14 commissioners agreed on the bill which went to the House. That was the testimony.

Let me read what the Senator offered as an amendment:

> Any moneys accruing for projects in New Mexico and appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1) the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the Transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico, and (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as adequately to protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, and, after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine.

Is that not what the Senator offered?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. What did the committee add to that? That was not in the House bill, was it?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; but it was in the Senate bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was not in the House bill, was it?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It was not.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was not inserted until the bill came to the Senate, and that is what we acted on. The Senator added that in the committee, did he not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. To the Senate bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. How did the conference committee change it? Listen to this. This is the addition of the conference committee. The House did not have it in at all:

> Provided, That if the said project shall be determined by the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Secretary of the Interior as being infeasible, or if any project presented in any State shall be declared to be infeasible, then such funds shall be equitably divided by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the necessity for the development of the projects of the various States.

That is all that was added.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is the one to which we are objecting because of what it will do to New Mexico. Unless the Secretary of the Interior decides that a project is feasible, then New Mexico does not get a thing, but the money that should go to New Mexico will be distributed, according to what the Secretary of the Interior may think proper, in some other State.

Mr. PITTMAN. Was there ever an intention in connection with the original act except for reclamation? What do you want it for, cattle raising?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not for cattle raising, but to use our own sovereignty, because the Secretary of the Interior, correctly so, and the Bureau of Reclamation, correctly so, may decide that, according to the standards of reclamation, a project submitted to them may not be feasible, but the State of New Mexico may decide that some other kind of project may be feasible, so far as New Mexico is concerned. We want the money that belongs to us to be used by New Mexico. If the Secretary of the Interior wants to give some of the money away, I do not want him to give away New Mexico's money.

Mr. PITTMAN. We are amending the Boulder Dam Act, are we not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. We are trying to.

Mr. PITTMAN. And that act provides for the investigation and study of the upper river for reclamation purposes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator want to change that, or not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not want it changed so long as New Mexico's interests are protected.

Mr. PITTMAN. New Mexico does not get any money for 50 years, under that act.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is all right.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, it will get seven or eight million dollars for reclamation. You do not want it for reclamation, you want it for cattle raising.

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; we do not want it for cattle raising, and we do not get a cent if the Bureau of Reclamation decides that the project is not feasible. But, after all, the average State in the West has its engineers and its reclamation bureau, and they can decide on what is feasible in Utah, or Nevada, or Arizona, or elsewhere.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the junior Senator from New Mexico will admit that no one has been more sympathetic or more in accord with his views than I have. I attended every one of the meetings of the committee. I went along with him because I thought that New Mexico, whatever money was coming to her, should have a right to designate how it should be expended. But the able Senator from New Mexico will undoubtedly agree that this is all under the Department of the Interior, specifically under the Bureau of Reclamation. I have never yet known, and I do not think the Senator from New Mexico can recall, when it was that any State could designate to the Bureau of Reclamation where a project should be. If I am in error in that, I should be glad to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Was there not testimony submitted both by the Bureau of Reclamation and by several persons who appeared before the committee that this was the only project of which the State of New Mexico could take advantage and that there was nothing else?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator is largely correct in that statement.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I assure the Senator that this is the only place where we can take advantage of a project.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, this seems to be the only feasible project in New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is either feasible or otherwise, but it is the only project. We say that if the Reclamation Bureau states that we cannot do it, according to the standards of reclamation, possibly New Mexico can go there and build some kind of a project that will be of some benefit.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is approximately $7,000,000 coming to the upper basin States out of this new bill, there is nothing coming to the upper basin States out of the old law for about 50 years.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I realize that.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let us take $7,000,000 and divide it, let us say, equally, which would give the State of New Mexico approximately $300,000, or thereabouts, we will say. That goes into the Bureau of Reclamation the same as any other reclamation increment; is that true?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is true.

Mr. McCARRAN. In respect to all other reclamation increments, the money coming into the Reclamation Bureau has been expended by the Bureau of Reclamation; is that not true?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; but this particular water course is the only one we can take advantage of.

Mr. McCARRAN. I realize that it is the only one. If the money were divided equally, then the Reclamation Bureau would say "That is the only one, so the money would be expended on that project."

Mr. CHAVEZ. But if they said it was not feasible, then the money could be used by the Reclamation Bureau elsewhere. Is that not true?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I want the Senator to read the modification of the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, under the present law, the Senator's State would not get anything for 50 years. Under the proposed measure the States would receive $7,000,000. We have placed a proviso in the measure that if the proposed project is not feasible the money shall go into the general fund. However, the Senator wants to keep it, even if the project is not feasible. That is all there is to this amendment.

I went into this proposal deliberately to help the Senator from New Mexico, and I am still trying to do so. I thought that what he wanted was his project mentioned in the bill, with instructions to the Secretary of the Interior to investigate it. I seem to have been wrong about it. The Senator does not seem to want it investigated.

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; I do not want the Secretary of the Interior to say that the use of the money is not feasible in the State of New Mexico, so it will be used in Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is our money. I will say now that I hope that someone other than the Senator from Navada will be substituted on the committee who may be able to agree with the Senator from New Mexico. I thought I was helping the Senator's State, but I do not seem to be. The Senator seems to be offended at me for some reason.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from New Mexico is not offended. The Senator from New Mexico is sure that the Senator from Nevada has tried to help.

Mr. PITTMAN. I certainly tried.

Mr. CHAVEZ. But there is a little difference of opinion as to the interpretation of that modification, and we have requested, in all sincerity of purpose——

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator wants me to put a provision in the measure to the effect that Nevada's money shall go to New Mexico——

Mr. CHAVEZ. No. I want New Mexico to keep all the money that belongs to her.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will think that over.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I want Nevada to get everything she is entitled to.

Mr. PITTMAN. This matter is the unfinished business, as I understand. I hope that by substituting someone else for me on the conference committee, something will be worked out that will be satisfactory to the Senator from New Mexico by the time the Senate again meets.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8172) to amend section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, relative to the Alaska salmon fishery.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6572) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9491. An act relating to compensation of former employees of the Railway Mail Service in certain positions and reinstated prior to August 14, 1937;

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10106. An act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING

Mr. GUFFEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 287), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining is hereby authorized to employ for the remainder of the Seventy-sixth Congress an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JULY 1, 1940

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 83, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, June 22, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 1, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the concurrent resolution sent over from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I send to the desk a unanimous-consent request and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent request will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that, during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives, and that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign bills and joint resolutions found truly enrolled by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 83, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) Saturday, June 22, 1940, the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, again we approach Thy throne with glad assurance, for Thou art man's unfailing friend, his ever-present help, and everlasting hope. In the revelation of Thyself we see Thy power to accomplish all that Thou hast promised, to confer upon us all that we need, and to do for us abundantly above all that we can ask or think.

We pray that the barriers which separate us from Thee may be submerged by a renewed consecration. May we supremely desire to live out our days in faith and in faithful obedience to the eternal will of God, for in Thy will is our peace.

Wilt Thou grant unto our President, our Speaker, and all leaders in the life of our Republic, during these perilous days, vision to recognize Thy will and courage to meet its challenging demands. Help us to see clearly, to walk uprightly, and to endure heroically. May we have within our hearts the testimony that we are serving our generation according to Thy holy will.

This we ask for the sake of suffering humanity and for the sake of Him who gave Himself for the life of the world. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 9, 10, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, and 32; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 201. From the appropriations for 'Regular Supplies of the Army,' 'Clothing and Equipage,' 'Army Transportation,' 'Signal Service of the Army,' 'Air Corps, Army,' 'Medical and Hospital Department,' 'Engineer Service, Army,' 'Ordnance Service and Supplies,' 'Chemical Warfare Service,' and 'Seacoast Defenses,' for the fiscal year 1941, not to exceed a total of $2,658,967 may be applied to the employment of persons and the procurement of supplies and services and printing and binding at the seat of government, and to pay of employees of the Finance Department in the field, under the following heads and within the respective limitations specified, as follows:

"Office of Chief of Staff, $96,980;
"Adjutant General's Office, $158,700;
"Office of the Judge Advocate General, $13,920;
"Office of the Chief of Finance, $60,120;
"Office of the Quartermaster General, $78,960;
"Office of the Chief Signal Officer, $67,490;
"Office of the Chief of Air Corps, $40,760;
"Office of Chief of Engineers, $130,260;
"Office of Chief of Ordnance, $719,740;
"Office of Chief of Chemical Warfare Service, $46,380;
"Office of Chief of Infantry, $2,880;
"Office of Chief of Cavalry, $2,880;
"Office of Chief of Field Artillery, $4,320;
"Office of Chief of Coast Artillery, $5,760;
"Office of Chief of Chaplains, $1,440;
"National Guard Bureau, War Department, $10,000;
"In all, salaries, War Department, $2,057,700.

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

"Contingent expenses, War Department, $216,772.
"Printing and binding, War Department, $177,995.

"MILITARY ACTIVITIES

"Finance Service, $206,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 301. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, where necessary, to exceed the statutory limit on repairs and alterations to vessels during the fiscal year 1941."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by such amendment, strike out "shall" and insert "may"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) "Making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Treasury Department

On No. 1: Appropriates $50,000, instead of $98,880 as proposed by the Senate for salaries, Office of the Commandant, Coast Guard.

War Department—Civil functions

On No. 2: Strikes out the appropriation of $8,127,000, inserted by the Senate, for maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works.

War Department—Military activities

On No. 3: Appropriates $293,330,282 for "Air Corps, Army," as proposed by the Senate, instead of $249,830,282 as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 4 and 5: The House bill authorizes not to exceed $2,000,000 of the appropriation for expediting production to be used for the erection, equipment, and operation of a "pilot plant" for the beneficiation of manganese ores and the production of metallic manganese therefrom by the "electrolytic process." The Senate amendment makes the amount available for a "pilot plant or plants" and provides for the use of other processes in addition to the electrolytic process. The House accepts the Senate amendments.

On Nos. 6 and 7: The Senate added section 201 granting unlimited authority for the use of certain War Department field appropriations for personal services and other expenses at the seat of Government. The House accepts the Senate amendment modified so as to set forth the specific amounts for various War Department bureaus and offices for personal services at the seat of Government and other departmental expenses in accordance with the sums in the Budget estimates totaling $2,658,967, which may be expended from such appropriations.

Navy Department

On No. 8: Appropriates $7,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Naval Reserve, and repeals, as proposed by the Senate, the limitations in the Naval Appropriation Act, 1941, limiting the number of drills of Naval Reserves to 48 per annum and limiting the number and rank of officers of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve who may be employed on active duty in the fiscal year 1941 out of the appropriation in such Naval Appropriation Act, 1941.

On Nos. 9 and 10: Eliminates the increases of $300,000 and $100,000, respectively, made by the Senate in the appropriations for the Bureaus of Engineering and Construction and Repair, for facilities for Canton Island.

On Nos. 11 and 12, relating to the Bureau of Ordnance: Increases the appropriation for Ordnance and Ordnance Stores, Navy, by $9,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, to provide for increased powder manufacture and storage facilities at Indianhead, Md., and to provide for additional armament and ammunition for the Marine Corps.

On Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, relating to Public Works, Bureau of Yards and Docks: Makes a technical correction in connection with the limit of cost for the shipbuilding dock, Philadelphia Navy Yard; increases the limit of cost in the bill for the Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, R. I., $24,000,000, to the authorized limit of cost, $24,204,000; strikes out the proposed authorization of $1,500,000, inserted by the Senate for the naval air station, Canton Island; increases the limit of cost in the bill for the naval air station, Tongue Point, Oreg., $1,000,000, to the authorized limit of cost, $2,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; includes the amendment, proposed by the Senate, providing that the pipe line in connection with the development of water supply, naval station, Key West, Fla., may be built in cooperation with an agency of the State of Florida; inserts the requirement, proposed by the Senate, that the fixed fee to be paid any contractor as a result of any contract hereafter entered into under the authority of the act of April 25, 1939, shall not exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy; and inserts the authority, proposed by the Senate, allowing a variation of 10 percent either upward or downward in the limits of cost of specific projects in the accompanying bill, and the Naval Appropriation Act, 1941, with the requirement that the aggregate of all such limits of cost shall not be exceeded by the exercise of such authority.

On Nos. 20 and 21, relating to the Bureau of Aeronautics: Increases the amount of the appropriation in the House bill from $22,585,000 to $22,885,000 as proposed by the Senate, and increases the amount that may be expended thereof for maintenance, etc., from $870,400, as proposed by the House, to $1,170,400, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 22: Appropriates $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for general expenses, Marine Corps.

On Nos. 23, 24, and 25, relating to alterations of naval vessels: Provides a direct appropriation of $24,360,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of a direct appropriation of $14,360,000 and a contract authorization of $10,000,000, as proposed by the House, and strikes out the authority proposed by the House bill for exceeding the statutory limit on repairs of vessels in connection with the appropriation. This authority is provided generally for all appropriations for the fiscal year 1941 in section 301.

On No. 26: Makes a technical correction.

On No. 27: Appropriates $10,000 for the Office of the Secretary of the Navy to provide the salary for the position of Under Secretary of the Navy.

On No. 28: Appropriates $25,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, for an emergency fund for naval auxiliaries and patrol craft instead of a contract authorization for such purposes, as proposed by the House.

On No. 29: The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to exceed the statutory limit on repairs and alterations to vessels during the existing emergency and with the funds appropriated in title III of the accompanying bill to acquire and convert auxiliaries for service with the fleet. The House accepts the Senate amendment modified so as to limit such authority to the fiscal year 1941 instead of to the existing emergency and to eliminate the language proposed in connection with the acquisition and conversion of auxiliaries. The latter language is eliminated for the reason that it is the opinion of the conference committee that the authority already granted in connection with the appropriations made in the bill for such purposes is sufficiently broad to accomplish the ends sought.

On No. 30: The Naval Appropriation Act, 1941, contains a requirement that the Secretary of the Navy, in filling out the allowances of naval vessels above 85 percent of complement, shall first assign to active duty for limited periods of training such naval reservists as will voluntarily accept active duty—not to exceed 5,000—and provided that to the extent such naval reservists are not available, the Secretary shall recruit regular enlisted men in the Navy to the extent necessary to provide an enlisted personnel of not to exceed 170,000 by July 1, 1941. The Senate amendment amends this latter provision by eliminating the limitation on the number of enlisted men to be attained by July 1, 1941, and directs the Secretary of the Navy to recruit regular enlisted men in the Navy to the extent that naval reservists are not available. The conference agreement accepts the Senate amendment modified so as to change the amendment from a "requirement" to recruit regular enlisted men when naval reservists are not available to "authority" to do so.

On No. 31: The Senate amendment authorizes the detail of enlisted men to the Office of Naval Intelligence during the fiscal year 1941. The House accepts the Senate amendment.

On No. 32: Corrects a section number.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is the last of the so-called emergency defense bills. There is nothing controversial in it so far as I know.

The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $1,381,917,147; amount of the bill as passed by the Senate, $1,488,353,027; amount of Senate recessions, $8,575,880; amount of House recessions, $97,860,000; amount of bill as agreed upon, $1,479,777,147; amount of contract authorizations $282,736,761. The total amount of direct appropriations and contract authorizations is $1,762,513,908.

Of the increase of $97,860,000 over the House bill, $35,000,000 consists of changing contracts in House bill to direct appropriations and $43,500,000 is for airplane engines for the Army Air Corps.

So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing controversial in the bill, and I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report brings the total of the money made available for the Army and Navy and for defense purposes up to approximately $6,000,000,000 at this session of Congress. It makes the total appropriations of this Congress, without reappropriations or contract authorizations being figured in, practically $15,900,000,000. Many of the items in the $15,000,000,000 are things we could have gotten along without and that we should have gotten along without. As far as the items for national defense go, and for putting our defenses in order, the minority has unanimously gone along with the majority in providing every cent that was needed.

The President at last has made a move with reference to the War Department and the Navy Department. Regardless of whatever else it does, I hope he will let these men administer the Departments and not pass out his orders to the generals of the Army and the admirals of the Navy through William H. McReynolds, Harry Hopkins, and Tommy Corcoran; but the President has not shown that he is prepared to go along for defense. He has named Sidney Hillman to take charge of the training of young men and young women for war purposes. God knows it is bad enough if we have to have conscription in the United States, but to have conscription under the training of such a man is absolutely the reverse of national defense. I hope that if such a thing comes into this Congress that this House will stand against that sort of performance.

The President has also submitted Budget estimates for a new program for the T. V. A. totaling $65,000,000 and an immediate appropriation of $25,000,000, which, in the report of the Senate Appropriations Committee, thank God, have been ruled out. I hope that this Congress will not follow the President in trying to waste more money than is absolutely needed for national defense and that we can stick to honest national defense in the efforts we make in the next few days and the next few months. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, repeatedly during this session I have called attention to the fact that the war in Europe might end by September and to the inevitable effect of the close of the war upon farm prices. Now, that prediction has come true even earlier than anticipated. To all intents and purposes the war, so far as it affects the American market, is over, and its repercussion upon the price of farm products is already painfully evident. Wheat which sold only a few weeks ago at $1.13 on the Chicago market, is today bringing less than 60 cents on the farm.

Hogs which sold for more than a dime last September today bring less than a nickel. Cotton has not yet felt the full effect of the blow but its reaction to postwar conditions is merely a question of time. It is selling at a dime on the farm today; but with all ports of export closed is certain to fall slowly but steadily as foreign markets are closed and exports dwindle. I shall later insert in the RECORD a table showing the cessation of all exports of American farm products to foreign countries as Germany takes possession of them. In Norway, for example, where we imported as high as 46 percent, immediately upon German occupation American imports dropped to less than 3 percent. And the effect will become more pronounced as occupation and consolidation of customs administration proceeds. Now, by a remarkable contrast, the cessation of the war has had no effect on wage scales or industrial prices. In fact wages are higher in every city in America and the price of all manufactured commodities is advancing.

I can insert into the RECORD ample statistics on that, but owing to the limited time——

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I much regret that the limited time I have will not permit. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. ENGEL. Merely to ask the gentleman to place in the RECORD the price of wheat——

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his cooperation, and I will later follow his suggestion; but for the present I hope the gentleman will permit me to proceed at this time.

Astonishing as it may seem, although farm prices are in a tailspin and are dropping precipitously, wages are increasing and prices of all nonfarm commodities are stiffening. We have a very good example of that right here in the House. Just yesterday every Member of Congress was notified through the mails that after today he will not be able to buy a typewriter at the Government price of $70, because under the law the price of typewriters has been fixed, and typewriters must hereafter be sold at $100. It costs about $18 to make a typewriter selling for $100, but in the Government, where we buy in large quantities, and in commercial schools, where they handle machines in bulk, they have been able to buy them for $70. However, from now on the price has been fixed, and you will have to pay $100 for the $18 typewriter. If time permitted, I could give you an endless number of similar instances. Macy's, the great New York department store, advertised in full-page advertisements recently quoting parallel prices showing that such price maintenance increased the price to the consumer by heavy percentages.

Now, there is a reason for everything. This did not just happen. Why is it that only farm prices fall while wages and industrial prices are not affected? Just one thing, my friends—legislation. Laws passed by this Congress keep labor wages up and keep freight rates and industrial prices up. I do not have to name the long list of acts passed by Congress which arbitrarily support labor and industry. All of you are familiar with them, and most of you have helped pass them. And lack of similar legislation leave farm prices subject to every adverse wind and not only keep them below parity but keep them shifting from day to day, always to the loss of the farmer and all business and professional men dependent either directly or indirectly on farm patronage. This is not a new development. For years political parties have been promising agriculture economic equality with labor and industry. But we have had no opportunity here in the House to vote on legislation that would carry out that promise. While the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Committee on Labor and other committees of the House have been bringing out these laws which maintain wages and factory prices, the Committee on Agriculture has boondoggled with minor bills on rates of interest, farm loans, farm tenancy, and with other details, but which did not affect the one vital thing, namely, the price of farm products. You can give a man the lowest interest in the world and lend him all the money he wants, and buy him the best farm in the State; but if you do not give him a price that will pay him back the cost of production, the sheriff will take away everything he has, as certain as taxes and interest roll around.

There is a remarkable and significant attitude in respect to farm legislation by the metropolitan newspapers and the great industrial and labor organizations of this country. Whenever you bring in a bill to help farm tenancy, or to lend the farmer money, or to reduce the rates of interest, they are back of it, and they assure us they want to help the farmer, but whenever you suggest bringing in any legislation which would stabilize farm products, which would give the farmer parity prices, you find either emphatic opposition or a deep silence on the part of these interests which are so solicitous for the farmer's welfare on boondoggling legislation of the character just mentioned.

Why is that? Because there is a well-defined and well-organized policy throughout the Nation, based on the theory that this is an industrial country and that we must have cheap food so that we can have cheap labor and produce cheap industrial products to compete with the other industrial countries of the world. American labor does not compete with foreign labor for the home market. American industry does not compete with foreign industry in the United States. They are all protected, but the American farmer is in competion with the Chinese coolie, the South American peon, and the European peasant. It is interesting to note that the Washington newspapers, for example, which have been decrying parity-price legislation, which so roundly abused us when we made an appropriation for parity prices, the only thing we could do under the legislation that we had—it was interesting to note that at the time when we were getting $24 for hogs and 35 cents for cotton and $2.20 for wheat those same newspapers were selling on the streets of this city for 1 cent.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Now, when hogs are down to a nickel, and wheat is down to 60 cents and cotton down to a dime, that same paper is selling on the streets of the city for 3 cents.

But, why has not the Committee on Agriculture functioned these 4 years in the face of the greatest need in the economic set-up of the entire country? The excuse offered by the Committee on Agriculture the last time we discussed the matter on the floor of the House was that they did not have time. They said it was too near the end of the session. So they went into hibernation. They refused even to hold hearings on the subject. We pleaded with them. We said, You ought at least to be looking into it. You ought to be calling before you the men who should be heard on the various propositions that have been made to stabilize farm prices.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will pardon me. I wish I had the time. But I have only 2 minutes. The Committee on Agriculture excused themselves for not coming to the relief of the hard-pressed farmers by saying it was too near the end of the session. But since that time the Committee on Ways and Means has met, held hearings, brought out, and passed one of the most intricate tax bills in the revenue annals of the Government. Since that time we have enacted one of the most elaborate defense plans ever formulated in time of peace; but the Committee on Agriculture was either too tired or too slow or too disinterested to even consider the matter; to even call in witnesses to hear suggestions on a remedy or ask the Department of Agriculture for information or advice—and that in one of the most serious crises in the history of the Nation.

No; we are not going to adjourn. We have the summer before us, my friends on the Committee on Agriculture, and I hope that the 6 farmers out of the 16 members of that committee will use their efforts to give the farmers and the Nation a little service.

You know, back in the Sixty-ninth Congress they packed the Committee on Agriculture, both the Democrats and the Republicans packed their respective Representatives on the committee so that they would not report out the McNary-Haugen bill. They thought they had it buried for all time to come, but in spite of having packed the committee the demand from the country was so insistent that we were able to report it out by one vote. We no longer pack the Committee on Agriculture, but it should give a little more attention to the jurisdiction committed to its care. Every man of the Committee on Labor is interested in labor. That committee is meeting every day, bringing into this House at every opportunity legislation in behalf of labor.

I wish to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the Committee on Labor. It is an admirable committee and has functioned as effectively as any committee in the House. I have no doubt that if we turned farm legislation over to it we would get prompt and effective action.

It is to be hoped that in the long summer before us, while we wait here in Washington, the Committee on Agriculture will find time to give this question, this most important question before the American people, a little attention. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite the naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. VINSON of Georgia, SCHUETZ, and MAAS.

EMERGENCY DEFENSE APPROPRIATION

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who is handling this bill, says that the bill, as it passed the House, amounted to $1,381,000,000, and, as it came from the Senate, it amounted to $1,479,000,000. That makes an increase of $98,000,000, and they give us 13 minutes in the House to talk about $98,000,000. It is a great sum of money, increasing this bill by the Senate. I thought the Senate was for economy at the beginning of the session; seems as if they changed.

Now, it seems to me that 13 minutes is not time enough to discuss this great increase of $98,000,000 because let me show you what our appropriations have been this year. The total is about $15,900,000,000. Our receipts are $5,600,000,000, according to the President's estimate. With the new tax bill passed recently of $1,007,000,000, we are going to be short or in the red for the year 1941, $9,300,000,000. Is it not terrible? Where is the economy this administration promised the American public? Why does not the President say anything about an economic operation of our Government?

Let me show you what this administration has paid for national defense from 1933 to 1940. It amounts to $7,226,861,000. With the amount we have appropriated for national defense this year and authorized, $5,900,000,000, that amounts to over $13,000,000,000 for the national defense. I herewith enclose a table or figures showing expenditures for national defense from 1933 through 1939 and appropriated for 1940 and 1941, as follows:

Fiscal year	Navy	Army	Total
1933	$349,361,924	$268,417,426	$617,779,350
1934	297,029,280	243,329,151	540,358,431
1935	430,477,860	273,485,711	703,933,571
1936	529,031,665	382,654,683	911,686,348
1937	548,801,242	374,260,148	923,061,390
1938	588,828,834	421,985,682	1,010,814,516
1939	659,040,284	480,900,733	1,139,941,017
1940	722,389,092	656,898,000	1,379,287,092
1941			5,900,000,000
Total			13,126,861,915

These billions of dollars were taken, or are to be taken, from the taxpayers. What defense have the taxpayers received for these billions? What have we spent this $13,000,000,000 for? It seems to me that some committee of the House, someone in authority, ought to be able to tell you what the inventory of our national defense, as far as the Navy, the Army, and the air force is concerned, was in 1932, and then he ought to show what our inventory is going to be at the end of the time we have spent this $13,000,000,000 for national defense under this administration, and let the people of the United States know what it has been spent for. Are we adequately prepared and will we be? Will our Treasury permit us to operate our military forces and Navy?

The great trouble with this Congress is we spend and spend and spend and we take no inventory of what we have received for the expenditure of these great sums of money. It seems to me we are going down the slide. We are going down the chute. We are going down to bankruptcy. We are carrying this Nation to such a depth financially that when the time comes that we have a big navy and a big army and a big air force, we will have no money in this country to operate it. It is going to be a serious time when we find out that that is the case. How will our children pay the cost of operating their government and pay your debt? Your debt will stagger them. It will break their backs to pay it. Why has not this administration economized, as it promised the people it would do in 1932? You have had a great deficit each year from one and one-half billions up to over four billions, and now for 1941 it will run close to $9,000,000,000. Worse and more of it. Terrible, disgraceful, uncalled for, unwarranted. Oh, will wonders never cease. America, wake up and stop the waste; review the votes of your Congressman.

So I say let us have an inventory of what we have received for the expenditure of these funds for national defense. We need a business administration for the United States if we are going to keep from being sunk financially and if we are going to keep our Nation out of war.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVENUE ACT OF 1940

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44 and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 30, 46, and 47.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Section 1700 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out 'until July 1, 1941, is less than 41 cents' and inserting in lieu thereof 'until July 1, 1940, is less than 41 cents, and after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945, is less than 21 cents' and by striking out 'is less than 41 cents, until July 1, 1941' and inserting in lieu thereof 'is less than 41 cents until July 1, 1940, and is less than 21 cents after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 212. Cigarettes.

"Subchapter A of chapter 15 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sections:

"'SEC. 2004. Defense tax for five years.

"'In lieu of the rates of tax specified in section 2000 (c) (2), the rates of tax for the period after June 30, 1940, and before July 1, 1945, shall be $3.25 and $7.80, respectively.

"'SEC. 2005. Floor stocks tax.

"'(a) Floor stocks tax: Upon cigarettes subject to tax under section 2000 (c) (2) which on July 1, 1940, are held by any person for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor stocks tax at a rate equal to the increase in rate of tax made applicable to such articles by section 2004.

"'(b) Returns: Every person required by this section to pay any floor stocks tax shall, on or before August 1, 1940, under such regulations as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall prescribe, make a return and pay such tax, except that in the case of articles held by manufacturers and importers the Commissioner may collect the tax with respect to all or part of such articles by means of stamp rather than return, and in such case may make an assessment against such manufacturer or importer having tobacco tax stamps on hand July 1, 1940, for the difference between the amount paid for such stamps and the increased rates specified in section 2004.

"'(c) Laws applicable: All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 2000 shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with this section, be applicable with respect to the floor stocks tax imposed by subsection (a).'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(1) Upon all distilled spirits produced in or imported into the United States upon which the internal-revenue tax imposed by law has been paid, and which on July 1, 1940, are held and intended for sale or for use in the manufacture or production of any article intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor stocks tax of 75 cents on each proof-gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof-gallon. The tax imposed by this subsection shall not apply to 100 wine gallons of the retail stocks of distilled spirits held by a person on premises as to which such person has incurred occupational tax as a retail dealer in liquors for the period beginning on July 1, 1940, and as to which no other occupational tax with respect to dealing in distilled spirits has been incurred by such person for a period beginning on such date.

"(2) Every person required by this subsection to pay any floor stocks tax shall, on or before August 1, 1940, under such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe, make a return and pay such tax. Payment of the tax shown to be due may be extended to a date not later than February 1, 1941, upon the filing of a bond for payment thereof in such form and amount and with such surety or sureties as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. Every retail dealer in liquors (even though not liable to pay such tax) shall make the return required by this paragraph."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 401. Section 205 of the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: 'If the amount of the deficiency in income tax for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1939, attributable to compensation paid indirectly by the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, is paid on or before March 15, 1941, then with respect to failure to pay such amount or make return of such compensation: (a) No criminal penalty shall apply; and (b) the additions to tax provided in sections 291 and 293 of the Internal Revenue Code shall not apply.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: The Senate amendment provides that the tax on foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein shall be at a uniform rate of 15 per centum. Under the House bill the rate was 11 per centum in the case of income from dividends and 16 per centum in the case of all other fixed and determinable receipts. (See amendments Nos. 2, 3, and 10.) The House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: The Senate amendment restores the 15 per centum withholding rate in the case of interest on tax-free covenant bonds paid to foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein. Under the House bill the rate was 16 per centum. (See amendments Nos. 1, 3, and 10.) The House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: The Senate amendment provides for withholding of corporation tax at the source in the case of foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein at the uniform rate of 15 per centum rather than the 16 per centum and 11 per centum rates provided in the House bill. (See amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 10.) The House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: The Senate amendment substitutes for the requirement of the House bill that every trust with a gross income of $100 or over file an income tax return, a requirement that every trust with a gross income of $800 or over file a return and every trust with a net income of $100 or over file a return. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: The Senate amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill under which cigarette papers in books of 25 papers or less were to be subject to the cigarette-paper tax. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 6 and 7: These amendments make changes in section numbers. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 8: This amendment makes a change in a cross-reference, and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 43: These amendments change the designation in the headings of sections and subsections and of columns in schedules, and references thereto, from "super-tax" to "defense tax." The House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: The Senate amendment provides for a uniform withholding rate of 16.5 percent for the 5-year period rather than the 12½-percent, 16½-percent, and 17½-percent rates provided in the House bill. The amendment also contains a clarifying change to assure the maintenance of treaty obligations in the case of withholding on dividends. (See amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3.) The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 20, 23, and 24: The Senate amendments provide that in cases where articles leased or sold with respect to which under section 3441 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code payment of the tax is required as the installment payments for the article are received, the increased rates in the bill will not apply if the lease, contract of sale, or conditional sale was made before July 1, 1940, and delivery of the article was made before that date. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: The Senate amendment eliminates the House provision under which admissions of more than 30 cents and less than 41 cents were subject to tax for the 5-year period. It substitutes therefor the following rates:

If the amount paid is 10 cents or more and less than 20 cents, 1 cent; if the amount paid is 20 cents or more, 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof; if the amount which would be charged for a single admission is 10 cents or more, 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for a season ticket or subscription.

The other provisions of the amendment merely rewrite the provisions of existing law.

The House recedes with an amendment which restores the House provision but reduces the exemption so that admissions of less than 21 cents are exempt.

On amendment No. 26: The Senate amendment eliminates the increased rates of tax on tobacco products provided for the 5-year period by the House bill and the floor-stocks tax imposed thereunder.

The House recedes with an amendment which eliminates all increases in tax on tobacco products, except cigarettes, and eliminates the increase in tax on cigarette papers. The conference agreement also substitutes for the House rates on cigarettes of $3.50 per thousand and $8.40 per thousand rates of $3.25 per thousand and $7.80 per thousand. The conference agreement also imposes a floor-stocks tax at the increased rates on all cigarettes held on July 1, 1940, for sale.

On amendment No. 30: The Senate amendment increases for the 5-year period the rate on rectifying distilled spirits from 30 cents per proof gallon to 40 cents per proof gallon. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 31: The Senate amendment eliminates the exemption from the floor stocks tax on distilled spirits of 100 wine gallons held by a retail dealer in liquors. Under the amendment floor stocks of rectified distilled spirits are subjected to a rate 10 cents per proof gallon higher than the basic rate of 75 cents. For administrative reasons, this additional rate is not to apply to distilled spirits which are rectified spirits solely by reason of the addition of not more than 2½ percent by volume of coloring, blending, smoothing, or flavoring materials, and is not to apply to liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds. Technical changes are made in the provisions relating to return and payment of the floor-stocks tax.

The House recedes with an amendment which eliminates the additional 10-cent rate on floor stocks of rectified spirits. The amendment also contains an exemption of 100 wine gallons held by any person on retail stocks on July 1, 1940, on premises as to which he is for any period beginning on that date exclusively engaged in business as a retailer.

On amendments Nos. 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40: These Senate amendments increase the rates on certain still wines and strike out references to the tax on fortification of wine. These amendments are consistent with the recent increase in tax on still wines and the elimination of the tax on fortification of wines. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 41 and 42: Amendment No. 41 strikes out the exemption of retail dealers from the floor-stocks tax on fermented malt liquors. Amendment No. 42 inserts a modified exemption of retail stocks. This provides that the exemption shall apply only to retail stocks which, on July 1, 1940, are held on retail premises. Such premises are confined to premises with respect to which the dealer is a retail dealer exclusively. If with respect to such premises the dealer is a wholesale dealer or brewer also, the exemption is not allowed as to any of the fermented malt liquor held on the premises. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment inserts a new title number, "Title IV." The House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: The Senate amendment amends the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939 to provide that no income tax shall be assessed or collected after the date of enactment of the bill which is attributable to compensation received prior to January 1, 1939, for personal service as a State officer or employee even though such compensation was paid directly or indirectly by the United States. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which provides that, if the amount of deficiency in income tax which is attributable to such compensation is paid with interest on or before March 15, 1941, no civil or criminal penalties shall be imposed on account of failure to pay such amount or make return of such compensation.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment inserts a new section imposing an excess-profits tax. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment proposes taxes which become effective in the event of war. The Senate recedes.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill as agreed to in conference yesterday by the conferees is estimated to raise approximately $1,000,000,000, the amount we set out to raise when we began the preparation of this bill.

The report is unanimous on the part of the House conferees.

I believe it is as good a bill as could be prepared in the time that your committee felt it had at its disposal. We all realize that further study of the matter of taxation will be necessary, and our committee proposes to proceed as rapidly and expeditiously as possible to the further consideration of additional legislation on this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the revenue bill as passed by the House contained about 27 pages. When the bill came back from the Senate it contained 357 pages. Three hundred and thirty pages were added to the bill in the Senate. Forty-seven amendments were added to the bill in the Senate. I think it would be fair to state that about 33 of this number were of a clerical or clarifying nature. There are about 14 amendments of substance to the bill.

Title I of the bill, as passed by the House, provides for increases in the income-tax rates, and is permanent law. Title I of the bill as brought back to you from conference is substantially the same as passed by the House.

Title II is that part of the bill, as you will recall, that provides for certain temporary increases of certain taxes, and it is in title II that practically all of these 14 amendments of substance occur. With your indulgence I will endeavor to give a brief explanation of these 14 amendments of substance.

On Senate amendments 1 to 3 the House has receded. The purpose of these amendments is to place nonresident alien individuals and nonresident foreign corporations not having an office or place of business in the United States upon an equal footing with respect to the rate of taxation on fixed and determinable income received by them from sources within the United States. The present rate of 10 percent in the case of dividends is increased to 15 percent instead of 11, as provided in the House bill. The rate of tax on other fixed or determinable income which under the existing law is 15 percent and under the House bill was increased to 16 percent is left at 15 percent. Since these taxes are withheld at the source in many cases it is impossible for the withholding agent to determine whether the income is to go to a corporation or an individual. The Senate amendment removes any distinction between the corporate and individual rates, and that is agreed to by the House conferees and presented to you in the conference report.

On amendment No. 4 the House recedes. Under the House bill a trust was required to file an income tax return if its gross income for the taxable year was $100 or more. The Senate amendment changes this provision so as to require a return only if the trust has a net income of $100 or more, or a gross income of $800 or more.

On amendment No. 10 the House recedes. The purpose of this Senate amendment is to reconcile the withholding rate while the defense tax is in effect with the change made in the permanent withholding rate by amendments 1 to 3.

The next amendment is one of importance and of interest to all Members of the House, I feel sure; that is with respect to the admissions tax. The House bill decreased the exemption under the admissions tax from 41 cents under existing law to 31 cents. The Senate amendment reduced the exemption to 9 cents, and upon admissions from 10 cents to 19 cents, inclusive, placed a tax of 1 cent; upon admissions of 20 cents or more the Senate rate was 1 cent of each 10 cents or fraction thereof. The conference agreement is a compromise between these two positions. Under the conference agreement admissions of less than 21 cents will pay no tax; upon admissions of 21 cents or more the rate is 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof.

Amendment No. 26 is another amendment of importance and of considerable interest to Members of the House, as it is the so-called tobacco tax amendment. The House will increase the tax on cigarettes, tobacco, and tobacco products by 16⅔ percent. For example, in the case of cigarettes the tax was increased from $3 to $3.50 per thousand. The Senate struck out these increases.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS. I would like information with reference to the floor tax on cigarettes.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will kindly indulge me I will cover that in my statement.

Mr. HARNESS. What I wanted to know was whether it applied to retailers as well as to wholesalers.

Mr. COOPER. That is information I propose to give if the gentleman will allow me the opportunity.

The Senate struck out these increases as contained in the House bill. Under the conference agreement the Senate action was agreed to, except in the case of cigarettes, where the increased tax of 25 cents per 1,000 was provided. That is, the rate on cigarettes is increased from $3 a thousand to $3.25 per thousand. In addition, a floor-stock tax is provided upon all cigarettes held for sale whether by retail or otherwise.

Amendment No. 30 is the amendment referring to rectifiers of distilled spirits. This Senate amendment placed a 10-cent increase on the rectifying of spirits, therefore raising the rate from 30 cents to 40 cents. Upon disagreement the Senate conferees receded and the conference report provides for the present law to continue. That is, the tax on rectifiers is 30 cents, as provided in the House bill, which is the same as the present law, instead of 40 cents as provided in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. What was the situation with reference to stocks on the floor of a retail liquor dealer, such as we have in New York City? We have a great number of them. I refer to the floor stock.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman mean with respect to rectifiers?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. There is no increase in the tax on rectifiers. The law continues as it is today.

Mr. CELLER. Is there not some other change in the rectified tax which refers to some stocks on the floors in the following amendment?

Mr. COOPER. There is no change whatever in the present law with respect to rectifiers.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. How much revenue do you propose to get by this floor-stock tax on cigarettes?

Mr. COOPER. The estimate of revenue on the cigarette floor tax will run, as I recall, about two and one-half million dollars, and it will cost about that much to administer it. I may say to the gentleman very frankly that your conferees included the floor-stock tax on cigarettes because of the interest we felt in the small dealers. It was pointed out to us that a small dealer, because of limited capital and limited space in his place of business, could not put in a large stock of cigarettes.

On the other hand, a large institution with larger capital, with a larger place of business and facilities, could stock up, thereby get a competitive advantage over the small dealer. It was very largely for that reason your conferees included this floor-stock tax on cigarettes.

Mr. KERR. The real purpose of this item would be not to raise revenue but to protect the small dealers who handle cigarettes?

Mr. COOPER. I think that is a fair statement. There is not much revenue involved, but we do think the provision here presented is very much in the interest of small dealers, so far as the competitive situation is concerned.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman's statement that the changes made in the bill are in favor of the small dealers, and we were all anxious to protect the small dealers; but in doing that we reached a rather peculiar situation in that, by the estimate of the Treasury, we will spend more for the collection of the floor tax than we will receive from it. Am I not correct?

Mr. COOPER. That is probably true, insofar as a comparison of cost of collecting from retailers and the amount collected. On the floor-stocks tax as a whole, substantial revenue will be received.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. How will the floor tax be collected; from the retailer, wholesaler, and jobber?

Mr. COOPER. It will be collected from everybody who has cigarettes for sale.

Mr. EBERHARTER. A floor tax will be collected from all of them?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And it will be collected by the stamp method?

Mr. COOPER. It is my understanding that the Treasury Department expects to use the stamp method with respect to manufacturers and importers.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will this floor tax become effective immediately on the passage of the bill?

Mr. COOPER. On July 1 of this year.

Mr. EBERHARTER. On July 1 of this year?

Mr. COOPER. That is right. The rate of tax is $3.25 per thousand, an increase of 25 cents per thousand on cigarettes, and the floor-stocks tax will be 25 cents per thousand.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. One of the purposes in placing a floor-stock tax on cigarettes in the hands of the retailer was to prevent evasion of the law as well as unfair competition.

Mr. COOPER. That is true.

Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 31 relates to a floor-stock tax on distilled spirits. The floor-stock tax of 10 cents on rectified spirits was eliminated by the conferees to conform to the recession of the Senate in connection with the rectifying-tax amendment. In addition, an exemption of 100 wine-gallons was allowed in the case of retailers only. To protect this provision, it is provided that persons, both as wholesalers and retailers on the same premises, cannot get the advantage of the 100-gallon exemption.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I would like to have an explanation of what this statement means under amendment 31. According to the amendment, floor stocks of rectified distilled spirits were subjected to a rate of 10 cents per proof-gallon higher than the basic rate of 75 cents.

Mr. COOPER. That was the Senate amendment, and it is eliminated.

Mr. CELLER. I see.

Mr. COOPER. The Senate receded and it is not in the bill now.

Amendments Nos. 41 and 42 relate to the floor tax on beer. Here a similar provision was adopted to take care of the case where beer dealers transact both a wholesale and retail business on the same premises.

Amendment No. 45 was added in the Senate. It was an amendment offered on the floor of the Senate, not included in the report of the Finance Committee. Upon this amendment the House receded with an amendment to assure that no penalties would be inflicted upon certain classes of State employees with respect to back income taxes. This situation arises out of the so-called Government Salary Tax Act. The Senate amendment provided for these Government employees to be relieved of certain taxes that had been assessed against them. The provision agreed to in conference was that they should not be relieved from payment of the taxes, but they are relieved from the payment of the penalty if they paid the tax and interest on or before March 15, 1941.

Amendments Nos. 46 and 47 are the so-called La Follette and Connally amendments. The Senate recedes on both of these amendments.

As I stated in the beginning the other amendments were of a clerical nature and the House conferees receded on most of them. I may give just a word of explanation with respect to one amendment, relating to the so-called supertax as included in the House bill. The name of it is changed to "defense tax."

If there are any further questions, I shall be pleased to try to answer them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that about 330 pages were added to the bill? Am I correct in understanding that the so-called Connally and La Follette amendments were both rejected by the committee on conference?

Mr. COOPER. The La Follette bill was added as amendment No. 46, and the Connally bill was added as amendment No. 47.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They were approved by the other body?

Mr. COOPER. The Senate passed both of them on roll-call votes, and in conference the Senate conferees receded on both of them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are entirely out of the bill?

Mr. COOPER. That is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I believe that in answer to the gentleman from Michigan it is fair to say that the so-called La Follette amendment, the excess-profits tax, took up only 15 pages. That was not so serious. The so-called Connally amendment, the war-profits amendment, consisted of over 300 pages.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. So that the complaint of not having time to consider the whole matter was largely in connection with the Connally amendment rather than the La Follette amendment.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct as to the number of pages. However, I do submit to the gentleman that both the La Follette amendment and the Connally amendment are matters that should be gone into very carefully and thoroughly. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree with the gentleman's statement fully.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I have had considerable protest from amusement corporations relating to instances where small admission fees are charged at picnic grounds and other amusement resorts. Do I correctly understand that the minimum has been raised from 10 cents to 20 cents and that admission fees under that are free from tax?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct. Everything from 20 cents down is free from tax.

Mr. DONDERO. It was a protest lodged in favor of the poor people who might enjoy that simple method of amusement.

Mr. COOPER. Your House conferees had that in mind. I am sure our views are in accord with the views of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I have had several inquiries from automobile dealers and operators of filling stations who have supplies and are interested in the proposed raise in the tax on automobile accessories. As I understand, there was a 10-percent raise. Is that correct?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct. There is no change in that item here. The provisions of the House bill still obtain with respect to that.

Mr. MAY. The House in the first instance put it in the bill, and there was no change in the Senate of what the House did?

Mr. COOPER. That is true.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. With regard to the floor-stocks tax on beer, has there been any change made in the conference report?

Mr. COOPER. Only a slight change in this respect: We tried to deal with the situation where the same dealer may be in the retail business and the wholesale business; in other words, we exempt the part of his business that is purely retail if it is on separate premises, but we apply the floor-stocks tax to the part of his business that is wholesale.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wanted to ask about the La Follette amendment. I was interested in that amendment and rather sorry it was left out. I wonder if the gentleman would tell us what we can expect about action on an excess-profits tax.

Mr. COOPER. I rather anticipated that the distinguished gentleman from California or someone else would ask that question. I believe the gentleman's question can best be answered by reading a resolution adopted in conference with respect to the excess-profits tax:

RESOLUTION OF COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE ON H. R. 10039 (TAX BILL) ADOPTED JUNE 21, 1940

Resolved by the committee of conference on H. R. 10039, That the committee is firmly of opinion that an excess-profits tax should be enacted as soon as possible and be made applicable to the calendar year 1940 and all taxable years beginning in 1940, and to all subsequent years. In pursuance of this policy the Treasury Department is urgently requested to submit to the Ways and Means Committee of the House and to the Finance Committee of the Senate not later than October 1, 1940, a plan for such tax, together with supporting data and drafts for proposed legislation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I just wish to say that as far as I am concerned I believe the conferees on the part of the House are entitled to a great deal of credit for doing a very fine job.

Mr. COOPER. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from New York. I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that it can be said that the House conferees have brought back to the House the bill substantially as it passed the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In getting the data for an excess-profits tax from the Treasury Department, is it customary for the Ways and Means Committee to secure that draft and then adopt the suggestions made by the Treasury Department, or is it the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to draft the kind of an excess-profits tax bill they believe ought to be enacted in order to keep the corporations that have exorbitant earnings down to a certain limit of profit consistent with good business and regard for this country in time of war? We ought not to permit these excess war profits at this time, and I think the Ways and Means Committee ought to take that into consideration in framing a new tax bill.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House may rest assured that your Committee on Ways and Means in this instance will, as it has done on all other occasions, draft the bill itself and bring it to the House as the product of the Ways and Means Committee. We receive data, information, and material from the Treasury Department, from the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and we have the very valuable services of the drafting service of the House in preparing all legislation that is reported by the Ways and Means Committee to the House, and that practice will be followed with respect to this bill.

Mr. RICH. There is one other question I would like to ask the gentleman. In section 205, the capital-stock tax, on page 16, amendment No. 13, the Senate struck out "super tax" and you have inserted the words "defense tax." That would be applicable to the enormous amount that we are spending this year over last year, but what is the Ways and Means Committee doing to get taxes to make up for the enormous deficits that we have had each year for the last 10 years? We cannot let that burden pass on to our children, because we would wreck them. Unless this Congress takes some action in an effort to alleviate the burden that is going to be placed on our children, I can see nothing but a chaotic condition coming later on, and it is our business, it is your business and my business, to try to see that that does not happen and I do not think "defense tax" is a good expression here. It might be termed "deficit tax."

Mr. COOPER. As I endeavored to explain earlier, in title II of this bill the increase of the amount of the tax as provided under existing law was termed a "supertax." The Senate changed the name from super tax to defense tax and the House conferees agreed to that Senate amendment. It is simply a change in name only and it applies all through title II of the bill which is the title providing a temporary increase of taxes, all of which is to be used for retiring national-defense obligations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understood the gentleman correctly he read a resolution which was approved by the conference committee with reference to an excess-profits tax.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman give us encouragement by making some kind of statement to the effect that if Congress remains in session for some several weeks we may have the privilege of voting for an excess-profits tax during the present calendar year?

Mr. COOPER. I cannot give the gentleman any assurance as to a few weeks, but I think during this calendar year we hope to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt here?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would say, for the information of the gentleman from Michigan, that one of the last things said in conference yesterday afternoon was by the representative of the Treasury, who informed us very positively that such a bill could be written and submitted to our committee within 2 months—the expression "2 months" was used.

Mr. COOPER. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the chairman of our committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is also true that the Treasury experts stated that it would take something like 2 months to make a pattern by which they could recommend legislation on this subject, because it is so difficult to draft a bill that would be fair and equitable to all interests. We had an excess-profits tax just after the World War, and it was drawn hastily and we had a great deal of trouble and a great deal of expense and a great deal of litigation. In order to obviate that the Treasury suggested, and I think very wisely so, that they would not be willing to be responsible for suggestions or recommendations on the subject made in less than about 2 months.

Mr. TREADWAY. One of the reasons, if I may be allowed to speak further——

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. One of the reasons we could not possibly take it up in the conference was the fact that the experts informed us there were 300 questions of policy that must be decided before such a bill could be written, and we had 24 hours to bring in a report. The gentleman can readily see that we absolutely could not accomplish it physically, if we had the power mentally to do it.

Mr. COOPER. Let me say this, too: Under the last excess profits tax law that we had there were some 10,000 litigated cases. Forty-seven of those cases are pending now, or were a week ago. This gives you some idea of the extreme difficulty involved in preparing legislation of this type. It is hoped by the Treasury Department and by your committee that by taking time we may be able to iron out the thing, profit by the experience of the past, and avoid at least a part of those 10,000 cases that were litigated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit this observation, I think we owe it to American industry to give them a rough indication at the present time that an excess-profits tax is definitely on the way, and that if Congress remains in session for 3 or 4 months they may expect it during the calendar year now going on, because it is a job to handle corporate affairs so that these tax burdens can be provided for.

Mr. COOPER. I think the resolution adopted in conference and the further fact that the Ways and Means Committee included a statement in its report on the bill when it was reported to the House give ample notice to the people of the country that they may reasonably expect legislation of this type.

Mr. COCHRAN. And to apply to the calendar year 1940.

Mr. COOPER. That is so stated in the committee report.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement correcting an error in the House committee report upon the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. By unanimous consent I insert the following statement correcting an error in a House committee report on original bill.

In order to avoid confusion in the minds of taxpayers the Ways and Means Committee desires to correct an error in the committee report, House Report 2491. The example of the application of the 10-percent increase in income tax to individuals found at the bottom of page 15 and the top of page 16 is not entirely complete, and hence inaccurate, for it fails to take into account the fact that the normal tax and surtax apply only after the application of the personal exemption and credit for dependents. The following should be substituted for the paragraph in question:

"The net income of an individual entitled to the maximum earned income credit and having no capital gains or losses, is $752,400. After application of the personal exemption and credit for dependents, it is $750,000, and his tax liability computed without regard to section 15 is $497,724. The difference between the net income and the tax liability is $254,676. The tax under section 15 is $497,724 plus 10 percent of $254,676, or $523,191.60. If such a limitation had not been provided for, the tax under section 15 would have been $547,496.40. It should be noted that the effect of this limitation on the 10-percent increase is to relieve from any increase a taxpayer who under existing law, as amended by title I, has no net income, because he has a net long-term capital loss, but is subject to tax under section 117 (c) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code."

In the table on page 15, relating to the 10-percent increase in the tax in the case of corporations, a line should be inserted after the line beginning "Net income," reading:

Normal tax, net income $100,000

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has so fully covered the details of the conference report that I shall not take up the time of the House in elaborating upon them further. I shall however refer to certain items.

At the outset, I desire to answer further the interrogatory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] as to the method of procedure in the Committee on Ways and Means. I assume that all Members of the House realize the tremendous complications that arise in writing legislation which comes within the jurisdiction of that committee—taxation, tariff, social security, and other subjects of importance. The details of these measures are complicated, and we must have evidence not only from people of experience in the practical side of the propositions but from the experts in the departments and of our own staff, including the office of the legislative counsel and the joint committee on taxation. I think perhaps I am as critical as any man of any partisanship that may come up. I am a partisan and always admit it, but I do say that while I have been a member of the minority of that committee, there never has been a time when the cards were all put on the table as freely by the majority side as they have been during this present session of Congress. We have prepared the bills in committee. We have had the advice and the assistance of our own experts and those in the departments, and while some of us in the minority cannot approve of all the recommendations that are submitted to us, nevertheless I hope when we are in the majority next year, we will be as fair to the minority, now the majority, as they have been to us in the past year. [Applause.] So I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] he need not have any fear that in writing an excess profits tax bill, it is going to be written down town. It is going to be written in the Ways and Means Committee room in the House Office Building, and to the best of the ability of the members of the committee. Of course, mistakes will creep in; we cannot help that, because it is a big, complicated question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. In my 10 years' experience on the Ways and Means Committee, I have served under both Republican and Democratic administrations, and we have had tax bills under both administrations. I think it is a fair statement to say that the Ways and Means Committee has received all advice possible from the Treasury Department, without regard to administration, and that the committee itself has written all bills.

Mr. TREADWAY. And in many instances I would say in addition to that we have received less advice than we would like to have received, particularly from the people who are affected by the tax bills, or the tariff bills, or whatever we have under consideration. We appeal to the people, and now that notice is being given to them by the adoption of the resolution which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has read, I hope that those people to whom I refer who are particularly affected, will give us the benefit of their practical views and experience.

I want now particularly to refer further to the extravagant expenditures of this administration. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] a short time ago said it seemed to him that there should be some economy in connection with the billions of dollars being spent in the operation of government, before putting on new taxes. I thoroughly agree with that suggestion. I am extremely sorry that the principle involved in the amendment of Senator BYRD providing for a mandatory cut of 10 percent in nondefense appropriations was so destroyed and nullified by the Senate that the author of it himself moved to have it stricken from the bill. It was a serious blunder not to include it in the bill. I tried to have the Byrd amendment included by the Ways and Means Committee, but was unsuccessful. The people today demand of us economy in government. They are going to shoulder these increased taxes that we are putting on them for purpose of defense but, nevertheless, they do expect that we reciprocate and show economy in government, when they are being taxed as they are by this bill. I feel that the principle of the Byrd amendment is desirable, and should have been kept in the bill.

The question of the writing of the excess-profits tax will include an item which I brought up originally in the Committee on Ways and Means, and with respect to which we inserted a reference in the committee report—namely, the amortization of investments in excess of actual business needs made by taxpayers to carry on the defense program. It is going to be very difficult to interest business in elaborating and extending their plants unless they are assured of being able to get back in special amortization deductions the capital invested in the business to help the defense program of the Government. I know the two matters will be given the most careful consideration by the Treasury and by the committee during the summer recess. Business people can be assured of prompt and favorable action by Congress on amortization, and the public can be assured of action in levying reasonable excess-profits taxation.

Bear in mind that the report from the Government officials, requested by the resolution referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], must be in the hands of Congress by October 1. We are going to forget that October 1 is only 1 month before election time. I am willing to stay here and help on this defense program whether or not it hurts me in my district to be away from it. Perhaps being away from it will be a good thing. But whatever the situation, our duty to ourselves and to our constituents and to our country is to be on the job here and be ready for that report, and keep prodding the Department a little to make sure that they live up to the resolution of the conference committee referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has been here a great many years. Does he know, in all the time he has been in Congress, of any more extravagant expenditures of taxpayers' funds than he has noticed in the last 5 or 6 years?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not. That is the price we are paying for the mistake which the voters of the country made 4 years ago when they retained the present President in the White House.

Mr. RICH. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: Has he seen more than a few on the Democratic side of this House make any effort for economy in Government operations? Can he show me one place where they have made any effort to economize?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Where?

Mr. TREADWAY. On paper. The White House brought out the statement that they might be able to save a few dollars about 10 days ago, after the Republicans had gone on record for economy in the strongest kind of language.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is talking about the President saying he was going to reduce expenditures 25 percent and consolidate departments, but you have not seen him do anything, have you?

Mr. TREADWAY. Not to date.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman permit this observation? I think there are men on the Democratic side of this House who have worked and spoken and voted as conscientiously as any man on earth could to bring about greatly decreased expenditures the last several years. At least they have impressed me they were sincere about it, and I think we ought to give them credit for it. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree there are Democrats conscientiously anxious for economy, but they are few in number. The Republican-Democratic economy coalition has been outvoted.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will have to have some more time if I am going to yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. There is a handful of men on that side who have tried to do something, but the majority is over there. That is where they should do it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have tried to support the Republican doctrine of economy to the best of my ability. I cannot criticize other people for not always agreeing with my views. However, I think the record of the Republicans for economy is excellent, and it will be a factor in the election.

But let me proceed to one or two other matters directly affecting us in this report. There has been something said about the change of the name from "supertax" to "defense tax." Of course, that is all poppycock. It is perfectly ridiculous. There is no more reason to try to sugar-coat the pill represented by these increased taxes. You can not get away with it, because this tax is coming out of the pockets of the people. You can call it by any name you want to. You can call it a gift from heaven, or anything else, but, regardless of whether you change it from "supertax" to "defense tax," you are not satisfying anybody called upon to pay the tax.

However, I want to say in connection with this matter that I took the trouble yesterday in conference to ask the Treasury officials whether in levying the additional excise taxes it would appear what part of it was the old tax and what part of it was this so-called defense tax. I was assured that the old tax stamp would still be used, and where you see the word "defense" it refers only to the levy made by this bill. When the present supply of stamps runs out they will print some more with the regular rates on. So that it will continue to be known for 5 years as a defense tax, and the old tax will remain as is. That will cover that feature, I think.

Now, there are two other subjects I would like to speak about. Mr. Speaker, I was very glad, indeed, that the House conferees were able to reach a compromise on the admission charges. When I first saw the Senate bill I was astounded that they proposed to tax admissions of 10 cents or more and that all the proposed increase was taken off cigarettes and tobacco. Without seeming to be unduly critical of the Senate, I think that was a serious mistake. Imagine taking the increase off cigarettes and making up the revenue by taxing a small admission fee for a child going to a movie. We were able to compromise on that and raise the exemption to 20 cents, which is much more preferable. The 20-cent bracket, according to the statistics furnished us, will bring in $60,000,000 additional revenue over the present law, which provides for a 40-cent exemption. Of course, that is a large sum to get from that source. So that was a very definite gain on the part of the House conferees, that we were not obliged to go to that lower figure. I think it would have been extremely unpopular and very unfair and unwise in every sense of the word to have reduced the admission tax to tickets costing 10 cents or more.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it is also fair to say that the House conferees in all probability would not have gone that far.

Mr. TREADWAY. We were very insistent against it. There was not a single House conferee who favored the Senate provision.

With regard to tobacco, the conference agreement eliminates all proposed increases except with respect to cigarettes, which are increased from $3 per thousand to $3.25 per thousand. A floor tax of 25 cents per thousand will be imposed on all floor stocks on hand on July 1, including retail stocks.

There is one matter in which my district is particularly interested, and I would like to say a word about it—namely, the tax on cigarette papers.

It happens that my district is a paper-manufacturing district. Among other mills there is a large mill manufacturing cigarette paper.

The proposed increase in tax meant a revenue of only $3,000,000 and it was a desirable thing not to impose a tax on the papers given away. It was incongruous to my mind to tax something that was free. Under the present law, if you had 24 papers in a booklet given away with a package of tobacco there was no tax on the papers. It did not seem right or proper that that should be taxed. The action of the conferees eliminates the provision of the House bill which would have subjected these papers to tax.

Both Senate and House bills provided for an increase in the tax on liquor from $2.25 to $3 per proof gallon, so that item was not before the conferees. A floor tax of 75 cents per proof gallon is imposed on stocks on hand July 1. The conference agreement restores the 100-wine-gallon exemption for retailers, as provided in the original House bill. The exemption is limited to retailers who do not have wholesale stocks on the same premises.

The tax on rectified spirits was another important item in disagreement. The House bill did not increase present rate of 30 cents per gallon. The Senate increased rate to 40 cents. The conference report leaves rate at 30 cents, as under House bill.

As to beer, the conference agreement retains the exemption of retail dealers from the floor tax on beer, but confines it to retailers not having wholesale stocks on the same premises.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was particularly interested in the gentleman's remarks deploring that there had been no attempt at any economy, and that we must impose such a terrific tax on our people. A definition of economy is: A way of spending money and getting no fun out of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. You cannot get any fun out of a tax bill, that is certain.

Mr. GIFFORD. But it has been such a lot of fun to build Tugwell towns. And their building must still go merrily on.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. FISH. As I understand it, therefore, there is no tax on cigarette papers in this bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. No change is made in the present law. There is, at present, a tax on packages of cigarette papers where the package contains 25 or more. The tax is one-half cent for each 50 papers or fraction thereof.

Mr. FISH. That is the present law.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the present law.

Mr. FISH. But there is no change in the present law in any way on cigarette papers.

Mr. TREADWAY. No.

Mr. FISH. I think that action is very right.

Mr. TREADWAY. In examining the bill, Mr. Speaker, the Members will, of course, find that perhaps they are not at all certain as to existing law on some of these taxes. The gentleman from Tennessee has made a very complete explanation of the changes that have been made in the bill.

In conclusion let me say that the conferees as well as the members of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee have been very appreciative of the courtesies shown them both by our chairman, by the chairman of the subcommittee on taxation, and by the Department officials and experts who worked with us. We have been perfectly satisfied in every respect, and we thank the majority and the experts for the kindly treatment we have received at their hands.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Not being one of the conferees I think I can modestly congratulate the conferees in insisting on taking out those regimentation features in the bill covering many phases.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the conference report could be covered, Mr. Speaker, as it was in my remarks on the original measure when we had it before us. It is a makeshift tax bill, but it is the best we can work out under the circumstances. We have brought in a fair compromise. Give us a little time later on and I am sure—while we cannot reduce taxes from now on—we can smooth out some inequalities that are in existing law. [Applause.]

I thank the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am about to introduce a House concurrent resolution which reads as follows:

That the Congress hereby regards Col. William Mitchell as having been exonerated of all the charges on account of which a judgment of court martial was on January 28, 1926, entered against him, and the causes which he espoused and by reason of which such court martial was instituted to have been vindicated by the passage of time; and the Congress further regards his resignation from the Army to have been under honorable circumstances.

In the introduction of this resolution I wish to bring to the attention of Congress these facts. Col. William, "Billy," Mitchell was court-martialed because he advocated in speeches and written articles his honest and sincere belief in the possibilities and destructfulness of the airplane in modern warfare. He was brought before the court-martial board on the ninety-sixth article of war, not for treason to our country in war or for not giving his best in France with the A. E. F., but for speaking his thoughts in regard to a subject of which he was an expert on because of the long hours that he had spent studying the important part that aviation should and would play in warfare.

We all recognize the great work of General Mitchell—at the time of his court martial Colonel Mitchell. He was years ahead of his time in his views on national defense and on our air forces. It is my opinion that in justice to his memory and to the great cause for which he fought, which is now recognized by everyone as being correct, the adjudication of guilty by the court martial should be expunged from the record. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Clair, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10104. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALIEN REGISTRATION ACT OF 1940

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I

"SECTION 1. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, with intent to interfere with, impair, or influence the loyalty, morale, or discipline of the military or naval forces of the United States—

"(1) to advise, counsel, urge, or in any manner cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States; or

"(2) to distribute any written or printed matter which advises, counsels, or urges insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term "military or naval forces of the United States" includes the Army of the United States, as defined in section 1 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (48 Stat. 153; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 2), the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserve, and Marine Corps Reserve of the United States, and, when any merchant vessel is commissioned in the Navy or is in the service of the Army or the Navy, includes the master, officers, and crew of such vessel.

"SEC. 2. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) to knowingly or willfully advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence, or by the assassination of any officer of any such government.

"(2) with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States, to print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, sell, distribute, or publicly display any written or printed matter advocating, advising, or teaching the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence;

"(3) to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence; or to be or become a member of, or affiliate with, any such society, group, or assembly of persons, knowing the purposes thereof.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term 'government in the United States' means the Government of the United States, the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or the government of any political subdivision of any of them.

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to attempt to commit, or to conspire to commit, any of the acts prohibited by the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 4. Any written or printed matter of the character described in section 1 or section 2 of this Act, which is intended for use in violation of this Act, may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found, or from any person in whose possession it may be, under a search warrant issued pursuant to the provisions of title XI of the Act entitled 'An Act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes', approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 18, ch. 18).

"SEC. 5. (a) Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both.

"(b) No person convicted of violating any of the provisions of this title shall, during the five years next following his conviction, be eligible for employment by the United States, or by any department or agency thereof (including any corporation the stock of which is wholly owned by the United States).

"TITLE II

"SEC. 20. Section 19 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 155), as amended, is amended by inserting, after 'SEC. 19.', the letter '(a)', and by adding at the end of such section the following new subsections:

"'(b) Any alien of any of the classes specified in this subsection, in addition to aliens who are deportable under other provisions of law, shall, upon warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported:

"'(1) Any alien who, at any time within five years after entry, shall have, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(2) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have on more than one occasion, knowingly and for gain, encouraged, induced, assisted, abetted, or aided any other alien or aliens to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law.

"'(3) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted of possessing or carrying in violation of any law any weapon which shoots or is designed to shoot automatically or semi-automatically more than one shot without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger, or a weapon commonly called a sawed-off shotgun.

"'(4) Any alien who, at any time within five years after entry, shall have been convicted of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.

"'(5) Any alien who, at any time after entry, shall have been convicted more than once of violating the provisions of title I of the Alien Registration Act, 1940.'

"No alien who is deportable under the provisions of paragraph (3), (4), or (5) of this subsection shall be deported until the termination of his imprisonment or the entry of an order releasing him on probation or parole.

"'(c) In the case of any alien (other than one to whom subsection (d) is applicable) who is deportable under any law of the United States and who has proved good moral character for the preceding five years, the Attorney General may (1) permit such alien to depart the United States to any country of his choice at his own expense, in lieu of deportation, or (2) suspend deportation of such alien if not racially inadmissible or ineligible to naturalization in the United States if he finds that such deportation would result in serious economic detriment to a citizen or legally resident alien who is the spouse, parent, or minor child of such deportable alien. If the deportation of any alien is suspended under the provisions of this subsection for more than six months, all of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the case shall be reported to the Congress within ten days after the beginning of its next regular session, with the reasons for such suspension. The Clerk of the House shall have such report printed as a public document If during that session the two Houses pass a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the suspension of such deportation, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law. If during that session the two Houses do not pass such a resolution, the Attorney General shall cancel deportation proceedings upon the termination of such session, except that such proceedings shall not be canceled in the case of any alien who was not legally admitted for permanent residence at the time of his last entry into the United States, unless such alien pays to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a fee of $18 (which fee shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts). Upon the cancelation of such proceedings in any case in which such fee has been paid, the Commissioner shall record the alien's admission for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States and the Secretary of State shall, if the alien was a quota immigrant at the time of entry and was not charged to the appropriate quota, reduce by one the immigration quota of the country of the alien's nationality as defined in section 12 of the act of May 26, 1924 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 212), for the fiscal year then current or next following.

"'(d) The provisions of subsection (c) shall not be applicable in the case of any alien who is deportable under (1) the Act of October 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), entitled "An Act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes", as amended; (2) the Act of May 26, 1922, entitled "An Act to amend the Act entitled 'An Act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes', approved February 9, 1909, as amended" (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175); (3) the Act of February 18, 1931, entitled "An Act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics", as amended (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a); (4) any of the provisions of so much of subsection (a) of this section as relates to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other immoral persons, the mentally and physically deficient, anarchists, and similar classes; or (5) subsection (b) of this section.'

"SEC. 21. The Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics', approved February 18, 1931, is amended—

"(1) By striking out the words 'and sentenced';

"(2) By inserting after the words 'any statute of the United States' the following: 'or of any State, Territory, possession, or of the District of Columbia,' and

"(3) By inserting after the word 'heroin' a comma and the word 'marihuana'.

"SEC. 22. No alien shall be deportable by reason of the amendments made by section 20 or 21 on account of any act committed prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

"SEC. 23. (a) The first paragraph of section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes', approved October 16, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'That any alien who, at any time, shall be or shall have been a member of any one of the following classes shall be excluded from admission into the United States:'.

"(b) Section 2 of such Act of October 16, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 2. Any aliens who was at the time of entering the United States, or has been at any time thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this Act, shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this Act, irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States.'

"TITLE III

"SEC. 30. No visa shall hereafter be issued to any alien seeking to enter the United States unless said alien has been registered and fingerprinted in duplicate. One copy of the registration and fingerprint record shall be retained by the consul. The second copy shall be attached to the alien's visa and shall be taken up by the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival of the alien in the United States and forwarded to the Department of Justice, at Washington, District of Columbia."

"Any alien seeking to enter the United States who does not present a visa (except in emergency cases defined by the Secretary of State), a reentry permit, or a border-crossing identification card shall be excluded from admission to the United States.

"SEC. 31. (a) It shall be the duty of every alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is fourteen years of age or older, (2) has not been registered and fingerprinted under section 30, and (3) remains in the United States for thirty days or longer, to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted before the expiration of such thirty days.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every parent or legal guardian of any alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is less than fourteen years of age, (2) has not been registered under section 30, and (3) remains in the United States for thirty days or longer, to apply for the registration of such alien before the expiration of such thirty days. Whenever any alien attains his fourteenth birthday in the United States he shall, within thirty days thereafter, apply in person for registration and to be fingerprinted.

"SEC. 32. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 30 and 31—

"(a) The application for the registration and fingerprinting, or for the registration, of any alien who is in the United States on the effective date of such sections may be made at any time within four months after such date.

"(b) No foreign government official, or member of his family, shall be required to be registered or fingerprinted under this title.

"(c) The Commissioner is authorized to prescribe, with the approval of the Attorney General, special regulations for the registration and fingerprinting of (1) alien seamen, (2) holders of border-crossing identification cards, (3) aliens confined in institutions within the United States, (4) aliens under order of deportation, and (5) aliens of any other class not lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

"SEC. 33. (a) All applications for registration and fingerprinting under section 31 shall be made at post offices or such other places as may be designated by the Commissioner.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every postmaster, with such assistance as shall be provided by the Commissioner, to register and fingerprint any applicant for registration and fingerprinting under such section, and for such purposes to designate appropriate space in the local post office for such registration and fingerprinting. Every postmaster shall forward promptly to the Department of Justice, at Washington, District of Columbia, the registration and fingerprint record of every alien registered and fingerprinted by him. The Commissioner may designate such other places for registration and fingerprinting as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this Act, and provide for registration and fingerprinting of aliens at such places by officers or employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service designated by the Commissioner. The duties imposed upon any postmaster under this Act shall also be performed by any employees at the post office of such postmaster who are designated by the postmaster for such purpose.

"SEC. 34. (a) The Commissioner is authorized and directed to prepare forms for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens under this title. Such forms shall contain inquiries with respect to (1) the date and place of entry of the alien into the United States; (2) activities in which he has been and intends to be engaged; (3) the length of time he expects to remain in the United States; (4) the criminal record if any, of such alien; and (5) such additional matters as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General.

"(b) All registration and fingerprint records made under the provisions of this title shall be secret and confidential, and shall be made available only to such persons or agencies as may be designated by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General.

"(c) Every person required to apply for the registration of himself or another under this title shall submit under oath the information required for such registration. Any person authorized to register aliens under this title shall be authorized to administer oaths for such purpose.

"SEC. 35. Any alien required to be registered under this title who is a resident of the United States shall notify the Commissioner in writing of each change of residence and new address within five days from the date of such change. Any other alien required to be registered under this title shall notify the Commissioner in writing of his address at the expiration of each three months' period of residence in the United States. In the case of an alien for whom a parent or legal guardian is required to apply for registration, the notices required by this section shall be given by such parent or legal guardian.

"SEC. 36. (a) Any alien required to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted who willfully fails or refuses to make such application or to be fingerprinted, and any parent or legal guardian required to apply for the registration of any alien who willfully fails or refuses to file application for the registration of such aliens, shall, upon conviction thereof be fined not to exceed $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

"(b) Any alien, or any parent or legal guardian of any alien, who fails to give written notice to the Commissioner of change of address as required by section 35 of this Act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not to exceed $100, or be imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both.

"(c) Any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien who files an application for registration containing statements known by him to be false, or who procures or attempts to procure registration of himself or another person through fraud, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and any alien so convicted within five years after entry into the United States shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and be deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended.

"SEC. 37. (a) The Commissioner, with the approval of the Attorney General, is authorized and empowered to make and prescribe, and from time to time to change and amend, such rules and regulations not in conflict with this Act as he may deem necessary and proper in aid of the administration and enforcement of this title (including provisions for the identification of aliens registered under this title); except that all such rules and regulations, insofar as they relate to the performance of functions by consular officers or officers or employees in the Postal Service, shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General, respectively, upon recommendation of the Attorney General. The powers conferred upon the Attorney General by this Act and all other powers of the Attorney General relating to the administration of the Immigration and Naturalization Service may be exercised by the Attorney General through such officers of the Department of Justice, including officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, attorneys, special attorneys, and special assistants to the Attorney General, as he may designate specifically for such purposes.

"(b) The Commissioner is authorized to make such expenditures, to employ such additional temporary and permanent employees, and to rent such quarters outside the District of Columbia as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 38. (a) For the purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense, means the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands;

"(2) the term 'Commissioner' means the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

"(b) The provisions of this title shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act; except that sections 30 and 31 shall take effect sixty days after the date of its enactment.

"SEC. 39. The President is authorized to provide, by Executive order, for the registration and fingerprinting, in a manner as nearly similar to that provided in this title as he deems practicable, of aliens in the Panama Canal Zone.

"TITLE IV

"SEC. 40. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 14. This Act may be cited as the 'Alien Registration Act, 1940.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

JOHN A. DANAHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes on the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, submit the following statement, explaining matters agreed upon by the conference committee and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment and the conference agreement retain provisions designed to accomplish all of the general purposes of the House bill. The Senate amendment also includes provisions, which were not in the House bill, for the registration and fingerprinting of all aliens in the United States. The conference agreement retains these provisions of the Senate amendment.

Title I of conference agreement

Section 1 makes it unlawful for any person, with intent to interfere with, impair, or influence the loyalty, morale, or discipline of the military cr naval forces, to advocate or cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to distribute any written or printed matter which advocates such insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty.

Section 2 makes it unlawful for any person to knowingly or willfully advocate, or (with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States) to publish or circulate any written or printed matter which advocates, or to organize any society or group (or knowing the purposes thereof to affiliate with any such society or group) which advocates the overthrow or destruction by force or violence of the Government of the United States, the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or the government of any political subdivision of any of them.

Section 3 makes it unlawful to attempt to conspire to commit any of the acts prohibited by this title.

Section 4 provides for the taking under a search warrant of any written or printed matter intended to be used in violation of the act.

Section 5 fixes the penalties for violation of this title.

Title I of the Senate amendment covered substantially the same subject matter as titles I and II of the House bill. However, the House bill prohibited the advocacy of disobedience by any member of the crew of a documented vessel of the United States which has been warranted to fly the flag of the Naval Reserve to the laws or regulations governing the military or naval forces, or to the lawful orders of a superior, while the corresponding provision of the Senate amendment was applicable to the master, officers, and crew of any merchant vessel when it is commissioned in the Navy or is in the active service of the Army or the Navy. The Senate amendment also omitted a section of title I of the House bill which made it unlawful to justify or defend the assassination or assault of certain public officers. The provisions of title I of the Senate amendment are retained as title I of this conference agreement.

Title II of conference agreement

Section 20 amends section 19 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, by adding thereto several new subsections, the principal provisions of which are as follows:

Subsection (b) provides that, in addition to aliens who are deportable under other provisions of law, the following aliens shall be taken into custody and deported: Aliens who knowingly and for gain have assisted any other alien to enter or to try to enter the United States in violation of law, aliens who have been convicted of possessing and of carrying certain firearms in violation of law, and aliens convicted of violating the provisions of title I of this bill.

Subsection (c) provides that in certain cases, generally those in which aliens are deportable solely because of illegal entry, the Attorney General may allow aliens to depart at their own expense, or may, subject to congressional review, suspend orders of deportation where deportation would result in unwarranted hardship. Subsection (d) provides that the benefits of subsection (c) shall not be extended to aliens who are deportable on grounds which may be generally described as those grounds which indicate that such aliens are likely to be undesirable residents.

Section 21 of the amendment amends an act of February 18, 1931, which provides for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of narcotics laws, so as to provide for the deportation under such act of aliens convicted of violating the narcotics laws of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, as well as those of the United States, and so as to provide for deportation on account of violations of laws relating to marihuana, as well as laws relating to other narcotics.

Section 22 provides that aliens shall not be deportable under amendments made by this title on account of acts committed prior to the date of enactment of this act.

Section 23 amends the act of October 16, 1918, which provides for the exclusion and deportation from the United States of aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes, so as to provide that no alien shall be admitted to the United States who has at any time been a member of such classes, and to also provide that any alien who has been a member of such classes at any time after his admission to the United States (for no matter how short a time or how far in the past so long as it was after the date of entry) shall be deported.

Title II of the Senate amendment covered substantially the same subject matter as titles III and IV of the House bill. The provisions of the House bill providing for the deportation of aliens who had engaged in espionage or sabotage and aliens who are habitual users of narcotics were omitted from the Senate amendment. With respect to suspension of deportation in "hardship cases," the House bill required deportation unless Congress took affirmative action approving the suspension, while the Senate amendment required deportation only if Congress took affirmative action disapproving the suspension. The other changes made by the Senate amendment in this part of the House bill were technical in character. The conference agreement retains the provisions of title II of the Senate amendment with changes in section 23 which make it clear that under the act of October 16, 1918, aliens who at any time after their entry into the United States shall have been members of the anarchistic or similar classes shall be deported.

Title III of conference agreement

This title provides for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

Section 30 provides for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens entering the United States after the effective date of this section.

Section 31 requires the registration and fingerprinting of aliens already in the United States, and aliens who might in any manner gain admission to the United States without being registered and fingerprinted under section 30. Under this section aliens less than 14 years of age are not required to be fingerprinted, but they must be registered.

Section 32 fixes the time within which registration is required for aliens in the United States on the effective date of sections 30 and 31, provides an exemption from the registration and fingerprinting provisions for officials of foreign governments and members of their families, and authorizes special regulations to be made for the registration and fingerprinting of special classes of aliens.

Section 33 provides for the registration and fingerprinting to be done at post offices or such other places as may be designated by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Section 34 provides for the preparation of the necessary forms, provides that registration and fingerprint records shall be secret and confidential, and provides that the information necessary for registration shall be submitted under oath.

Section 35 requires aliens who are registered to notify the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization concerning their whereabouts.

Section 36 prescribes the penalties for failure to register, for false registration. and for failure to give the required notice concerning the whereabouts of an alien.

Section 37 contains authority to make necessary rules and regulations and other administrative provisions.

Section 38 contains definitions and also fixes the effective date of the registration and fingerprinting requirements at 60 days after the date of enactment of the act.

Section 39 authorizes the President to provide for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens in the Panama Canal Zone. It is necessary to make special provision for the Canal Zone, because it is not within the jurisdiction of the Immigration and Naturalization Serivce, and that Service has no representatives there.

Title V of the House bill required the fingerprinting of aliens to whom visas for entering the United States are hereafter issued. Title III of the Senate amendment required these aliens to be fingerprinted and also required that they be registered. The Senate amendment also required the registration and fingerprinting of aliens in the United States. The conference agreement retains the provisions of title III of the Senate amendment with a number of technical changes.

Title IV of conference agreement

This title contains the customary separability clause and a short title for the act, which were in the Senate amendment.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
C. E. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States is to be congratulated upon bringing to enactment this excellent piece of legislation.

It is said to be the first and only thoroughgoing attempt to plug the holes which experience has developed in our immigration and deportation laws, which were passed a quarter of a century ago. It is believed that it does that job and does it well.

It is my joy to announce that this bill will do, in a perfectly legal and constitutional manner, what the bill specifically aimed at the deportation of Harry Bridges seeks to accomplish. This bill changes the law so that the Department of Justice should now have little trouble in deporting Harry Bridges and all others of similar ilk. The Supreme Court of the United States, in its decision of the Joe Strecker case, held that the provisions of our deportation statute of 1918 did not apply to an alien who had been a member of an organization which advocated the overthrow of our Government by force or violence if he had ceased to be a member. The pending measure amends that law so that it will provide that any alien who at any time after his entry into the United States shall have been a member of any such organization shall be deported. Therefore, after this bill becomes law, it will be perfectly clear that any alien who has ever been a member of such an organization before coming to this country cannot enter, or if at the time of his entry or at any time thereafter he has been, even for 1 minute, a member of such an organization he shall be deported. These provisions, in conjunction with the other improvements in our deportation law wrought by this bill should make it impossible for any such alien to enter this country in future and also enable us to deport all those of that kind who are now here.

The bill of which our distinguished colleague from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] is the author, even if it becomes law, can, in my judgment never accomplish its avowed purpose. In my opinion, it is unconstitutional and will be so declared if it ever reaches the stage where its constitutionality may be challenged.

In addition to the strengthening of our deportation law, this bill protects the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and to some extent the Merchant Marine from subversive propaganda. For the first time in the history of our Nation, the activities of the prapagandists who in peacetime seek to impair the loyalty, morale, or discipline of our military or naval forces, or to induce insubordination, disloyalty, or mutiny, are outlawed.

The pending measure requires every alien who applies for a visa to be fingerprinted in duplicate. This fingerprinting is required to be done in the alien's home country at the time of his application for visa. Also it is required that every alien in the United States be registered and fingerprinted. The reasons for these requirements are manifest.

The conferees are delighted to present a unanimous conference report. There has been much hard work done both in the House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary, and by the conferees. The distinguished author of the bill, Judge HOWARD SMITH, of Virginia, has been continuously interested and helpful.

All of us who have labored to bring this bill to its satisfactory state commend it to you unhesitatingly. We believe that it covers much of the ground that needs to be covered. The new grounds of deportation should be exceedingly helpful in purging our body politic of poisonous elements. We confidently expect that the authorities charged with the responsibility of administration will find this act workable.

Not desiring to consume unnecessarily a single moment of the time on this final day before recess, I will not continue unless there are questions which Members desire to ask.

Mr. McCORMACK rose.

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Is this the Smith bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; the conference report thereon.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman will remember that I offered an amendment which the House adopted, making it a crime to knowingly and willfully advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. Is that written into this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course it is, in substance.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield gladly to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The gentleman said, if I understood him correctly, that the bill now before us will do what the Allen Bridges deportation bill attempted to do?

Mr. HOBBS. Attempts to do.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. But which, in the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama, never could be done thereunder because of the unconstitutionality of the Allen bill?

Mr. HOBBS. That is true.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain what justification was advanced for the registration of noncitizens of this country?

Mr. HOBBS. I think the distinguished gentleman from New York, who is one of the most brilliant and able Members of this House, knows full well the purpose of that provision. I will be happy to yield to him in order to allow him to voice his protest against it.

We all must admit that there never has been a time in the history of this country when it was so necessary to identify all of the residents of this land. Fingerprinting is the modern way of positive identification, and if there is any reason whatsoever why any person does not desire to be fingerprinted and registered, there may be a good reason for his wish not to be fingerprinted, and thus identified. We believe that the more objection there is to registration or fingerprinting, the more reason there is for the requirement.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Wherein does the registration provision in this report differ from that contained in the original bill that was considered by our committee?

Mr. HOBBS. In the bill considered by our committee, as the distinguished gentleman, my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, knows, there was this same provision in substance. But on account of the expense entailed and because of the fact that the census was about to be taken and much of this information would be gleaned by that, we omitted from the bill that we favorably reported to the House the general provision, leaving in it the requirement only that every alien applying for a visa in a foreign country should be fingerprinted. The exigencies of the case a year later induced the Senate to write substantially the same provisions which were originally reported by our committee to the House, and we have agreed to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I believe that the compromises made by the conferees are most creditable, but I would like to know just a little something concerning the hardship cases. There is a memorandum in the statement which I do not quite understand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

These so-called hardship cases are taken care of in this way. Any alien who is illegally in this country is given a chance to convince the Attorney General that there would be an economic loss to a citizen of the United States if he should be deported. Then, if and when he shows to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that that is so, that he has a wife—or in the case of a woman, a husband—who will suffer by reason of the deportation, the Attorney General may, if, in his sound discretion, after full hearing, he so determines, order the suspension or cancelation of the deportation order; provided, however, that he must report every case to the Congress; and if the Congress, by concurrent resolution, vetoes his decision, of course the deportation order stands.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always delighted to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have had letters recently asking why Congress does not outlaw the Communist, Nazi, and Fascist organizations in this country. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that title I of this bill goes as far in that direction as we can go under the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. HOBBS. It is, and I believe that the results will be wholly efficacious. Of course, I respectfully submit that we should never go to the extent of calling names of particular persons or organizations in legislation. In this connection it must be borne in mind that many of the Communists in the United States, many of the Nazis and Fascists, are American citizens. We have no power whatever to deport any citizen. Hence, any provision of law which would make deportable all Communists, or all Nazis, or all Fascists, would be plainly condemned by the Constitution. This bill in its deportation provisions, therefore, is strictly limited to aliens and to those aliens who have committed a deportable offense.

I am glad that the distinguished gentleman correctly limited his inquiry to title I, which does not deal with deportation at all. It is strictly a criminal statute applying to any person who may commit any of the numerous offenses described therein, and punishes any person who violates any of its provisions upon conviction thereof by fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both. In addition to fine and imprisonment, it also provides that no person convicted of violating the provisions of title I shall, during the 5 years next following his conviction, be eligible for employment in the United States or by any department or agency thereof—including any corporation, the stock of which is wholly owned by the United States.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, before I yield the floor, I feel that I must advert to the subject discussed a few minutes ago by the able and distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Parity prices for farm products is a subject very dear to my heart, I think I introduced the first resolution, or bill, in the history of the Congress, seeking that end. I have been fighting for parity for 6 years. I am certain that parity is the only way to attain and maintain general, national prosperity.

But, with the highest respect for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and for his opinion, I cannot agree with him in his criticism of our Committee on Agriculture. Much of his argument is as true as gospel. The facts he gave are accurate and convincing. But I have faith in the ability, the integrity, and the zeal of the members of that great committee. I am sure that they are sympathetic with the tragic plight of every American farmer, and sincere in their efforts to promote his interests. They have worked, and will continue to work, for the good of agriculture.

The fact that they do not seem to appreciate the vital necessity for parity prices for farm products as the only guaranty of general, Nation-wide prosperity, does not mean that they are drones, nor that they lack interest in their work. They are winding up and I predict that they will pitch.

Most of us, I hope, join in the prayer of the gentleman from Missouri, CLARENCE CANNON, for action with all the expedition possible. This is not only an S O S appeal for the farmer, but also for every other American. All business needs the market which fair treatment of agriculture would mean.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], one of the conferees.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to verify what the distinguished gentleman from Alabama has stated with reference to this bill. I may add that the Commissioner of Immigration, the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General had representatives at the conference and made certain suggestions. Those suggestions were adopted, and the bill as it is now drawn has the approval of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner of Immigration.

The bill was redrafted in the Senate and put in much better form than the House bill. The only important change is the one which has already been alluded to, the provision providing for the fingerprinting and registration of aliens in this country. Although it will cause them some inconvenience. honest aliens should not object to proper identification. A year ago this provision in the bill might have been rejected, but we now know that the modern technique of war involves "fifth columns." Aliens come from foreign countries illegally or under one pretext or another to organize espionage, sabotage, and subversive movements. We regard it as a measure of self-defense to provide for the fingerprinting and registration of all aliens in the United States. We also regard it as a safeguard to know something about their activities and their movements here.

I may say that the conferees spent 5 or 6 hours considering this conference report, and they are unanimous in recommending its adoption. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, this may be a very good bill; I have not read it. If it is what they say it is, I will support it. Nevertheless, this bill should not supplant the Allen bill, because all the Allen bill does is to draw the attention of officers of the United States who have not done their duty and direct them to do their duty. If the officers of the United States had done their duty, this bill, perhaps, would not have been necessary. No bill, I do not care what it is, will be any good unless the officers of the United States enforce it. If the officers of the United States do not enforce the laws, there is only one thing left for this Congress to do, and that is to impeach those officers and put in officers who will enforce them. I refer to the head of the Department of Justice now, and I certainly refer to Mme. Perkins in her refusal to enforce the law she already has on the books. The Allen bill simply directs officers of the United States to do their duty, and it should be continued and become law. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], the author of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to consume the time of the House except, as the author of the bill, to express my gratification that it is approaching the stage of adoption. I also wish to express my gratitude to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, especially the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], who have worked so assiduously on this difficult proposition.

I believe it ought to be said that this bill has in it every substantive proposition that was in the original bill, and every substantive provision that was in the bill that passed the House last year with only 48 negative votes.

I believe it should also be said at this time, in view of the attacks that were made on the bill at the time of its passage last year, that this bill is not intended to persecute aliens generally, it is not intended as a measure to put any restrictions other than proper restrictions upon those visitors within our gates. We should all realize, however, that in these times of stress we should be able to identify and know something about the noncitizens who are with us, and that we should take proper precaution to see that other aliens who would not be desirable citizens are not permitted to enter the country. I do not believe that any alien within our gates who is a desirable alien will for one moment object to having the protection, both to this country and to himself, of having himself properly identified so that he may be under the protection of our Government and so that our Government may know where he is at all times. I hope that this bill will not be construed as a general attack upon the many very fine aliens who are in our country today.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does not the gentleman believe that perhaps the annoyance and inconvenience to which many aliens will be put in registering will perhaps act as an invitation to them to change their status from that of alien to that of citizen?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have no doubt that it will be a very strong reminder of that. [Applause.]

For the information of those Members who have not had an opportunity to read the conference report, I would like to give a brief statement of the provisions of the bill as finally contained in the conference report. The bill provides as follows:

It makes it unlawful for any person to attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or mutiny in the United States naval and military forces;

It makes it unlawful to advocate the overthrow or destruction of the Government of the United States by force or violence or by the assassination of any official of such Government, or to print, publish or distribute written or printed matter advocating the same or to organize or help organize any society or group who advocates the overthrow of the Government by force or to become a member of any such group;

The bill also makes it unlawful for any person to attempt to commit or conspire to commit any such offense;

The bill also provides for the deportation of aliens who knowingly for gain assist other aliens to enter the country in violation of the law, of aliens convicted of possessing machine guns, of aliens violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act, and of aliens sentenced for violation of the narcotics act of any State;

The bill further provides that any alien hereafter applying for a visa to enter the United States shall be registered and fingerprinted before being permitted to do so;

As to aliens already in the United States, the bill provides that within 4 months after its effective date, every resident alien shall register and be fingerprinted at his local post office. Provisions are made for the mechanical arrangements for carrying out the details of registration through the various post offices. The records of such registrations are then to be forwarded to the Department of Justice to be filed with the Immigration Commissioner;

The act becomes effective with respect to registration 60 days after its enactment;

Any alien changing his post-office address is required to notify the Commissioner of Immigration within 5 days after such change of address and each alien is required to also notify the Commission in writing of his address at the expiration of each 3-month period.

Penalties are provided for violation of any provisions of the act.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, at the very outset I want to pay my personal tribute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] for having struck a blow in favor of constitutional procedure last week when he voted against the Bridges bill. I believe the gentleman from Alabama is one of the most distinguished constitutional authorities in this House, and I am always rather hesitant to take issue with him because of his ability and his integrity. However, he and I represent two different viewpoints with regard to the alien question and various other aspects of our Bill of Rights.

It seems to me that in a period as trying as is this period, the test of a democracy lies in the ability of that democracy to maintain its liberties, to preserve those liberties, and to have more freedom rather than less freedom during the period of crisis. I know that the overwhelming majority of the Members of this body believe to the contrary, so here we have two opposing philosophies with regard to democratic rights in America. I maintain that the philosophy advanced under this bill, a bill which establishes a Federal criminal syndicalist law, a bill which enacts into law a military disaffection bill, which has been fought bitterly in this Congress for years and years, a bill which now provides for the registration of every noncitizen in the United States, represents that philosophy of restricting liberty and freedom in America; and we restrict that liberty and freedom under the guise of protecting our American democracy.

I believe this is the most incongruous proposition I have ever heard. On one hand you say that you want to preserve American liberty and you then attempt to preserve American liberty by destroying American liberty. You are curtailing democratic rights in America under the guise of trying to protect American democracy. You end, if you carry out your course, with no freedom and no democracy. Such has been the history of nations that did just what we are now doing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I know that, perhaps, I am just a voice in the wilderness on this question, the wilderness in this case being Congress, for I believe that my views reflect the traditional love of freedom on the part of the American people, but I take this position because I want to preserve American democracy. To me it means a great deal, it means a great deal to the people I represent, but you cannot preserve American democracy by destroying it, by curtailing it, or by limiting it. American democracy can live only by letting it live. Amputation of the Bill of Rights will not permit American democracy to live, it will kill it, and what I am fearful of is that under the guise of supporting and maintaining our American way of life, by this type of legislation we are taking steps with seven-league boots toward establishing in America, in free America, the slavelike institutions of Nazi Germany.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am quite certain that the distinguished gentleman from New York will readily concede the right of democracy to protect itself.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There is no question about that. A democracy has a perfect right to protect itself, but remember this: You are not protecting democracy by this legislation. Spies and saboteurs will not register nor submit to fingerprinting. You are not protecting democracy by discriminating against the noncitizen by forcing him to be fingerprinted and registered. What difference is there between this procedure and that of Gestapo Germany? What protection are you giving our democracy when you substitute for the traditions and institutions of American freedom the concepts and practices of Hitlerism? I believe that spies and saboteurs and anybody who engages in any illegal activity should be immediately apprehended and severely punished. You do not accomplish that end by this bill. You only undermine American freedom. You pass this kind of legislation and what are you doing? You are destroying the very thing you say you are trying to protect, and that is going to the very roots of American democracy as you are hitting at its very foundations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, judging the temper of the Nation, I believe this compromise report is the best to be had under the circumstances and I shall vote for it despite the fact that I am not inclined to have fingerprinting of aliens—in fact I am opposed in principle to it. I would much prefer fingerprinting of the entire population and I want to point out that I have the fear that the danger in this legislation will fall, not upon aliens necessarily, but upon citizens. Many citizens in this Nation today cannot prove that they are citizens. In the old days many babies were brought into the world by midwives and no records of births have been kept. In many instances files of naturalization papers have been lost. Courthouses and county clerks' offices have been destroyed and those who wish to find the records of their birth or the records of their naturalization may be sorely put to it, and there may be some rascals in the Nation who will prey upon these citizens who cannot give proof of their naturalization or of their having been born in this land of ours. Will Rogers, some time ago, tried to get a passport. He had to prove his citizenship. He could not procure a record of his ever having been born here. He was sorely put to it to convince the Department of State he was a citizen. Ordinarily, in the absence of records, birth or citizenship is established by testimony of two or more eyewitnesses as to birth or naturalization. I will bet few of us in this Chamber could bring forth without the greatest difficulty two witnesses who happened to be present at our birth.

See, therefore, how difficult we may make it for citizens who might be accused of being noncitizens. Blackmailers and culprits will be busy in this regard.

I do hope, therefore, that the appropriate committee in due course will give consideration to the question of the registering of all persons, aliens and citizens alike, and that proof of birth or naturalization be established more easily. I am for that wholeheartedly, and I may say that there are those who deal in Trojan-horse processes whom we call "fifth columnists," in the ranks of citizens, as well as in the ranks of aliens. There should be attempts made to get after those citizens, as well as getting after the aliens who deal in subversive activities, who seek to overthrow our Government, unfortunately, by force and violence. The Moseleys and Pelleys and Browders are not aliens. They are citizens, and I hope that the time will soon come when we shall have the privilege of voting for fingerprinting and registration of aliens and citizens alike.

Furthermore, I think the conferees have done a good job; because the punishment is not too great that falls upon the alien who deliberately fails to register. There must be proof brought by the authorities that the alien willfully refuses to register himself or a minor under his charge. If there are cases or hardship, old persons above 70 or 80 who do not know the statute, who cannot read or write English, to whom knowledge has not been brought home as to the necessity of registration, it must be proved in such cases that they willfully refused to register.

It is for these reasons that I am going to accept this conference report, despite the fact that I have always resisted registration of aliens, and I do hope—and I repeat this with all the vehemence within me and with all the strength within me—that there may be registration of all persons within the confines of the United States.

A provision has been added to the bill which softens considerably its severity. I refer to section 22, which provides that aliens shall not be deported on account of acts committed prior to the effective date of the act. Originally the act was retroactive. Any reprehensible act, interdicted by the act, like the use of narcotics, possession of firearms, and so forth, any time prior to the effective date of the act, could cause deportation. This meant that the dereliction of duty covered by the act which occurred scores of years ago could come back to plague the unfortunate alien, regardless of the expiation of the wrong or the unassailable conduct of the alien in the interim. Such unjust provision has been eliminated from the act. However, the act is, nevertheless, retroactive in regard to aliens who are members of the anarchist or similar classes. I believe it would have been better to eliminate even such retroactive provisions.

In the original act provision was made for the suspension of deportation in hardship cases. But that suspension could be effected only by a specific act of Congress in each specific case. It would have been impossible to get both Houses to act in that fashion. There are a number of alien-baiting Members in both Houses who never would vote to suspend deportation no matter how cruel and inexorably unjust, because of extenuating circumstances, such deportation would be. But the conferees have now seen the light and have provided that the Attorney General shall have the discretionary power to suspend deportation in these hardship cases. His action shall not be vetoed or gainsaid unless Congress specifically vetoes or cancels his waiver of deportation or suspension of deportation in each case. This is a great difference. It makes the act humane and reasonable. It was inhumane and unreasonable before.

While I am at it, I will say something concerning the activities of a certain Senator from the State of North Carolina by the name of REYNOLDS. He is a distinguished gentleman, but his views on aliens are most severe and unfair. He amended the so-called La Follette civil-liberties bill to forbid the employment of more than 10 percent of aliens engaged in any industry in interstate commerce. Such amendment shows how far the Senate and even the House occasionally can go in their alien-baiting activities. Frankly, this Reynolds amendment is palpably unconstitutional. Prior to the last war, Arizona passed a statute to the effect that every businessman in Arizona, when employing more than five persons, must see to it that 80 percent of the personnel be citizens. This law was declared unconstitutional in 1915. Chief Justice Hughes delivered the opinion. He was then an Associate Justice. He said:

> It requires no argument to show that the right to work for a living in the common occupations of the community is of the very essence of the personal liberty and opportunity that it was the purpose of the [fourteenth] amendment to secure. The discrimination is against aliens as such in competition with citizens in the described range of enterprises, and in our opinion it clearly falls under the condemnation of the fundamental law.

Some of the headnotes of this case, known as Truax and the Attorney General of the State of Arizona v. Raich (239 U. S. 33) are, as follows:

> An alien admitted to the United States under the Federal law has not only the privilege of entering and abiding in the United States but also of entering and abiding in any State, and being an inhabitant of any State entitles him, under the fourteenth amendment, to the equal protection of its laws.
>
> The description in the fourteenth amendment of any person within the jurisdiction of the United States includes aliens (Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356)).
>
> The right to work for a living in the common occupations of the community is of the essence of that personal freedom and opportunity which it was the purpose of the fourteenth amendment to secure.
>
> The power to control immigration—to admit or exclude aliens—is vested solely in the Federal Government, and the States may not deprive aliens so admitted of the right to earn a livelihood as that would be tantamount to denying their entrance and abode.
> A State may not, in order to protect citizens of the United States, in their employment against noncitizens of the United States in that State, require that employers only employ a specified percentage of alien employees—such a statute denies to alien inhabitants the equal protection of the law and so held as to statute of Arizona of December 14, 1914.

In conclusion, I repeat, we should register aliens and citizens alike. There should be no discrimination. I drew the minority report against this bill originally, because it provided some very harsh provisions against aliens. Some of the harshness and some of the severity of the original bill have been eliminated. Nevertheless, the bill is still a bitter pill to swallow. Frankly, I do not like it, but I must admit that it is the best to be had under the circumstances. We must be mindful of the dangerous times in which we are now living. Candidly, I am informed that if we do not accept this bill, we will get one far worse. Any bill containing dreadful provisions against the alien would pass this House with no substantial opposition. In common parlance, it would go through "like a dose of salts." I am, therefore, endeavoring to be practical. In fear of a worse bill, we must accept this bill.

Incidentally, this bill will affect 360,000 Russians, 365,000 Germans, 500,000 Poles, and 700,000 Italians.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Did the committee consider fingerprinting of the entire Nation?

Mr. CELLER. I do not believe that was given any real thought. I do not think the bill was considered in that special light at all.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. I agree with the gentleman that that should be done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 142, noes 4.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty Members present; not a quorum. The question is on the adoption of the conference report. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 382, nays 4, not voting 45, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Index Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A REPUBLICAN WARNING ON RECENT CABINET APPOINTMENTS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WARREN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

CHARGES FOR ELECTRICAL ENERGY, BOULDER DAM

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and appoint conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HAWKS, and Mr. HILL.

MAJ. SMEDLEY BUTLER

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to pay tribute to a man who passed away yesterday at Philadelphia, Pa., a great soldier, a great citizen of the Republic, Maj. Gen. Smedley Butler. He was every inch a soldier, the one man who had the distinction of coming up from the ranks of a humble private to become a major general in the military forces of the United States. Twice the Congress of the United States conferred medals of honor upon him. He distinguished himself on the field of battle; always he was courageous as a soldier and as a private citizen. For the last 8 years he toured this country, pleading for national defense and opposing wars of aggression. As a soldier he knew what war propaganda was. I occupied the platform with him on many occasions, before huge gatherings of our citizens when he protested against our entrance into foreign wars. Repeatedly he inveighed against the warmongers and the international bankers who cause these man-made wars. His passing now is a national calamity to those of us who insist that Congress remain in session and not adjourn, but watch these "fifth columns" and propaganda agencies, especially the British agencies, that are drawing us closer and closer to the brink of war. This great soldier is no more, but in his memory I hope we will emulate Smedley Butler in fighting the insanity of war. God rest his soul.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a resolution of the State Federation of Labor of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an address by Dr. George Norlin, of the University of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE WILL ROGERS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the following concurrent resolution:

Whereas the city of Santa Monica, Calif., the last home town of Will Rogers, is holding memorial ceremonies dedicated to the memory of the late Will Rogers on July 25, 26, 27, 1940, and in further recognition of the good will achieved by Will Rogers through his life and works: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That this resolution be adopted as a mark of respect and appreciation of the efforts during the lifetime of Will Rogers, to bring about national and international peace and good will.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the time to eulogize Will Rogers, because I believe he spoke for himself. I hope this resolution may be speedily adopted.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri, Mr. MCGREGOR, and Mr. MOSER were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two subjects: In one to include a letter from the Attorney General to Senator RUSSELL and in the other to include a brief newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of our late colleagues, J. Will Taylor, Sam D. McReynolds, and Carl E. Mapes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TREATMENT OF ALIENS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a word to the people of America. We are coming under the influence of war psychology or something very closely akin to it. Public interest is very acute and public feeling is very tense. There are many foreign-born persons, many aliens, in this country, here by invitation, here by permission. In dealing with all questions which arise out of this acute situation, and which may become even more acute, the people of the several communities, the people who are responsible for community attitude, should feel a tremendous responsibility and duty to protect these minorities, these people in our midst, against any unreasonable, unwarranted acts, especially on the part of irresponsible people, which may amount to persecution by a majority of a helpless minority. I do not at all mean that the people of this country should be indulgent with reference to what is called subversive activities, this "fifth columnist," whether alien, naturalized, or native. I mean people scattered throughout the country who are behaving themselves who happen not to be American citizens or are foreign-born. I have heard of a few—I am glad a very few—instances of great injustices being done. It is not only unfair, but it is contrary to sound public policy. On the other hand, these people must realize the situation and so conduct themselves as not to add to the difficulties of their protection. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article which appeared in the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. I make a second request, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks and include a quotation from Senate Report No. 944 on the munitions industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CONFESSION OF FAILURE

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks by including an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LEWIS of Ohio addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] may extend his own remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a short editorial from the Sunbury (Pa.) Item.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the Bucyrus (Ohia) Telegraph Forum.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on Smedley D. Butler, who was a great American, a great Marine, and a son of a former distinguished Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio address delivered by the Honorable Louis Johnson on the question of coal and security.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a recent article published by the Down Town Association of San Francisco.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial received from Mr. D. C. DeVaney, a former State president of the South Dakota Press Association, and a copy of the letter I sent him in acknowledgment thereof.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein an excerpt from the United States News of May 24.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the power plant at Cascade Locks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and to extend my remarks and to include therein an article from the Oregonian, an outstanding article on the Age of Machines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

GEN. SMEDLEY BUTLER

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, announcement has just been made of the death of that great soldier, Gen. Smedley Darlington Butler, son of former Representative Thomas S. Butler, who was dean of this body and who represented the Eighth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, part of which it is now my privilege to represent.

General Butler had a brilliant record in the United States Marines. His service in Latin American waters, China, the Philippines, and all over the world is a part of the glorious history of the Marine Corps.

He will be mourned by a host of friends for his fearless devotion to and defense of Americanism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a short report from the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks on the W. P. A.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein brief excerpts from rules and regulations and also a list of alien agents registered with the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include certain extraneous matter therein.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by Mr. Charles Ruzicka, a member of the standing committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association, before the House Judiciary Committee on April 3, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt's attempt to purge Democratic Senators and Representatives elected by the people who had the courage of their convictions in fearlessly upholding constitutional government is a matter of history. It has left a bad impression in the minds of the American people.

The purge of Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring of Kansas because of his opposition to our involvement in the European war and his unwillingness to denude the defenses of America, at the dictation of President Roosevelt, goes far beyond former attempts to purge Members of Congress in his own party. It creates a Nation-wide and national issue that transcends all party lines and involves the actual defense of the United States.

There should be a complete and thorough investigation of all the facts to ascertain if Secretary of War Woodring, a former past commander of the American Legion of the State of Kansas, is being purged because of his opposition to intervention and war, to selling Army equipment needed for our own defense, and the alleged attempt to divulge Army secret inventions including our airplane bomb sight. [Applause.]

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes," and that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39 to said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 543 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 543

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 10127, a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition to this rule. It is fair and equitable in every respect. This is, however, a very important piece of legislation and it should be discussed and debated very carefully. Therefore I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts from the committee reporting this bill [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult indeed to decide what opposition there ought to be to this bill. It is another chip that we are placing on our shoulder. As a neutral nation, so-called, we are taking upon ourselves great responsibilities. For a very few brief moments of hearing, the Federal Reserve officials came before the committee. I would like to call your attention to the features in the bill, and trust you have a copy of the report before you.

Heretofore the Federal Reserve could do business only with foreign correspondents and their agencies. Now it is to be with foreign states, governments, and instrumentalities thereof, and in the second section of the bill they include persons or partnerships—everybody. It not only includes money that the Federal Reserve bank may accept for safekeeping but even if they sell something at the request of the depositor and turn it into money—jewelry, for instance—they keep control of it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make this plain: The Federal Reserve may now be a depository for other nations and their citizens of their wealth in all practical forms, and may keep it here until the Secretary of State recognizes the nation that he may deem entitled to it after wars are over. If a Frenchman wants us to keep his wealth, we may. If the German Embassy appears and says, "I am ordered by my Government, who has acquired, by code, treaty, deed, or in any way, this property, to demand that you give it to me," the Federal Reserve may simply say: "We cannot until the Secretary of State has recognized that that former government does not now exist. The President has declared that we cannot recognize any nation acquiring the property of another nation by force."

The edict has gone forth already, as everyone knows. I wish I could recall the exact words of the President, but he stated in substance, "We will still recognize that government subjugated by an invader by force." There is Norway, Czechoslovakia, and the others. How about it? Is there not a Czechoslovakian Embassy still in Washington and recognized by our State Department? If they ask us to keep these goods inviolate, of course, we must keep them.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. What is wrong with that policy? Are we to recognize these predatory governments that are preying on small nations in Europe and are we to surrender to them such property as is in the United States? What is wrong with a policy that is against that sort of thing?

Mr. GIFFORD. Did the gentleman hear my first remark? I am not declaring against the policy. We have done that already, but shall we vote for a bill unless we know what we are voting for? We decided recently that non-American nations shall not take title to land in this hemisphere now owned by another non-American nation. That was the first chip. This is another. The Federal Reserve wants to protect itself from the courts. No court can attach this money. We as a government stand back of the Federal Reserve, no matter what they do. The policy may be correct, but do you know what you are doing when you legislate it?

Would any other nation on this globe dare make such an assertion? I recall again the edict of nonrecognition of the invader has gone forth. Of course, the Secretary of State must back up his President and say he will not recognize such a nation. I wonder if the old Ethiopian Government is still recognized? I wish you would read this bill, because it may go too far. It provides that bankers and governments and their instrumentalities in the other nations may deposit for safety with the Federal Reserve. Not only governments or any instrumentality of governments but defines persons who may be allowed the privilege. We may withhold from Germany, the conqueror, any of these goods. If you want to do it, let us do it with our eyes wide open. It is a very simple proposition, and there is little use enlarging upon it any more. That is practically all there is to it. Small wonder the Federal Reserve is worried. They want to avoid lawsuits; they want to be able to say politely to the German Ambassador, if he arrives with an order for these goods, "We cannot deliver these goods because we still recognize the former governments." They wish to place all responsibility on the Secretary of State, if by error in judgment they be forced to pay twice. Also to prevent any court action. He says, "But we have title." We say, "Well, that does not make any difference. We will not give it up." That is a declaration of an unfriendly act toward the conquering nation, without any question. So we are so able to withstand that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman desire any more time?

Mr. GIFFORD. About a quarter of a minute.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes. I am in a very generous mood today.

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot seem to bait anybody into making any inquiries.

Mr. FISH. I was hoping that if the gentleman continued someone would ask him a question.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is a dose of medicine everybody is taking without making any faces.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is quite right.

Mr. GIFFORD. They know it is a big dose of medicine to take, but it is the policy of the President and at this particular moment no criticism should be made of his foreign policy. I am hoping somebody will want to know something about the bill and ask a question. Let me read from the bill:

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "property" shall include, without limitation, gold, silver, currency, credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein; the term "foreign state" shall include, without limitation, any foreign government or any department, district, province, county, possession, or other similar governmental organization or subdivision of a foreign government, and any agency or instrumentality of any such foreign government or of any such organization or subdivision.

Then the bill goes on to declare what the term "person" shall include.

The Federal Reserve is to be protected by this Government against any possible action of recovery by a friendly power. Is the German Embassy still established in Washington? Are they still able to come to the State Department to demand their rights? If they are, and when they demand them, and we say, "We cannot give you your rights because we do not recognize that you have the rights yet," then I think you are taking simply another step, that is all.

Is there no one here who cares to make an observation?

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; but I wish Members on this side would ask questions.

Mr. BENDER. Does not the gentleman believe this is in keeping with our good-neighbor policy?

Mr. GIFFORD. In keeping with our good-neighbor policy?

Mr. BENDER. It is a very good-neighbor policy.

Mr. GIFFORD. I read the other day that our Secretary of State, highly esteemed by me and everybody else, was wandering around in a dazed, stunned condition. A good-neighbor policy toward Germany? What we have heard in high places the last 2 years, the accumulation of it all, is ruinous to any good-neighbor policy. Oh, this is something short of war, that is all.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is this bill set up to protect the funds not only of foreign states but of foreign international bankers as well?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. In other words, does it place the United States in the position of acting as a protective depository for all of the funds of all of the international bankers who are now being warred upon?

Mr. GIFFORD. Outside of Germany. But any person or partnership may take the jewelry and turn it into money. They will take anything.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman mean that any person now residing in a foreign country can deposit his jewelry with the Federal Reserve banks?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly, and turn it into cash or leave it there.

Mr. HINSHAW. That makes the United States responsible for the protection of their property that is in the United States against the foreign government that may have attacked them?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely, and we will hold it just so long as the President's edict continues, "we will not recognize Germany's right to anything belonging to any nation she has taken by force."

I am sorry that you do not want to hear about this, but perhaps the Chairman will gloss it over.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], a member of the committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, we cannot very well overlook the fact that civilization as it operates today makes use of banking facilities. We also have to bear in mind that for some 25 or more years we have had our banking facilities definitely tied into the Federal Reserve System. We must also recognize that in this day and age we permit our banks to accept deposits of governments and central banks of other governments, and in recent years we have received billions of dollars of deposits in the form of what might be termed "hot money." At the same time, the stock of our Federal Reserve banks is owned by the member banks. The stock of the member banks in turn is held by individual citizens of the United States.

As I comprehend this bill, it is to be enacted for the protection of the structure of the 12 Federal Reserve banks and their 25 branches and our whole banking system. If we do not want to protect that banking system as such, it is about time we divorced our other banking structure, that is, the State banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System and the national banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System, so that they do not dovetail into the Federal Reserve System. Of course, the Congress has no idea of taking such a step at this time. Therefore, it becomes necessary for us to protect the structure of the 12 Federal Reserve banks and, as I comprehend this proposal, that is exactly what it does insofar as foreign deposits in those banks are concerned.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. How does it do that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The central banks of other governments as well as the governments themselves carry deposits with our Federal Reserve banks, at least some of them. This bill prohibits our Federal Reserve banks from getting into lawsuits which might cause judgment to be granted against them by courts on account of deliveries of those deposits they might make to belligerents, conquered territories, and so forth. Unless we do something of this kind, it seems to me there is a possibility that foreign governments may bring suit against our Federal Reserve banks, and get judgment, and thereby set in operation forces that will run contrary to all of the member banks which have their reserves deposited with the Federal Reserve bank and all of our citizens who have their funds deposited in the member banks which go to make up the Federal Reserve Banking System.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. How did we get into a position where a foreign government, by placing its funds on deposit with us, could, in turn, ruin all the Federal Reserve banks in the United States?

Mr. CRAWFORD. As an illustration, suppose Germany forces France to consent to an absolute surrender of the deposits of the French Government or the Central Bank of France, now held by our Federal Reserve System, and suppose Germany makes some Low Country or some other country over there surrender title to their deposits over here under duress; and then suppose Germany demands that those deposits be turned over by our Federal Reserve bank to the German representatives; and suppose our banks refuse to do so and say, "No; we will not act until the courts say what the situation shall be." Immediately your Federal Reserve banks become involved in litigation. Now, suppose the banks, instead of saying we will wait until the courts act, make a delivery of the funds and later on some other suit is brought for payment to a third party? In other words, I feel, in spite of all the legal technicalities that may be wrapped around this thing, that, after all, we live in a practical world; and, after all, we are going to need bank facilities with which to do business even on a barter basis.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are going to do business through banks if this civilization continues. Therefore, if the Congress is going to say what banks may or may not do, Congress might just as well make up its mind to assume some responsibilities in connection with banking in the years to come, particularly the immediate years now ahead of us. I think we are, perhaps, just starting into the woods and not getting out of them at all.

If that has not answered the gentleman's question, let me put it this way: So long as we permit our banking system to accept the deposits of foreign governments and other banking systems, we may or may not be faced with problems such as are involved in this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. In other words, if these deposits had been accepted by some international bank like J. P. Morgan & Co. instead of the Federal Reserve System, then our Federal Reserve System would not be liable in the event Germany would make this demand for French deposits that are now here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; they certainly would not. The Federal Reserve bank is not liable for something it has no connection with whatsoever.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I gather from the gentleman's statement that on account of the fact that the Federal Reserve bank has foreign government deposits, that that makes us liable for the protection of those deposits in case that foreign government goes down?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If our Federal Reserve banks accept these dollar deposits or deposits of gold bullion, there is a contractual relationship between the banks and the depositors. There is no getting away from that. I do not think this Congress is going to extend its neck by saying to the Federal Reserve banks, the fiscal agents of the United States Government, that they must not accept deposits of foreign countries or, say, of central banks.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do they not accept these deposits without liability in the first instance?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You cannot accept deposits without liability, because the laws and the courts and the precedents all show that there is a contractual legal debt and, certainly, the gentleman does not mean that.

Mr. HINSHAW. So we have gold down here at Fort Knox, Ky., with our soldiers standing guard over it day and night for and on behalf of the French Government?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; the earmarked gold does not enter into your monetary system and therefore it does not go into your gold reserve deposits at Fort Knox, Ky.

Mr. HINSHAW. Where does it go?

Mr. CRAWFORD. But if a central bank of Europe wishes to deposit earmarked gold with our Federal Reserve Bank at New York, the Federal Reserve will accept the deposit, not a book transaction insofar as monetary transactions are concerned, but, of course, there is an account kept of the earmarked deposits made.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is that concerned in this bill—the earmarked gold?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It certainly is.

Mr. HINSHAW. If they demand that earmarked gold of the French Government from us and the French Government in their treaty of peace or by a declaration agrees to transfer that gold, then can our State Department still prevent that transfer under this act?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You are putting a lot of power here in the State Department, there is no question about that, and some may argue that therefore the State Department may get you into trouble with foreign governments. But the State Department, together with the President, very largely passes on all the other foreign relations, so I am not going to get scared about that and run down a back alley, so far as I am concerned. In other words, you are going to assume responsibility from here on, and plenty of it, and quite a bit by this proposition right here, and if you let the hot money come into this country, you are going to assume responsibilities in connection with that hot money as it relates to short-term and long-term investment.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As I understand this, the certification of the Secretary of State will exonerate the Federal Reserve System if they refuse to make a transfer, and will exempt them from any possible law suits.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think if we pass this bill the Federal Reserve banks will not have to make refusal. They will simply act when the Secretary of State certifies to whom the payment shall be made.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is the converse of that true, that if the Secretary of State orders a transfer, that no one can bring suit or test that transfer in law?

Mr. CRAWFORD. This language is very clear on that in my opinion. See lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 2, and lines 1 to 3 on page 3.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Line 18, page 2, the following language is found:

> And so long as the Secretary of State recognizes and accepts the authority so certified to him, shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful, and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability for or with respect to such property.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the language preceding that mean that not only is a refusal to transfer protected, but that a transfer is protected, in that if the Secretary of State recognizes A as the proper government, and A makes a transfer, that B can in no wise come in and contend he has the proper and legal right to contest that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the language is clear on page 3, line 3:

> No court shall, at the instigation of any third party, by attachment, injunction, or other similar proceeding, in any way, directly or indirectly, restrain or prevent a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property herein referred to.

In other words, I understand this bill protects the Federal Reserve Banking System going and coming, and if it does not, then, personally, I think proper legislation should be enacted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one other additional observation, if I may. Personally I have advocated that the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Treasury Department, and these other Government agencies which have jurisdiction over such matters, get control of this loot which the aggressor in Europe is picking up from these countries from time to time, and I think this bill moves in the direction which I have been asking, and I congratulate the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve officials for bringing in this legislation. There is one other point I want to mention, and may I have permission to extend in my remarks at this point a statement in reference to the silver loot which Germany has taken up in connection with some of the countries that have been overrun?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[From the New York Times of June 21, 1940]

MORGENTHAU TO SIFT RUMOR OF SALE BY NAZIS OF SILVER FROM INVASIONS—SECRETARY ACTS ON REPORTS LOOT IS REACHING TREASURY THROUGH MEXICO—RECEIPTS HELD USEFUL IN PROPAGANDA HERE

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Secretary Morgenthau will look into reports that Nazi invaders are selling looted silver to the United States by way of Mexico, he told his press conference today.

The Treasury is paying 35 cents an ounce for foreign silver under a policy of buying all that is offered by foreign sellers.

The Secretary confirmed today, however, that he had the power to prohibit purchase of foreign silver or limit it in any way which is found to be in the public interest.

Senator TOWNSEND'S bill to stop foreign silver buying has been passed by the Senate and is now before the House. An attempt to attach the Townsend measure as a rider to the defense tax bill was defeated in the Senate.

A check of Treasury records shows that the countries thus far invaded by Germany had at least 100,000,000 ounces of silver coins, many of which would be hoarded or carried away by refugees. On the other hand, it was believed a considerable amount might be in local banks, shops, and homes, easily available to the Nazis.

In addition to the silver coins which might be available, there would be a considerable amount of silver in the form of household utensils, jewelry, and other ornamentation which could easily be melted down for foreign sale.

Reports reaching here from Mexico indicate that it was part of the Nazi war plan to "cash in" on silver looted during invasions by selling it to the United States Treasury by way of Mexico, which is normally a heavy seller of silver to this country.

Assuming that the Nazis obtained 100,000,000 ounces of silver in their conquests and could sell it to the Treasury at the current price, $35,000,000 would be added to the Nazi war chest. Opinion here is that the sum would be used for propaganda or trade purposes in the Western Hemisphere, since the proceeds would be available to Nazi agents in the form of dollar credits.

In addition to the silver the Germans may have looted, Germany itself has a small amount of silver bullion, and the Italian Government recently called in its silver coinage, amounting probably to more than 10,000,000 ounces.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Here is a case where something like 100,000,000 ounces of silver are involved. Germany can move that silver through Mexico and sell it to the United States at 35 cents an ounce and pick up $35,000,000 as a result of disposing of the loot. Also there is $3,000,000,000 of credits running in favor of France and other defeated European countries. Personally I do not want that kind of silver operation to be carried on and used as a "blitzkrieg" against our people, and in charge of some very capable man like Mr. Schacht, because they can raise the very devil with our people as when and if the opportunity is given, and this bill is one way of our getting control of that situation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows that our country has approximately $14,000,000,000 of gold due it from many of these countries now being overrun. Does not the gentleman feel that before any of these funds are turned over to their conqueror we should attach the funds to apply on obligations due the United States rather than turn the funds over?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like very much to have the privilege of voting for such a bill, because why should an obligation of France to Germany be more sacred or important than an obligation of France to the United States, and if we are the holder of a billion dollars in gold and a billion or two dollars in credit, why have we to recognize the claim of Germany as against our claim against France?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. While the bill was in the committee I suggested we should have an amendment to that section of the bill in order to make it clear that we intended to hold that money until the debts were paid in case there was a balance, but Mr. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Bank, seemed to feel there was not time to draw such an amendment and consult the State Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman, and hope that he will be kind enough to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We have $1,200,000,000 due us from Germany. Does the gentleman know of any reason why a citizen of the United States could not begin attachment proceedings in any Federal court in this country and attach the credits due those belligerent nations which now owe us money?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not qualified to answer that question, but I can express my opinion about it; that is, I hope we do not give up two or three billion dollars worth of gold when we have a chance to make some collections for our own pocketbook.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I wish the gentleman had more time to discuss the question of "hot" money. There is no security anywhere in Europe at this time for those who have deposited their money for safety—who have gone from Germany, France, and everywhere else. They have deposited it in Switzerland. Switzerland is shaky. Considerable amounts of this money are coming here and, as the gentleman has said, a lot of silver and gold has come here through the back door. The other day we voted $1,608,000 for the transportation of $8,000,000,000 worth of gold from New York to Fort Knox, making a total of $19,000,000,000 at Fort Knox.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that. They have probably $7,000,000,000 worth of gold at Fort Knox. The balance is stored around in subtreasuries and elsewhere.

Mr. STEFAN. What is the balance?

Mr. CRAWFORD. About nineteen and one-half billion dollars altogether.

Mr. STEFAN. To whom does that other $9,000,000,000 belong that is not deposited at Fort Knox? As I understand it, none of the gold owned by foreign governments, individuals, and corporations is at Fort Knox at this time. Where is it located?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The earmarked gold does not enter into the Treasury account and does not enter into the monetary and banking system.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. STEFAN. The other $9,000,000,000 worth of gold belonging to foreign governments, do we have a record of that and to whom it belongs?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I do not understand that the foreign governments have $9,000,000,000 deposited in this country. The Treasury statement shows approximately nineteen and one-half or nineteen and three-quarters billion dollars in the hands of the Treasury. The Federal Reserve banks hold almost seventeen and one-half billion dollars' worth of certificates against the Treasury gold.

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, the gentleman understands that Federal Reserve banks are not Government banks as we know them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true; but they hold certificates, which are warehouse receipts, you might call them, or claims against the gold. If you take those certificates out of the Federal Reserve banks you have to substitute something in their place to offset the liabilities with the Federal Reserve banks. So you cannot do any monkey business in that respect.

Mr. STEFAN. Has your committee made any suggestion to the Treasury Department whereby we can in some way secure information or secure in a material way some of this gold which is owned by governments, which perhaps may not be governments tomorrow and which owe us money?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are securing it by issuing dollar credits against it at the rate of two or three hundred million dollars a week. So, apparently, we will get about all of it that we want.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. This bill not only refers to nations at war and this loot the gentleman is talking about, but to any nation where the laws, orders, or regulations of the United States impose controls or restrictions of any kind on the exporting or dealing in property in the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks which I made this afternoon with reference to the death of Maj. Gen. Smedley Butler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think somebody should tell the House that this bill has not had any hearings; that it was reported out without our knowing very much about it; and that under this bill when countries are conquered we will be in the position of having to protect their property. There is great temptation under this bill, therefore, for countries which fear aggression or are in the throes of battle with an aggressor, to send their property and their gold here in order that we shall protect it. The head of the Federal Reserve Bank told us it was very necessary that this bill go through quickly, but I do not mind saying it worries me to think of what might happen when frightened countries start shipping their property here. Congress is recessing quickly, yet some of us protested very loudly indeed, yesterday, at the bill coming out of committee.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Why is there emergency need for covering the property of nations that are not at war at all?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Eccles came to me after the committee meeting and said that the position I have just mentioned was right, and also that it was right for us to have the chance to hold foreign property in payment of war debts; yet he said this bill is necessary immediately on account of South American withdrawals. That is all I know in that respect.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. We shall expect someone to assure us that this is only to protect the Federal Reserve against attachment and trouble.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. GIFFORD. The bill, if you read it carefully, means, does it not, "Germany, if you want this money we have held intact for other people, come and get it"?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I have found that often when these administration bills come over, such as the spend-lend bill and the housing bill, they look small and concise and harmless, but after 6 weeks or so of investigation you find out that you have opened up a well without a bottom.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the address I delivered this morning may be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL LAND-BANK AND COMMISSIONER LOANS

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8450) to extend for 5 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land-bank and land-bank commissioner loans, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out "1945" and insert "1942."

Page 2, line 14, after "section", insert "shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring on or after July 22, 1937, and prior to July 1, 1940, and."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to extend for 2 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner loans."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the changes?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The only change in this measure is the length of time the bill is operative. As the House passed the bill it provided 3½ percent interest on land-bank and commissioner loans on farm mortgages for a 5-year period. The Senate limited it to a 2-year period. In view of the fact that the old rate goes back to July 1, after consulting with members of the committee we have thought it better to accept the limitation, as it makes no substantial change in the bill.

Mr. HOPE. I will say to the gentleman that while I would personally prefer to see the House provision retained, I agree with the gentleman that it is of sufficient importance to accept the Senate change and pass the bill at this time. I feel that the House is justified in concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Does the Senate amendment change the interest rate on commissioner loans, or does that remain at 3½ percent?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Senate did make a corrective change in that they permitted the 4-percent rate on commissioner's loans to continue until July 1 of this year, the end of the interest period.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, with the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized for 30 minutes. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this resolution is simply intended to protect instrumentalities of our Government against the possibility of multitudinous suits and unnecessary litigation. It so happens that quite recently a question confronted the Federal Reserve banks respecting a deposit made by a foreign government to be paid out to another government. The matter became involved in a controversy between the latter government and a banking institution. The Federal Reserve banks were then confronted with a problem such as this bill is designed to remedy. The Federal Reserve banks met that situation by pursuing their own judgment and the advice of its lawyers after consultation with other departments of the Government. They did so, however, at the risk of possible subsequent litigation.

The Federal Reserve banks, being instrumentalities of the Government, cannot sue or be sued without specific authority of law. The existing law confers that authority. What this bill undertakes to accomplish is to do away with the right to sue a Federal Reserve bank on the claim of a foreign government or the central bank or other agency of a foreign government in cases where the banks have discharged their liability by meeting the requirements outlined in this measure. These requirements are first that the Federal Reserve banks observe the licensing provisions of existing law respecting the payment of deposits or the delivery of properties to other governments or to the central banks of other governments. And second, by making payment to someone designated by the duly accepted representative of the foreign government.

This measure would authorize a Federal Reserve bank, when presented with a claim of another government or the central bank of another government, to avail itself of the protection provided by consulting the State Department, ascertaining the authority of the accredited representative of the foreign government, and acting upon the authority of that representative in determining to whom a claim for deposit should be paid. The provisions apply in case of a foreign state engaged in war or in which insurrection exists.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment. That is all this bill undertakes to do. The world is in confusion. A number of governments or nations have been overrun, but there has been no final adjustment of their status, and as we see from the press, there will not be until the end of the war, when each and every government involved will have its status determined in a final settlement. Pending that, many of these governments have incurred obligations in the United States in carrying on their activities. They have representation that necessitates expenditures for various purposes in this country. They have made purchases of products in this country that have not been paid for, and, of course, some of these governments are indebted to the Government of the United States.

There are questions arising daily that must be determined by the Federal Reserve banks with respect to meeting the obligations created by deposits with our Federal Reserve banks and property held by them. It would be an unfortunate thing if there should be litigation involving enormous amounts, and that is highly possible, because there are enormous amounts of deposits held by the Federal Reserve banks, either earmarked or otherwise. It is not inconceivable that suits might be brought for stupendous amounts. This would be very unfortunate and disturbing. Something should be done to enable the banks to discharge their liability and to be able to do so with certainty that their rights will be protected. That is all this bill undertakes to do.

No one need fear that these deposits will be returned until the accredited representative of the Government involved certifies to the Federal Reserve banks, with the approval of the State Department, upon the authority of the representative of the foreign government, the proper person to whom these obligations shall be paid. It is only desired to bring about a simplification of the methods by which our Federal Reserve banks may discharge their responsibility and that they may do so from this date on without waiting for adjustments of world complications and difficulties. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that under the existing law a foreign nation would be able to sue the Federal Reserve bank, just as it would be able to sue the Government?

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say to the gentleman that these deposits are, in fact, carried in the name of the central banks of these foreign governments and, of course, they would have a right to proceed in the courts and enforce their claims against the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate and the appointment of conferees; also that the managers on the part of the House may have authority to agree to Senate amendments with or without amendments notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XX.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. TAYLOR, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10127) with the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HARE. Then, as I understand, the purpose of this bill is to give the Federal Reserve banks the right to oppose suits by foreign governments as it has the right to oppose suits by individuals in this country without authority of law from this Congress?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know that I catch the gentleman's question. As I said a moment ago, the deposits at this time are carried in the name of the central banks of other countries. Of course, the central banks of other countries would have a perfect right to sue the Federal Reserve banks in the United States.

Mr. HARE. Under existing law?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right.

Mr. HARE. But, under the proposed law, they would not have the right to come in and bring suit without other authority of law or without the action contemplated by this act.

Mr. STEAGALL. This measure does not attempt to foreclose any right to apply to the courts for remedy in enforcing these claims against Federal Reserve banks except in cases where the property is claimed by a foreign government or its agencies or instrumentalities.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman has legislation here dealing with earmarked gold received from foreign sources. Do I understand that gold is used in connection with our monetary system?

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I understand what earmarking means. But who pays the bills? First, where is this gold stored?

Mr. STEAGALL. It is stored in the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is my understanding that as fast as gold is imported into the United States it is purchased by the Federal Government and stored at the expense of the Federal Government. Is this gold stored at the cost of the Government or the bank?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not able to tell the gentleman the details of the transaction in handling earmarked gold. I assume that there are some charges covering the movement by the Federal Reserve banks, but I have not inquired into that. But such gold is not bought by the Government.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that all gold must be owned by the Government, and nobody has a right to own gold but the Federal Government, not even the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. The Federal Reserve System does not undertake to own earmarked gold. It is simply held in storage and it does not enter into our gold transactions at all. It is not different from what it would be if an individual simply had in his possession gold owned by some individual in a foreign country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it the gentleman's understanding that large volumes of foreign-owned gold are deposited in this country for safekeeping with the Federal Reserve bank?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; I do not have the figures, but we know, of course, there are large amounts of earmarked gold. Earmarked gold, of course, is one of the things that is involved in this legislation, gold so held by the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is there any obligation on this gold except the warehouse receipts or certificates of deposit?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no necessity for anything other than the obligation of the Federal Reserve banks. The Federal Reserve banks, of course, would not undertake to secure a deposit of that sort, which is only held for safekeeping and cannot be used.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a general proposition, the gold comes in here, and as fast as it comes in it is turned over to the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks are paid in gold certificates?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is speaking about gold owned. That is another matter.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON. I see by the papers that France accepts an armistice. One does not know what the terms will be, but assuming that one of the terms by which France gets peace is that France agrees to transfer to Germany certain credits it has in this country, will this bill in any way keep the Federal Reserve from paying that money to Germany if the established Government in France so orders?

Mr. STEAGALL. That would be determined under the provisions of this bill and dealt with when the occasion arises. That would depend upon the representatives of France sent here and what our State Department said as to the authority.

Mr. SIMPSON. In effect, then, our State Department is in a position where they can, if they see fit, operate contrary to the wishes of the French Government, who are trying hard at this time to make peace, and we might in one way or another, if our Secretary of State saw fit, make it extremely difficult for a nation at war seeking peace to get the peace they desire?

Mr. STEAGALL. What we are undertaking to do here is to protect the Federal Reserve banks of this country against unnecessary litigation and possible suits in the courts.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Is not one of the purposes of this act to give authority to handle situations similar to that of which the gentleman is speaking?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is what the bill provides as to that responsibility. We would trust our State Department.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does the gentleman know of any occasion when any foreign country ever did attempt to sue the Federal Reserve bank?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; there has been no such occasion, and it may never arise, but we are undertaking to protect the Federal Reserve banks against such contingencies.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Would it not be true that since the Federal Reserve bank is an agency of our Government it could not be sued except with the permission of the Congress?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; we gave specific authority to the Federal Reserve banks to sue and be sued. This bill takes away the right to sue the Federal Reserve banks after they have complied with the requirements of this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to know if the chairman of our committee agrees with me, and I am sure I agree with him if this is his proposition, that it is far better for us to protect the people of the United States and our whole banking system through protecting the Federal Reserve banks in this manner than it is to let the goose run wild and have suits brought against the 12 Federal Reserve banks, which in turn involves our whole banking structure and all the deposits of our people.

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely. If it were not for the fact that the holdings of the member banks are limited in amount to 6 percent of their capital, as they are, it would be conceivable that a suit by one of these governments against the Federal Reserve banks might involve such an amount as would endanger the banking structure of the Nation.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Since, as the gentleman says, there has never been a suit of this kind, why is it necessary to bring in here a bill of this importance without any hearings? I understand the bill was reported out by the committee without any hearings.

Mr. STEAGALL. We had before the committee representatives of the different departments interested in this proposed legislation, and this measure is recommended by the Treasury, by the Governors of the Federal Reserve Board, by the Budget Bureau, and by the State Department. I have the letters here if the gentleman would care to see them. I did not care to take up time unnecessarily by reading the letters. We did not have time to reduce the hearings to writing and print them for the benefit of the House.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman says the committee did not have time. What is the reason the committee did not have time?

Mr. STEAGALL. Because this matter was presented to us a day or two ago and these are emergency conditions and developments that no man could foresee. There are conditions ahead of us that possibly no one can foresee. We are attempting to anticipate our difficulties as far as we can and protect the banking structure of the United States in the right to discharge their obligation by acting upon the authority of the Government interested in the deposits that are left here. We do not know of any better method by which to protect our banks.

Mr. BARTON of New York. That is the real purpose of the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly; that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BARTON of New York. And if the Polish Government makes a treaty of peace with Germany, a part of which involves the handing over of Polish money in this country to Germany, it is not the purpose for the bill to be rushed through now so we can say that we are not going to hand the money over?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; we are not undertaking to deal with that situation. They are matters that will be left in the realm of our international relationships to be handled by the Department of State. This bill is here for the purpose of protecting the banking structure of the United States against unnecessary litigation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think, probably, the most important part of this bill is the first amendment, which changes the policy of the Federal Reserve System, and that amendment should be considered in the light of the Johnson Act and the Neutrality Act.

We provide in section 1 of the bill that we establish a council of foreign banks and bankers and for foreign states and governments, agencies, and instrumentalities thereof. This, for the first time since the Federal Reserve System was set up, authorizes the Federal Reserve banks to take private accounts. Heretofore the Federal Reserve banks could establish accounts for other Federal Reserve banks for exchange purposes and they might open and maintain correspondents and agents in foreign governments as agents of the Federal Reserve bank, and they might open accounts with these agents of the Federal Reserve banks, but up to the time that this bill was presented to us, no attempt had ever been made to make it possible for the Federal Reserve banks to take private accounts.

Now, if there is any danger in this bill, it is not in the second section, which not only safeguards the banking structure of the United States, but also keeps this property of foreign governments in a position where we can make some use of it if we have to, but the danger, if there is any, lies in section 1 of the bill which makes the Federal Reserve banks the fiscal agents of belligerent countries.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. The present law states that the Federal Reserve may have accounts for such foreign correspondents or agencies. Therefore, they can open accounts for practically anybody they want in foreign countries at present, the only thing being that they have to keep a deposit over there. By this amendment there is no deposit needed to be kept abroad, and it helps the Federal Reserve bank in saving them that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My understanding is that the committee has made a mistake—we might as well be frank about it—in recommending that the language "by such correspondents or agents" be stricken out. I do not think the committee knew what it was doing when they did that, and I do not think the Federal Reserve knew what it was doing when they recommended it to the committee, because it is very obvious that these foreign correspondents or agents referred to the foreign correspondents and agents of the Federal Reserve System itself and not the agencies of any foreign government. However, that is subject to interpretation.

Mr. KEAN. They could name anybody as their foreign correspondent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; they can name anybody as their foreign correspondent, but they become the agent of the Federal Reserve System. They could name a foreigner as an agent, but nevertheless they are the agent of the Federal Reserve System and therefore the account which is opened for that agent in a foreign country is an account which is controlled by the bank for the benefit of this agent of the Federal Reserve System, and they have absolute control over it, and at no time have we ever authorized a foreign country or a foreign-controlled bank to open an account with a Federal Reserve bank in the United States as we are doing here.

The Johnson Act expressly exempts all Government agencies or corporations set up by the Congress or corporations in which the Federal Government owns a controlling amount of stock. So, of course, it follows that the Johnson Act does not prohibit the Federal Reserve banks from establishing credits and making loans to countries which owe the United States money at the present time.

When the Neutrality Act was up for consideration last fall it seemed necessary to call attention to the fact that the Neutrality Act might be interpreted in the light of the Johnson Act, and that the word "person" when it was used in the Neutrality Act, referring to these corporations and agencies, might be interpreted in the light of the Johnson Act, and if it was interpreted in the light of the Johnson Act then it would naturally follow that the Federal Reserve banks did not come within the provisions and inhibitions of the Neutrality Act. With that question arising, I happened to be present when the Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was called on the phone and inquiry was made if they had been receiving any accounts from foreign countries.

He gave us positive assurance that they had no accounts in foreign countries excepting what were authorized by law in the Gold Act and the Silver Act, that it was not their intention to take private accounts and become fiscal agents of foreign countries. Of course, we should know what we are doing when we pass this act. Frankly, I do not know whether we should do it or not. I am a little doubtful of the advisability of it. We provide that the Federal Reserve banks become the fiscal agents of any country which has now an account in the banks or which might later on acquire an account. Whether or not that is prejudicial to our neutrality I am not prepared to say, but I do know that at the present time there is $1,662,000,000 of gold held by the Federal Reserve System, earmarked for foreign accounts, and we do know that the bulk of this gold is held to the account of belligerent countries, and if we make the Federal Reserve banks the fiscal agents of foreign countries, then we have put them in a position where they can do two things, one of which is good in my opinion and the other of which is bad in my opinion.

The first, which I think is good, is that by providing that the Federal Reserve banks become the fiscal agent of a belligerent which at some time has earmarked to its account of gold in the Federal Reserve System, we are given reasonable assurance that gold will be put to use for the payment of goods purchased by belligerents in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes. The thing which I consider is bad is the fact that upon the basis of these deposits, new credits will be established to the prejudice of this Nation, in the case of default by belligerent nations. In respect to section 2 it must be understood that the belligerents and others owe the taxpayers of the United States something like $12,000,000,000, and they have on deposit, as I have said, about $1,662,000,000. I can see in section 2 of this bill a possibility that under certain conditions there might be paid into the Federal Treasury as a set-off against that indebtedness, the amount of gold which is on deposit with the Federal Reserve, now to the account of the debtor nation, and unless this bill is passed, there is little likelihood that we are ever going to collect anything of the debt.

It safeguards the Nation from having to recognize the order or draft of the victor nation over a defeated creditor, and this amount will allow of our setting off against that situation any indebtedness which the defeated nation owes to the United States, and inasmuch as it has been universally held and understood that the Federal Government can impair the obligation of a contract, and has on other occasions done so in respect to our own citizens, we should not hesitate whatsoever to confiscate this gold which is now to the credit of the belligerent nation if it becomes necessary to safeguard it and prevent it from falling into the hands of those who might at some future date become an enemy of the United States. I think we should have it distinctly understood now that the United States has no enemies in the world—anything to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As I read section 2, it would exonerate and protect the Federal Reserve System against suit in case of a transfer, but it does not protect them from suit by way of mandamus or otherwise in case of a refusal to transfer. Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Federal Reserve will transfer or pay to the country claiming the deposit or the property which is found by the Secretary of State to be entitled to it. We mean by that that if a European country has made deposit of $200,000,000, say, of gold in the Federal Reserve, and that country is seized by another country and the seizure is not recognized by our Government, then the State Department would undoubtedly continue to hold that that gold could be released only upon the order of the accredited representative of the country which made the deposit, and in case the victor country, as a part of the peace terms, compelled the country which made the deposit to transfer the deposit to the victor country then the State Department would recognize the order of the country making the deposit in keeping with the terms of the armistice or the peace treaty.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. This bill has to do with stopping lawsuits. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It not only stops lawsuits, but it safeguards the Federal Reserve Banking System from having to pay out money twice.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Now, if any member who has a deposit in a Federal Reserve bank was held by the Federal Reserve bank to be the agency of some foreign organization and that member's money was transferred to somebody else, under this legislation that member would be forever barred from suing anybody. Is that not correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe so. If it had been determined that the Federal Reserve System had paid in accordance with the license issued by the Secretary of State, they would be estopped from coming in and making any claim adverse to the finding of the Secretary of State as to which country or which organization or which agency loaned the money.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If it were merely a case involving such a question, no American citizen could even bring suit, as I understand this bill, because it includes any agency or instrumentality of any foreign organization or subdivision, and if that question is involved, suit cannot be brought.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is not my understanding that this involves the rights of citizens to test these exchanges. If they have a substantial interest in the exchange or in the property, then they can contest it, but this has to do only with foreign property which is on deposit with the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It does not say anywhere in this bill that the agency cannot be an American citizen or an American corporation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right, and if the American citizen becomes the agent of a foreign country, then he is bound by the findings of our Secretary of State.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That question of agency is a question of law, which the citizen should have the right to test in court.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is a question of common law, and we have abrogated common law on certain occasions recently. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Did the Secretary of State appear before the committee in connection with these hearings?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. I came into the committee a little late, as usual, and the bill had been reported out and they had started hearings. I mean that literally. The bill had been reported out, and they held hearings after the bill was reported out.

Mr. BARTON of New York. As the gentleman knows, we are remaining in session this summer because the American people have demanded it, because they are suspicious of any legislation brought out in this time and put through without any sort of explanation or debate. Does not the gentleman feel we are violating the mandate given to us by the American people if we consider a bill on which there has been no hearings and which the committee itself does not seem to know very much about?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I quite agree with the gentleman that the committee knows very little about this bill. I will also add to that, as one member of the committee, I was sorry I was not present at the time the bill was reported out to protest the fact that there was not such an emergency incident to the reporting of this bill that we could not afford to wait 48 hours to study the matter.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good thing to vote against this on that ground?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Would you not say that under the conditions under which this bill has been brought out, the best thing we can do is to vote to recommit it for further consideration? Would the gentleman be willing to go that far?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, I would not go that far, because I think that personally I have an understanding of the bill. I personally talked to Mr. Eccles after the hearing and I have been assured personally, but I do not know as I should take the responsibility of assuring the House that this bill is all right, because, after all, hearings by a legislative committee are for the purpose of informing the House and every Member of the House what goes on. Although I have been personally assured, I think that any other Member of the House who did not have the same opportunity for assurance that I had would be perfectly justified in voting to recommit the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COSTELLO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying such bonds, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate requests the House to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9007) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

The Speaker laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 9007), entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10127, to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10127, with Mr. COSTELLO in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER] 3 minutes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I just heard that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] contemplated offering a motion to recommit. I shall not support that motion to recommit, because the committee has already heard the Governor of the Federal Reserve bank and his department. The only information that remains that is important for us to obtain is from the State Department. I believe that the information which we would like to get from the State Department and which would be necessary and proper for us to have from the Federal Reserve System is information that we cannot get for a very fundamental reason. That is, that whereas we have a democracy or a republic in our domestic affairs, we do not have a democracy in our foreign affairs. All we have ever had in this country where foreign matters are concerned is a one-man government—a dictatorship.

Every bill that comes to Congress that has anything to do with foreign affairs brings us right up against a big blank wall. The executive department hoards foreign secrets the way a squirrel hoards hickory nuts, and always has—not only this administration, but in previous ones. It is otherwise in England, in France, and in other democracies. When, for instance, Mr. Chamberlain was Prime Minister of England and he went into the House of Commons the members had the right to question him up to the point that he could say it would be a violation of the interest of his country to give the information. But we do not have that right. We are fighting in the dark, and will be thus fighting blindly all the way through on our defense program in trying to defend our country from participation in war. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this House has any conception at this moment of what it is actually doing?

The claim made here that this will give an opportunity to the United States to tie up foreign gold deposits is notice to the world that the United States formally places itself in a position where it may arbitrarily go off the international gold standard.

Make no mistake, this is a serious move. We have gone off the gold standard domestically, but we have not gone off the gold standard internationally. When we formally place ourselves in the position where we may arbitrarily go off the international gold standard, which this bill provides, we are taking a very serious step.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman mean to say that this bill would provide for an embargo against the shipment of gold from this country at the will of the Secretary of State?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Exactly so. Every nation in the world is going to observe what we do here today.

It is true under the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 the President could perhaps withhold gold payment to foreigners. Of course, he has not done so, nor would he think of doing this, for to do so would be an announcement to the outside world that we had renounced our contractual relations with them, that we intended to violate our bond. To withhold gold payment to any foreigners who might choose to be paid in gold for their goods, or to refuse gold payment for trade balances, would shake our international trade to its very foundation.

Such an act would cause the whole world to lose confidence in America. It would place our international trade squarely on a barter system.

It is one thing for the politicians to confiscate our gold, forbid us to use it domestically, and force us on irredeemable paper currency. It is quite another thing for the United States to attempt to force the rest of the world to accept a mere political promise to pay. It is one thing for our politicians to force our own people to value their services, labor, and goods in inconvertible paper currency, but it is quite another thing for the United States to attempt to do this with foreign nations.

It is the extraordinary conditions under which the grant of power contained in this bill would operate that make it dangerous. Many nations are now at war with each other. They hold varying amounts of gold, securities, and other property in the United States. The total value of these holdings runs into many billions of dollars. Undoubtedly, at the conclusion of the conflict, transfers of these holdings will be effected by voluntary agreement between the victors and the vanquished. Difficulties between them in making such transfers will, no doubt, be encountered.

What this bill virtually does is to give to the Chief Executive the sole power to determine whether any property, and if so how much, shall be transferred from the losing to the winning side. Bear in mind it gives him absolute power to prevent such transfer, even if the losing nation desires it, even if it may be to its vital interest to have the transfer made.

The right to exercise this power would add a most potent danger to push our Nation into the war. It can and likely would ensnare us in a sea of international ill will and hate that could not be undone for a hundred years. And it must not foolishly be thought that this ill will and hate would come only from the nations that might for the moment be in ill grace with the present administration. It could just as readily come from some, or for that matter all, of the nations with whom this administration is now in sympathy.

This bill should be returned to the Banking and Currency Committee for further consideration. I intend to offer a motion to recommit it.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. If the gentleman is accurate in his statement, and I know he probably is, it would force the country into a dubious situation.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Exactly; it would force us into a most dubious situation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman include in his motion to recommit instructions that the committee hold public hearings on the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The motion to recommit will provide for the holding of public hearings.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. This bill applies only when the Federal Reserve bank had received money from a foreign state which is in a state of war, or insurrection exists in such foreign state, or the laws, orders, and regulations of the United States impose controls. So it refers only to those nations which are at war, or to those nations on which we have imposed controls, nations which may go out of the war, where we have imposed controls to prevent the seizure of their gold by force by attacking nations.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It is a big question. Who is going to say when nations are at war or when they are at peace? Who will decide when a state of insurrection exists? These and many other questions would arise to plague us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wanted this additional time in order to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] one or two questions with reference to his remarks.

Did I understand the gentleman from Michigan to say that the law as it now stands does permit our Federal Reserve banks to carry deposits in central banks of foreign governments and that this bill strikes out of the present law that privilege, so that hereafter our Federal Reserve banks cannot carry deposits in foreign countries? Is that what I understood the gentleman to say with reference to the amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think at the present time the Federal Reserve bank can establish agencies and correspondents in foreign countries, and they can open in their banks accounts for these agents. They appoint these correspondents and that is as far as they can go. It is not my understanding of the law that a Federal Reserve bank could take a deposit from a foreign country for the agent of the foreign country. I have been given to understand that they have on some occasions acted on behalf of the fiscal agents of foreign countries, for example the Bank of France, and the Bank of England; but that is about as far as they have gone, and they have not treated them as private deposits in the sense that a national of a foreign country could open an account with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If this bill does resolve itself into a law which prevents our Federal Reserve banks carrying deposits in western European central banks, that step would please me very much. I do not care how much we interfere with Federal Reserve banks extending credit to these central banks of western European countries. I consider the situation over there very uncertain and risky.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is the gentleman willing that foreign governments should make this Government's banks a repository for their funds?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I certainly am, because if we are not willing to maintain some kind of a safe-deposit device in this country, why all of our shouting about preserving democracy for the world or making the world safe for democracy, or trying to pose as a friend to civilization subsequent to the cessation of war hostilities in western Europe? If we are going to lead I always believe in doing so in a very material way. In other words, I would like to have a little butter, bread, and bacon in the basement for reserve and if we can induce other people to have a little reserve on hand, perhaps that will prevent us from having to hand to them their entire grubstake when the battle is over and we start to rebuild the house. So, I see no reason at all why we should not accept safety deposits from nationals of other governments in this country; that is, dollar deposits or gold bullion and all for safe keeping. I am not in favor of creating dollar deposits by buying their gold, but if they want to send something here to deposit for safekeeping with us, let us give them the best safekeeping we can until the thing grows so hot over here they may want to take it to some other country, which they may want to do, and I think Switzerland will be running to this country with hundreds of millions, perhaps billions of dollars within the next few months because the situation will grow so hot that they will not want to keep it over there. We should not, of course, get out on a limb by intermingling this "hot money" with our domestic demand and savings and time deposits and our gold reserves. In that direction we have, no doubt, probably traveled too far. If we extend demand-deposit facilities out of proportion to our ability to meet, on demand, and with gold, the withdrawals, we thereby incur a liability that might prove disastrous to our economy. But safe-deposit devices for the accommodation of gold and silver bullion or for foreign or domestic currencies will not so involve us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (e) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by striking out at the end of the first sentence thereof the words "for such foreign correspondents or agencies", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for foreign banks and bankers, and for foreign states and governments, agencies, and instrumentalities thereof."

SEC. 2. Section 25 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph reading as follows:

"Whenever any Federal Reserve bank has received from a foreign state recognized by the Government of the United States or a central bank of any such state, or holds or controls any property in which such a foreign state or a central bank thereof has, or may have, any interest and a state of war or insurrection exists in such foreign state or the laws, orders, or regulations of the United States impose controls or restrictions by licensing arrangement or otherwise on the export of, or dealing in, property in the United States belonging to such foreign state or central bank, payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of such property to or upon the order of the person who the representative of such foreign state duly accredited to the Government of the United States shall certify to the Secretary of State has authority to receive, control, dispose of, or otherwise exercise dominion over such property, provided and so long as the Secretary of State recognizes and accepts the authority so certified to him, shall be conclusively presumed to be lawful and shall constitute a complete discharge and release of any liability for or with respect to such property. The Federal Reserve bank shall not be subject to any claim or liability in any court by way of suit, counterclaim, set-off, recoupment, or other affirmative action or defense in its own name or in the name of any of its officers, agents, or employees, as a consequence of any action which it takes in accordance with this paragraph. No court shall, at the instigation of any third party, by attachment, injunction, or other similar proceeding, in any way, directly or indirectly, restrain or prevent a Federal Reserve bank from making any payment, transfer, delivery, or other disposal of property herein referred to. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'property' shall include, without limitation, gold, silver, currency, credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein; the term 'foreign state' shall include, without limitation, any foreign government or any department, district, province, county, possession, or other similar governmental organization or subdivision of a foreign government, and any agency or instrumentality of any such foreign government or of any such organization or subdivision; the term 'central bank' shall include any foreign bank or banker which performs any one or more of the functions of a central bank; and the term 'person' shall include, without limitation, any corporation, partnership, association, or other similar organization."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 5, between "or" and "a" insert "from."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish that I understood this bill. I do not believe that any of us understands the full import of it. On page 2 of the committee report, if I may read it to you, it is stated:

The legal principles upon which the bill is based are as follows: The power and authority of representatives of foreign governments are political in character, and when the executive branch of the Government through the State Department accepts or acts upon the representation of a foreign ambassador or minister concerning his powers or the powers of any other officer of his government, such representation is conclusive in our courts.

I do not know whether that places any additional powers in the hands of the State Department or not, nor whether it involves an important change in our foreign policy, but I presume it does, or it would not otherwise be necessary to make this statement. Then the report goes on to say:

The acts of a recognized foreign sovereign insofar as they apply to nationals of that sovereign are not limited to the territorial jurisdiction of the sovereign, and furthermore, as a matter of comity, the acts of a recognized foreign sovereign are given extraterritorial application, if so intended, unless to do so would be in violation of the public policy. This legislation would constitute a statement of the public policy involved.

I regret this matter has to come up at this late stage when we are expecting to recess over next week. I think we all could wish that this bill had also been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as I believe it has a great deal to do with our foreign relations and that great committee is very able in its understanding of these things. I wish that we could have had a further discussion of the bill, as it may involve things that are far away and beyond the protection of gold supplies in this country.

I find myself at sea in the matter of voting upon it, because I, along with a good many other Members, have difficulty in understanding what the bill does and what it purports to do. I would like to vote for its recommittal in order to obtain a further study of it and a clearer explanation, but, on the other hand, upon the representations of the able chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and upon the representations of the minority members of the committee that it is important the bill be passed today, I shall be impelled to vote in favor of the bill in spite of the inadequacy of the information presented in the brief time allotted for its discussion.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am a little disturbed. So many say they do not understand this bill. It is not a hard bill to understand if we read it and leave out some of the superfluous language. I said in 1937 when Congress convened that it would be the duty of the minority to know more about legislation than the majority and I reckoned that it would not be a difficult assignment. In this case it is refreshing to see the minority insisting on receiving full knowledge of the bill. It does not seem to interest the other side of the House. This is an administration bill and, of course, that is all they need to know about it.

Mr. Chairman, simply stated, section 1 is only an enlargement of power. Before this the Federal Reserve had its correspondents and agencies in foreign countries and they had to have reciprocal balances with each other. Now, they can do business directly with banks, any bank, any government, its subdivisions and its instrumentalities that wishes to send property here, and we will keep it safely on deposit for them.

When one nation conquers another nation their duly accredited representative will come to the Federal Reserve bank and demand the money for which he has a draft. The Federal Reserve says, "We cannot recognize this government. You are a conquering nation. We still recognize the other government. But we will call up the Secretary of State and ask his decision." The Secretary of State advises whether or not our Government has recognized this conqueror. He will say, "No; we still recognize the Government of Czechoslovakia and other invaded nations having their representatives still in Washington, and you must hold those funds for them." Then the conqueror may say, "We will go to the courts."

"Oh, no," Congress has said to the courts that they removed such jurisdiction. The Federal Reserve will be fully protected. They can keep the funds on deposit; they can sell the property, if desired, and can make any other disposal of it as they see fit. They may return it to the former Government representatives to bury it in the ground, where nobody may know its whereabouts.

Everybody knows how the President feels about recognizing a conquering country. The power to protect the property of invaded nations is greatly enlarged by this bill. If tomorrow the Czechoslovakian or Polish Ambassador appeared at the Federal Reserve bank and said, "I want that money because I want to hide it," and they called up the Secretary of State, he would say, "Why, certainly. That is the Government we now recognize," and the Federal Reserve would be obliged to hand it over to him.

The Federal Reserve does not want to be sued in the courts. It does not want to have to pay this money twice if, afterward, the Government makes a different decision or is forced to do so. They want to transfer to the Government the whole and complete responsibility. This is a simple bill and ought not to cause so much confusion.

It may be difficult for us to decide whether we want to vote for it, knowing the side our Government is taking. It is a political question. It says so in the report. The courts are debarred. The owner must be determined by the administration; therefore, it is a political question. Who shall we recognize as the proper party to claim the money? Is not that simple? Why say you do not understand it? There is but little to understand. Do we want to be the depository for defeated countries and say to the conqueror, "You cannot have it"? That is the edict that is gone forth. Is not that simple? We must buttress that policy. It is already declared.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNS. I do not understand why our Federal Reserve System should go into the pawnbroker business. We have a lot of pawnbrokers in this country.

Mr. GIFFORD. Because this administration wants them to.

Mr. JOHNS. With what are we to credit these foreign countries when we sell their jewelry or gold?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I plead with this Congress not to enact this legislation. Let us return this bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. If the purpose is to provide for a priority claim on the part of the United States Government against any gold held by a belligerent that owes us money, then it should be plainly written into this bill. I have no objection to that whatever. My objection to this bill is that it formally places our Nation in a position where it can say to the world at any moment, "We are going off the international gold standard." Certainly we do not wish to do anything like that. If this bill is passed, it will have repercussions that will extend throughout the world. Every nation that trades with us must take heed of our action and must say to itself, "At any moment my country may be forced upon a barter system with the United States." This bill touches the fundamental economy of the entire world. We are dealing with the gold problem. I plead with you to send this bill back to the committee and have public hearings on it so we may understand what it is and determine definitely what we really should write into it. What this bill actually does is to give to the President the green light to take our Nation off the international gold standard. I submit to you this is a serious matter.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a wise thing for the United States to attach all moneys here belonging to any country that owes us, even on the war debts, so that if anything happens to them now we may attach that money and apply it on the debts?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I want to be fair about this matter. I am merely asking that the bill be sent back to the Committee on Banking and Currency so that questions like that may be given consideration. As this bill stands it is vicious and most dangerous. It should not be enacted into law. No measure since I have been in this Congress has been presented to this body for consideration that was more fundamental than this one now before us. This measure, if enacted into law, promises world repercussions that cannot help but be exceedingly inimical to our welfare.

Certainly no harm could possibly be done to recommit the bill and give it the consideration which it merits. I plead with each and every Member of this House to vote to recommit this measure.

I should be glad to do everything I can to rewrite it so as to achieve the purposes which the face of the bill indicates.

To give the Executive this vast power over our gold means, under the conditions of war that prevail and those that must present themselves when final settlement between the belligerent nations takes place, that in all likelihood this power will be used to prevent transfer of gold held by belligerents in this country. The point is that such an act will unquestionably involve the withholding of gold payment to foreigners. To the extent that this would be done, it would be a violation of the international gold standard. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COSTELLO, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10127) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 543, reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Ohio moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 10127) to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to that committee to hold hearings thereon.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Ohio) there were—ayes 42, noes 121.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 273, not voting 56, as follows:

Mr. White of Idaho with Mr. Mitchell.

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, Messrs. TAYLOR, CANNON of Missouri, WOODRUM of Virginia, JOHNSON of West Virginia, O'NEAL, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, LUDLOW, and DITTER are engaged in an important conference and were unable to vote on this roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances this is a proper announcement and does not contravene the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri.

PRAYERS OF THE CHAPLAIN OF THE HOUSE

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably, without amendment, a privileged resolution (H. Res. 513) authorizing the printing of additional copies of the prayers of the Chaplain of the House, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 513

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the prayers offered by the Reverend James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House, at the opening of the daily sessions of the House during the Seventy-fourth, Seventy-fifth, and Seventy-sixth Congresses, including the current session, be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. How are these copies to be distributed; through the folding room?

Mr. JARMAN. Through the folding room; yes.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON LABOR IN THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably, without amendment, a privileged resolution (H. Res. 519) authorizing the printing of a letter of the Secretary of Labor, together with a report on labor in the Territory of Hawaii, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 519

Resolved, That the letter of the Secretary of Labor, transmitted to the House and referred to the Committee on the Territories on June 4, 1940, together with the report on "Labor in the Territory of Hawaii," which was prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics pursuant to the organic law of the Territory of Hawaii in 1900, as granted April 8, 1904, be printed as a document.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUSE CONFERENCE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably, without amendment, a privileged resolution (H. Res. 540) authorizing the printing of reports of the various committees of the House Conference on Unemployment.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 540

Resolved, That the manuscript of the reports of the various committees of the House Conference on Unemployment, composed of House Members who voluntarily made a general study of the causes of unemployment and the fundamental measures necessary to accomplish its solution, be printed as a House document.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPOSITION OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY AND CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 538.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 538

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 10100, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall, later on, yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, to save the time of many Members who have inquired as to how long the debate will take, or when a vote may be expected, I call attention to the fact that about 40 minutes of the 1 hour on the rule will be utilized and the rule itself provides for 2 hours of general debate. I understand that not all of the 2 hours will be used and, consequently, we may conclude the consideration of the rule and the bill around 6 o'clock.

This is a broad rule, making in order an extremely important bill, a bill which provides for an increase in our Navy, if I am not mistaken, of 400,000 tons. The able chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will thoroughly explain the details of the bill to the satisfaction of Members of the House and I know that after you have listened to him there will be no question about your vote on the rule or on the bill.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am obliged to take a few minutes more than I expected on the rule, and I am doing so because I feel that we are here providing for appropriations of billions, not millions, but billions of dollars, for our national defense and while we are doing this I regret to say there are people within our midst who are undermining and therefore weakening us at home. I think this should stop. For instance, I now have in my hand many letters I have received, not as a Member of Congress, but as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, from many so-called German organizations. Each and every one of them is exactly alike, and I feel that this kind of propaganda, which is not for the best interests of our country, should cease and that these misguided people should be set right.

Mr. Speaker, I hope during the last few days of this session some of those gentlemen in the Congress who have given aid and comfort to those whom I consider enemies of our country, will desist. Frankly, I do not blame the Republicans for wanting to remain in Washington They do not want to adjourn because they are afraid to go home.

In view of saving time, I shall not read the letters to which I have referred, but I ask unanimous consent that I may insert one of the many letters—and they are all alike—in the RECORD to familiarize the House with them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, here are a few of the organizations from which I have received identical letters within the last few days: Sachsenverein "Saxonia," Chicago, Ill.; Deutsch-Galizien Kranken-Unterstutzungs-Verein, Chicago, Ill.; Society of the Sudeten Germans, Chicago, Ill.; Karntner-Club Koschat, Chicago, Ill.; Arion Mannerchor Der Sudseite, Chicago, Ill.; Harlem Maennerchor, Forest Park, Ill.; German-Hungarian-American Citizen's Organization, Chicago, Ill.; Verein Deutscher Weltkriegs-Veteranen, Chicago, Ill. (association of German veterans of the World War).

Mr. Speaker, this is a sample of the type of letter that I am receiving by the hundreds:

SACHSENVEREIN "SAXONIA,"
Chicago, Ill., May 31, 1940.

DEAR NATIONAL CONVENTION DELEGATE:

If ever there were times when the fate of all Americans was at jeopardy, it is now. Your vote, as a delegate to the national convention of your party, will be one of the deciding factors in shaping the destiny of our country. Your aim is not only to benefit our country by your decision, but also you desire that the candidate of your organization shall win at the fall election, and thereby become the next President of the United States of America. The ultimate decision in this matter, however, rests with the people.

We, as Americans of Germanic ancestry, are interested at this time primarily not in political parties but in America, and shall vote for the best candidate nominated, irrespective of party, who is pledged to a platform which must answer the following:

1. That the Presidential candidate be an American and not an internationalist or a Tory;

2. That he have an honest desire to enforce the Constitution of the United States of America and abide thereby without slight-of-hand tricks;

3. That he refrain from entering into secret agreements and understandings with foreign nations;

4. That he agree to concern himself with the affairs at home and the welfare of our fellow citizens, rather than with the welfare of the rest of the world; and that he refrain from international meddling;

5. That he have an abiding desire and will to keep us out of Europe's present war, and that he pledge himself to work in favor of reinstating the arms embargo, which we deem necessary to safeguard the peace and neutrality of the United States;

6. That he be of such prior experience as would qualify him for the high office.

Believing, as we do, that all shortcomings at home can and will be adjusted if we will only concern ourselves about our domestic affairs instead of meddling in the affairs of every other nation in this world and instead of playing international power politics, we absolutely demand the fulfillment of the foregoing requirements, in addition to a sane program on all points usually outlined in a party's platform.

We trust that your action at the national convention of your party will aid in the construction of an inspiring platform and the nomination of a candidate for the office of President of the United States of America, who, above all, will truly be an American.

Very truly yours,

WALTER GERMER.

Mr. Speaker, all of us can understand the underlying reasons for the sending out of these letters. On the other hand, I have received thousands of petitions, letters, and telegrams urging that I stand by the President in his extraordinary efforts to keep the United States out of war.

GERMANY HAS LONG DREAMED OF OBTAINING A FOOTHOLD IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

There is no longer the slightest doubt in the world but that Nazi-ists have been planted and are carrying on their propaganda in practically every country in South and Central America. Almost daily the press associations are carrying items about some newly discovered German plotting in almost every South American capital.

Bribery, sabotage, intrigue, and nefarious propagandizing has always been a part and parcel of German warfare. We have only to recall the brazen note of Zimmerman, the German foreign minister to the German legation in Mexico, to realize that this was so in the World War, and there is no reason to believe that since then the tiger has lost its stripes nor the leopard its spots. Zimmerman offered Mexico as a bait for its assistance against the United States the opportunity "to reconquer the lost territory of New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona," saying to his Mexican agents, "The details are left to you for settlement."

The text of Zimmermann's message, which was captured by American secret-service agents late in 1916, tells its own story, as follows:

On the 1st of February we intend to began the unlimited submarine warfare unrestricted. In spite of this, it is our intention to keep neutral the United States of America.

If this attempt is not successful, we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico. That we shall make war together and together make peace. We shall give general financial support and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory of New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona. The details are left to you for settlement.

You are instructed to advise the President of Mexico of the above in the greatest confidence as soon as it is certain that there will be an outbreak of the war with the United States, and suggest that the President of Mexico, on his own initiative, should communicate with Japan suggesting at once adherence to this plan. At the same time offer to mediate between Germany and Japan.

Please call the attention of the President of Mexico that the employment of ruthless submarine warfare now promises to compel England to make peace in a few months.

ZIMMERMANN.

Zimmerman had deposited $500,000 in New York banks for the exclusive purpose of his "Mexican campaign." It is believed that Huerta, a former Mexican general and President, received $100,000 of this sum and that he would probably have received more had he not died soon after.

There is no doubt that Hitler has some kind of designs on the Western Hemisphere; otherwise, why would he be sending so many of his agents to this continent? As a matter of fact, Hitler has always talked and dreamed of coming to South America. He told a German writer, one of his closest friends, Herman Rauschning, a member of the Reichstag, about it as long ago as 1933, and Rauschning wrote the story in his book, The Voice of Destruction. At the same time he told of his plans to capture Norway, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Poland, and all or most of the things he said then have already come true. Speaking in the first person, Hitler declared excitedly:

My troops will appear in the streets of their capitals suddenly, and they will be fully uniformed and armed, and no one will stop them.

And they appeared just that way in the capitals of Denmark and Norway, after his "fifth column" had preceded them and prepared the ground. Referring to South America, Hitler said, away back in 1933, mind you, his mind inflamed just after he had been talking with a trusted leader, Sturmabtellung, who had recently returned from South America:

We shall create a new Germany there. * * * We shall find everything we need there. * * *

"Besides, we have a right to that continent," declared Hitler, his eyes wild with excitement, "for the Fuggers and Welsers had possession there."

The Fuggers were wealthy Germans who helped rape Spain 300 years ago. Hitler thought, as long as 7 years ago, that South Americans and Mexicans had lost confidence in the United States. He said:

They knew they were being exploited by them and had nothing to expect from them for the development of their country. * * * If ever there is a place where democracy is senseless and suicidal it is in South America. They must be enabled to throw both their liberalism and their democracy overboard.

JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. Speaker, just before I took the floor I was handed a statement which I was given to understand came from the junior chamber of commerce. I am pleased that such was not the case.

It pertained to another organization, and not being in the habit of doing anything that might reflect unfairly or unjustly on any organization or person, I withdraw the remarks and make due apology.

However, the demonstrations carried on for the past four nights by members or guests of that organization were extremely provoking to those of us who are obliged to reside in hotels. That they desired to excel in the pranks of other organizations may be understood. They are young, and I hope the hundreds of men and women resident in other hotels who were similarly disturbed will forgive and forget as I am doing.

Mr. Speaker, I also received today several releases from the so-called National Small Business Men's Association, which would have been more in keeping if they had been circulated by some Republican campaign committee. These releases carry willful and deliberate misstatements of facts and unjustifiably criticize the Army and the Navy. I feel that such a campaign and attacks, especially at this time, when we are doing all possible to strengthen our national defense, is harmful and encourages those within our midst who sympathize with the Nazi-Communist activities.

The bulletins published under the caption of the National Small Business Men's Association does not appear to me to be the representative attitude of small business toward the policies of the present administration.

The information contained in the two copies is a deliberate attempt at perversion of the facts and status of conditions now existing in the Army and Navy—smacking and closely resembling the type of insidious propaganda being spread by the Nazi agents in this country to undermine and malign public opinion. It is a deliberate, malicious, and vitriolic attack not only against the administration but the good sense of the American people. In such hours of emergency such attempts at malignment are certainly directed to thwart the unity of thought and the unity of action in standing solidly and united against our common enemies now within the country.

It certainly is evident from just a perusal of the bulletins that the information is sponsored by "fifth columnists"—persons actively engaged for the sole purpose of destroying democracy and the country as we know it.

The figures contained in the first few pages of the bulletin dated June 7 are grossly distorted and deliberate lies. The editors seem to forget that military equipment manufactured during these critical days become obsolete with continued invention of new weapons of war.

The editors, on page 4 of the same bulletin, complain that only 31 of the 1,500 airports built by W. P. A. can handle military aircraft. Query, Is it the writer's opinion that each commercial airport in this country, whether strategically or otherwise situated, is to become an armed encampment and military arsenal?

The writers further state that "if we had statesmen in Washington instead of politicians this country would not need fear attack from within or without." The editorial staff certainly does not reflect public opinion as indicated by the Gallup poll as to the rising popularity of the Roosevelt New Deal policies manifesting approval of the progress and program achieved and proposed for the tremendous strides in recovery during the past 7 years by the present administration.

The bulletins accuse the President of "warmongering" and fanflaring war hysteria. Are the writers aware of the Nazi-Fascist activity in South America, Mexico, and right here in our own midst? All they need do is read the recent speech by Dictator Vargas, Premier of Argentina.

The propaganda contained in the bulletins is vicious, and its attack, deliberately un-American, truly representative of the insidious type of stuff that is being fabricated in the high-geared "lie factories" under the direction of Dr. Goebbels and Streicher's Sturmer in Nazi Germany.

Those allegedly "respectable businessmen" who are behind this propaganda have not the manhood to identify themselves. I believe there are none such. I defy anyone to give me the name of even one respectable businessman who would subscribe to such anonymous and scurrilous attacks upon the President of the United States and our Army and Navy.

I am satisfied that in the near future I shall be able to ascertain the source of the funds for the printing of these bulletins. I believe I will be able to prove that it comes not only from a Republican campaign fund but from the coffers of those who are opposed to the best interests of our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I intended to read an editorial appearing in the June 19 issue of the Chicago Daily Times, but in order to save the time of the House while such vitally important legislation is before us, I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the Appendix as an extension of remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] just made the statement, if I am correct, that the Junior Chamber of Commerce holding those conventions here at this time are not patriotic. I say to that gentleman that the Junior Chamber of Commerce represents the finest and greatest patriotic organization in this country.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman had watched them perform in these various hotels of the city he would not make that statement.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Oh, they are not the first group that has had a good time here, and I am not making any apology for them, but that does not signify that they are not patriotic, and I resent that statement.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] does not mean what he said about the Junior Chamber of Commerce. That group is made up of representative young men from every State in the Union. The Members of Congress in the Texas delegation were instrumental in entertaining other Members of Congress and the convention delegates of the Junior Chamber of Commerce at a barbeque which I myself attended. I approve of the patriotic activities of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. FISH. I join in upholding the patriotism of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fair rule. There is no opposition to the rule that I know of. It brings before the House a highly important bill involving the sum of $4,000,000,000, one of the greatest authorizations in the history of the Congress of the United States, and very possibly in the history of any deliberative body. I believe it is the will of both the Democrats and Republicans alike in this great national crisis to make America invincible on land and sea and in the air. This bill proposes to double the size of our Navy, the greatest navy today in the world, and when we vote for this bill we do so knowing that we are authorizing over a 6-year period funds to double the size of our present Navy.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], but certainly the gentleman did not mean to cast aspersion or reflection upon the members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. There are no more patriotic citizens in America than those young men who attended this convention and I think something should be said to that effect.

Mr. FISH. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman in what he says and that is why I yielded to gentlemen on this side of the aisle. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] gave the wrong impression and that he should withdraw his adverse criticism. The gentleman has no right to speak for the gentleman from Illinois, nor have I, but I suggest, in view of the fact that he gave that impression to the House, he ought to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have been away for a minute.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman suggested the gentleman from Illinois did not mean to make any reflection on these young men of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. SABATH. I think in haste to get through with my remarks I may have been misunderstood. I said they did not behave.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman does not want to make any reflection upon their patriotism?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, contrary to the facts, the public back home is under the impression because of the war hysteria which has led them to believe that our Navy does not amount to much, that we are practically defenseless and in the same category as China, Abyssinia, Poland, or some of those other weaker nations. I asked the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], who is the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee in charge of this bill, the other day, in order to clarify this situation—and he agrees that we have the best navy in the world. I am frank to say there are many veterans in my district, good, personal friends of mine, that do not believe it when I tell them that we have got a great navy in America; that we have the greatest navy in the world. They tell me, "Why, you are just talking through your hat. We know better."

A little while ago when Senator WALSH, who knows as much about the strength of the Navy as anybody in Congress or out, went before the Daughters of the American Revolution convention and ventured the statement that we had a great Navy, he was hissed and booed by the convention. They knew better. The American people actually believe that our Navy is second or third rate and in no way equipped to defend our shores. So I asked about a week ago the chairman of the committee, my distinguished friend, with whom I have served so many years in the Congress, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], about the size of the Navy:

> Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
> Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.
> Mr. FISH. I find there is a good deal of misunderstanding about the size of our Navy; a great deal of confusion and bewilderment in the minds of the people. Some people actually feel that we have no Navy at all. I would like to ask the gentleman, who is the greatest authority in the whole Congress on the Navy, if it is not a fact that we have the greatest, the most powerful, and efficient Navy in the world today?
> Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from New York is absolutely correct. There is no navy in the world equal to the Navy of the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is not surprising that people on the outside would feel that our Navy was weak, when Members of the House will get up on the floor and say that we have not made any preparation.

Mr. FISH. Well, I do not think it comes so much from Members of the House. I thing it comes from these warmongers and these hysterical Communists or columnists—one is as bad as the other [laughter]—who are trying to promote war psychology; that we have got to go to war in defense of ourselves because we have no Navy and are about to be invaded.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman that Congress has not been negligent in its appropriation for ship construction. In the last 7 years there has been over $1,600,000,000 appropriated for building ships in the Navy—new construction.

Mr. FISH. Colonel Lindbergh was right when he said in one of his recent radio speeches:

> Let us stop this hysterical chatter about calamity and invasion that has been running rife these last few days. It is not fitting to the people who built this Nation. The only reason that we are in danger of becoming involved in this war is because there are powerful elements in America who desire to take part. They represent a small minority of the American people, but they control much of the machinery of influence and propaganda. They seize every opportunity to push us closer to the edge.

He refers to these interventionist columnists who want people to think that we are disarmed and to get us into war on some pretext of defense.

Now, starting from this premise that we have the greatest navy in the world—and thank God we have—for the first time in our history, since the Civil War. We have the greatest navy in the world, a navy greater than the British Navy, because the British Navy has lost a number of ships in the last few months. Ours is getting greater and greater every day. We are six or seven times greater than the German Navy. I believe that most Members of the House, however, have made up their minds that we should prepare now to have even a greater navy. This authorization will double our Navy in 6 years' time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

This Navy will become twice the size of our present Navy and unquestionably twice the size of any other navy. We will have a navy on each coast equal to any in the world. The admirals of our own Navy say that if any nation wants to come over here and attack us, they must have a navy two or three times as large as ours to even dare to attack us. So after our Navy has been increased to twice the size of the present Navy, if all the navies of the world combined to attack, they would make no impression on us if they came over to our shores looking for war. All I hope is that this navy—and I am going to vote for it—will not be used for offensive purposes and for aggression and to police and quarantine the world.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish the gentleman would point this out, that although we have the largest Navy in the world in tonnage, we have a two-ocean proposition, and should we split our navies, for instance, in the Pacific, then we would have a Navy in the Pacific that would be smaller than the present Japanese Navy. Therefore the necessity for this is obvious. We should have not only the largest Navy in the world, but we should have the largest Navy in each particular ocean.

Mr. FISH. That is the argument for the bill, and that is why Members of Congress largely are going to support it. I am going to vote for it from the same point of view as the gentleman has expressed.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. How long will it be before this Navy we are authorizing today will be built and ready for service?

Mr. FISH. About 6 years.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will not a great part of our present Navy by that time be in a state of obsolescence and ready for the junk heap?

Mr. FISH. I do not know so much about that. It is a question how long these battleships are useful. I rather think our Navy is pretty efficient at the present time.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. I have a telegram from a substantial organization in Chicago in which they say we have had a decrease of 35 fighting ships in the last 6 years. Is that statement correct?

Mr. FISH. I would rather refer the gentleman to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs who knows exactly how much money we have appropriated, how much money we have spent, and how many ships we have in commission. I agree with him thoroughly in what he says that today we have the best Navy in the world. That ought to be sufficient, and I do not think any member of the Naval Affairs Committee denies it. They ought to know more about it than some of us who are not on that committee. I want the American people to realize these facts which are not understood at all, that we have the greatest, most efficient, and best Navy in the world.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If we appropriate this money and build this new Navy, what assurance have we that the President will not sell some of these ships to some other nation?

Mr. FISH. I am going to discuss that in some detail. That is the reason I took the time today. It is a matter that is very close to my heart; it is a matter practically of inheritance.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. How long did the gentleman state it would take to build these ships?

Mr. FISH. Six years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We will have another President by that time.

Mr. FISH. I hope so. Let me say to the gentleman that we have just launched two brand new 35,000-ton battleships a few weeks ago.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Have they been sold yet?

Mr. FISH. No; not that I know of—and that is a very proper question. I just communicated with Admiral Stark's office. I tried to get Admiral Stark on the telephone, but could not, and talked with an officer who contacted and spoke for him. I asked if any ship of the Navy had been sold, directly or indirectly, to any foreign nation—that is, through private sources or directly through the Navy—and the answer was "no," that no ship had been sold.

We all know that certain contracts have been entered into to sell some of the brand-new torpedo boats—I believe they call them mosquito boats, very fast submarine chasers. They had not been completed, but the intent was to take those ships and sell them to a belligerent power in violation of the law of the land. The contract had already been made. I am now informed, however, that the contract has been broken because the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] discovered a Federal law and called the attention of the Navy Department to it, showing them that it was a criminal offense for any private concern to sell any armed ships. The contract has been withdrawn or canceled.

What I wanted to do was to call the attention of the House to our great American tradition that goes very much further and way beyond the selling of any naval vessel. That is absolutely in defiance of every law, our own law as well as international law, and common usage. It is unquestionably an act of war. When a neutral nation sells a naval vessel to a belligerent nation, that is an act of war and would be so recognized by all nations.

During the Civil War certain Confederate raiders were outfitted in England. The well-known Alabama, the Florida, the Shenandoah, were equipped and outfitted in England. These were not English warships, they were Confederate merchant vessels that were outfitted in wartime in England. They left England and were equipped outside of the 3-mile limit with guns. Then they raided the Union ships, and they raided them very successfully and sunk hundreds of them, at the cost of great sums of money to their owners. After the war our administrations, one after the other, took this matter up with England and demanded reparations and indemnities for the depredations of these Confederate cruisers. At one time we verged on war with England over those claims. It was not a question of their selling their own Navy ships, but merely outfitting ships there that could be used as raiders. We almost went to war with Great Britain. Finally, under the Grant administration, we entered into the Treaty of Washington in 1871 that provided for a settlement of these claims through arbitration.

The reason I recall this so clearly is because at that time—and I am very proud of the fact—the Secretary of State who handled those treaties was my own grandfather. I am familiar with every detail of them. It was one of the first successful arbitration treaties between two great powers. The arbitrators were appointed and they held their meetings in Geneva, Switzerland. It is known as the Geneva Tribunal or the Geneva Award. That tribunal found for the United States against Great Britain in a sum of $15,500,000, a very large sum of money in those days, and held her responsible and accountable for merely outfitting these Confederate ships, not their own Navy ships—outfitting ships and letting them depart without due diligence to harass and destroy our Union merchant marine.

So Great Britain had to back down, the mistress of the seas had to apologize and give us one check in the amount of $15,500,000. From that time on it has been written into international law all over the world that no neutral power may sell any naval vessel to a belligerent power. It was put into article VI of the Hague Convention of 1907, of which Germany and ourselves are still parties. But more than that, we wrote it into our own law, and I want to commend the chairman of the committee, as I very often do, and the committee itself, for bringing in a bill, including the last paragraph of which reads as follows:

SEC. 7. No vessel, ship, or boat now in the United States Navy or being built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise or be chartered or scrapped without the consent of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, that ought to settle the fear in the mind of any man or woman in this House that the President may attempt to sell naval vessels because we are now writing into the law here that no such action shall be taken without the consent and approval of the Congress of the United States

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that this traditional and very well-known principle established long ago is about to be reaffirmed by the Congress of the United States. I submit that if we had proceeded with this contract and had sold our naval vessels it would have been tantamount to an act of war. It would probably have involved us in serious difficulties, if not in actual war. Certainly, if we had sold these naval vessels and they had sunk, let us say, German ships, after the war is over, and sooner or later peace is bound to come and the sooner it comes the better for the world, then the United States would be held responsible. We would be sued for the losses incurred and be obliged to arbitrate and we would lose. It would cost us hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. So I am glad we have put our stamp of approval against the sale of any naval vessels and in that way assure keeping us out of foreign wars. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

PREPAREDNESS—A GUARANTY AGAINST WAR

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, in the 7 years that I have had the privilege of being a Member of this body, I have consistently and from time to time taken the floor of this House to advocate military preparedness as the road to peace; and I am happy in the thought that as we consider this additional authorization for the building up and improving of one arm of our national defense—the Navy—I am no longer in the minority. It is indeed gratifying to observe that the Congress and the American people generally are awakened to the necessity of this country building a national defense that will be adequate to meet any eventuality.

PROPHECY

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I hope that I will be pardoned for making the statement that as long as 4 or 5 years ago some of us had the foresight to envision the events which have and are now transpiring in such lightning order abroad. On March 19, 1936, in the Well of this House, I dared to prophesy some of these things that I regret to say have happened. In a speech on that date entitled "An Answer to the War Lords," I said, in part:

Mr. Chairman, there is an old adage to the effect that in times of peace we should prepare for war. I should like to paraphrase this for the purpose of this discussion and say, "In times of peace, prepare for peace." With Europe a veritable volcano of war at present, with the clouds of another gigantic war, the like of which possibly the world has never heretofore witnessed, hanging the lowest on the world's horizon, with the diplomatic endeavors of the Old World statesmen daily changing into kaleidoscopic patterns, with the whole of Europe jockeying for position, it must be manifest, even to him who reasons as he runs, that the enemy of civilization and Christianity, the all-powerful god of war, is busy about his task. War is imminent. Just how far distant it is no man can successfully predict. It may be 6 months; it may be 2 years. At the most it cannot be more than 5 years unless something not now apparent develops. In my opinion, conditions in the world today, from the standpoint of imminence of another World War, are more pronounced than they were 6 months before an all-powerful German war machine rode roughshod over Belgium in 1914. If you question the wisdom of this statement, I would point out to you the fact that today a powerful, militaristic Italy, under the domination of the war lord, Mussolini, bent upon expansion and conquest, is running at liberty over a weaker and almost defenseless black people in Ethiopia. The yellow race of Japan for the past decade, under the domination of the war lords of that nation, has been continually building up a powerful military machine likewise bent upon a conquest of expansion. Russia looks with uneasy expression and apprehensive eyes upon this program of Japan. The Chinese, powerful in potentiality but defenseless in reality, resent keenly and with a smouldering fire of national pride this aggression on the part of her more powerful yellow neighbor. To the west the mighty British lion paces uneasily but, withal, cunningly and wisely as he watches over his spreading dominions and counts the effect of these aggressive and hostile acts on his own proud kingdom. The ingenious and resourceful Germany, under the leadership of the new war lord of that country, has boldly discounted the Locarno pact and proclaimed the last vestige of the Treaty of Versailles as but another scrap of paper. France is diligent in her efforts to form new alliances, and is emotionally appealing to her neighbors and the other civilized countries to rally to her support in defending the Locarno pact and the Treaty of Versailles. America, the New World giant, once far removed from Europe but now, as a result of scientific advancements in communication and transportation, not so far removed from the Old World; America, a peace-loving nation, in spite of its suffering from a world-wide depression, with no necessity for expansion—no desire for conquest, rich, and happy in its own ideals of government—is wont to remain aloof from the turmoil and maelstrom of Old World diplomacy and warfare.

The all-important question now is, What is America going to do about it? What course shall we pursue?

Somewhere there must be a sane, sound policy for this country to pursue. To my conception there is but one answer—armed neutrality. We can be neutral, but we must be strong enough to demand the respect of those warlike nations who profess a desire for peace and at the same time are, with wanton abandonment, bent upon a policy of economic expansion and aggression.

Is it necessary for me to point out to my colleagues here that treaties, pacts, and agreements are worthless in a world of nations who are arming to the limit of their economic ability; when aggression and expansion are the ultimate desires of so many nations of the world? Is it necessary to call your attention to the fact that a peaceful overture of one powerful nation to another today is withdrawn almost before an opportunity for its acceptance has been given? The order of procedure among the nations of the world today is so selfish and so self-centered that one is reminded of a public auction where the highest bidder is the purchaser of the thing sought. A powerful nation, through its diplomatic circles, issues a strong denunciation today of the encroachment upon the national rights of a weaker nation. A few months later the same powerful nation, when it is either to the economic or strategic interest of that nation to do so, barters or negotiates with the same nation that it has so recently denounced. We have seen treaties, pacts, and agreements thrown overboard apparently without rhyme or reason other than that might makes right. Apparently, therefore, we are driven to the conclusion that, however desirable and beautiful are world courts, leagues of nations, and international agreements for disarmament in their theory, we are confronted, as peace-loving as we are, with the realization that we are dealing with nations who, like men, have as their controlling factor a selfish desire to prosper at the other fellow's expense.

In this situation are we not driven, driven reluctantly, but nevertheless driven, to a little selfish consideration of our own national preservation? Because of this unfortunate situation our Navy and our Army—and more especially our Navy—must be built up to the point where it will be excelled by none, not even that of Great Britain. Our vast shore lines and outlying possessions must be protected. American integrity and American nationality must be conserved. The heritage purchased by our glorious ancestry, with its institutions and its ideals, must be maintained. When Europe and the rest of the world have awakened to the truth that peace is precious and that the race in armaments and warfare must end, then—and not until then—can America afford to cease its vigilance. * * * We are not unmindful of the fact that an adequate armed force for this country is an expensive necessity, costing as it does millions of dollars to maintain. Neither can we forget that our recent venture into the arena of the World War cost the taxpayers of this country in excess of $50,000,000,000 in money alone, and we have not seen the end yet. But, of more moment still, where is the American home that did not feel more keenly the loss or injury of some loved one who was called upon to offer his blood upon the fields of horror in the hellishness of modern warfare?

The American people are sending aloft to high heaven daily a fervent prayer that the United States may not be drawn into the vortex of this the greatest and most ruthless war in the history of mankind. But as commendable as prayer may be, there can be no assurance that the dove of peace will continue to flit about the American Continent unless we build up our national defense to the point that it will be respected abroad. The only language which we may expect the modern Caesars and Alexanders to respect is the language of guns and power—superior armies, navies, planes, and tanks.

Today, Mr. Speaker, civilization and Christianity are staggered by the picture of horror and bloodshed in a war-torn Europe. It is no wonder that at times the followers of Jesus Christ, the lowly Nazarene, have their moments of doubt whether 2,000 years of Christianity and civilization have been in vain. But as our eyes scan the world horizon and we witness the death struggle for power on the one hand and for national existence on the other, we realize that self-preservation and national existence, not to mention the heroic history and treasured traditions of America for more than 160 years, may perhaps fall victim to the same ruthless and unconscionable methods of modern warfare that are now in the process of destroying the democracies of the Old World. Assuredly America in all of its might, in its vast resources—both natural and manpower—in all of its patriotism, will not allow such a thing to happen. But assuredly it can and will happen unless we be prepared to meet that unconscionable and ruthless force with a superior force. [Applause.]

PRESENT AND AUTHORIZED DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, the present armed forces of the United States are by no means insignificant. While it is true that we are not prepared to engage in a war or defend ourselves against a first-rate fighting machine such as is possessed by Germany and Italy, it is nevertheless true that we have made considerable strides in the program of national defense. For instance, we have appropriated during the past 7 years approximately $7,000,000,000 for our armed forces. This is exclusive of the $5,000,000,000 already approved this year and the present legislation which we are considering, which would authorize another $4,000,000,000. That means that we have authorized a total of nearly $16,000,000,000 for national defense during this administration. We will have authorized a standing Army of 400,000 men, by far the greatest peacetime Army this country has ever had. We have the greatest Navy that has ever sailed under the American flag. Our Navy in November of 1933 had an aggregate tonnage of a little more than a million tons. Our present program for the new Navy, which means ships now afloat plus the ones under construction, and plus those which Congress has authorized heretofore and which we are going to construct with all possible speed, when completed will have an aggregate tonnage of more than 2,000,000 tons. This will comprise a balanced Navy of approximately 522 vessels. We now have under construction 54 combatant ships. We have just launched 2 of the greatest—and possibly the greatest—battleships in the world. Now add to that the ships which are authorized in the bill which we are now considering—an additional tonnage of 1,325,000 tons at a cost of $4,000,000,000, and we have a grand total of approximately three and a half million tons of naval combatant craft. This bill, which the Congress in its wisdom will pass, authorizes capital ships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. If and when this program is completed the United States will have by far the greatest Navy that the world has ever seen. But the necessity for such a Navy is evident. Even as we debate this bill, the fate of the French Fleet—the third largest in the world—is in doubt. Just what will eventually happen to the British Fleet no one can foretell. At any rate, it is in the realm of possibility, whether we like it or not, that before another 6 months have elapsed a large portion of the British Fleet, as well as the entire French Fleet, may fall into the hands of the German and Italian war lords. We hope—yea, we even pray—that such a thing may not happen, but we have no assurance that it will not.

NECESSITY FOR SPEED

So it is quite evident that in this chaotic condition of world affairs we as a nation can no longer as a neutral bystander go unprepared. We must, in the words of the President, go "full speed ahead." Mr. Henry Ford, the great industrial leader, assures us that he can build 1,000 planes a day. In fact, he and his staff, together with other great industrial leaders and their trained experts, are now busily engaged in setting up plans to turn out a maximum of planes. I am one of those who believe that Mr. Ford, if not hampered by too much governmental red tape, can make good his boast of a thousand planes a day, in time. In fact, we do not need the production of a thousand planes a day now, but what we do need is to have industry geared up to the point where industry can turn out 1,000 planes a day if necessary. Hand in hand with the development of the planes must go the training of the personnel to handle the planes. I am happy in the thought that by the time we have the pilots and the ground crew trained to handle the planes industry will be in position to produce them.

Mr. Speaker, how pitiful came the cry from the crushed Allied soldiers after the battle of Flanders in their request for planes, planes, and more planes. It would be nothing short of criminal for the President and the Congress of the United States to fail in their immediate duty to prepare the necessary planes, tanks, and other machines of war now and not after we get into a war. Now is the time to prepare and not after it is too late. Surely the President and the Congress would have the blood of millions of innocent young Americans on their hands if they should fail in this hour to profit by the experience of the Allies. Given 10,000 more modern war planes 30 days ago the Allies would have stopped Germany short of the French boundary. Under the hellish pounding and bombing of Nazi tanks and planes in greatly superior numbers, the gallant soldiers of Holland, of Belgium, of France, and of England were at the mercy of the invading hordes. Our slogan until we are fully prepared should be, Remember the fate of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Norway, Holland, and France.

INVASION NOT IMMINENT

Mr. Speaker, I do not fear an immediate invasion of this country by the unholy coalition of Hitler and Mussolini, nor the invasion by any other war lords bent upon unconscionable aggression. We know not how long England can hold out. We hope for the best but fear the worst. America wants no war. America is and always has been a peace-loving nation. Never in its history has it unsheathed its sword in an unjust cause of aggression. America has no desire to become a world empire. But America must be frank with itself and face the issue. Dark days may lie ahead.

Mr. Speaker, powerful influences are at work to get this country into the maelstrom of this modern bloody war. The intrigue of world statesmen and European diplomacy is about its task today even as it was in 1916. Events are moving swiftly. God in heaven knows that no one in this country condemns the ruthless and wanton aggression of Hitler and the cowardly action of Mussolini more than do I. But I am thinking of America. America is not prepared to go to war. I am thinking of the youth of this country who would have to be slaughtered in such a war. I am not thinking of big business and munition makers; I am thinking of the plain people who will have to fight such a war. I am thinking of my son, who has just qualified as an aviation pilot; of your sons, who would be called upon to shed their precious blood upon a foreign soil. I am thinking of the mothers of this land who love these tender youths more than their own lives. You and I are willing, yea, we would even take justifiable pride in seeing those precious lives sacrificed in defense of American soil and American institutions. But we pray that American statesmanship may not blindly lead us into the fatal error of embarking upon the bloody sea of European intrigue in another futile effort to settle European quarrels.

We can escape being drawn into this war if we will follow the dictates of common sense. First, we must carry out a program of preparedness, which we have started, to the point of perfection, regardless of cost—a program which will be so strong in its realization that the war lords will hesitate to provoke it. Strong nations do not provoke wars with stronger nations; they invade only the weaker nations. Force is the only language they respect. Second, we must refrain from aggressive and overt acts and intemperate speech on our own part. Wise people do not call bad men ugly and fighting names unless they are ready to fight. America is in no position now to fight, and it ill behooves us to commit acts of aggression and use intemperate speech. Third, we most emphatically must get our own house in order. Enjoying the benefits of the freest government in the world, American citizens must become unified in one great patriotic body. In these perilous times there is no room in this country for subversive activities, members of the "fifth column," or those who would commit sabotage. This is no time for maudlin sentiment and the prating about selfish rights. The selfish rights of the individual must yield to the collective selfishness of national preservation. Those who would benefit by the blessings of our form of government must realize their duty to their Government.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this is no time for either petty or partisan politics. On the occasion of the consideration by this body of the neutrality bill last year this house was generous in its approval of my opening statement in my discussion of that bill when I said: "Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important at the inception of this debate to take cognizance of the fact that we are trying to save this country from becoming involved in a European war rather than trying to elect somebody to office in 1940."

If that statement was worthy of your applause then, certainly its repetition now is more worthy. We have undertaken a big job, a job of preparing this Nation as it has never been prepared before—the job of protecting the Monroe Doctrine, the job of preventing this country from becoming involved in European politics and the bloodiest of all European wars. He who would play politics with this program might awaken some future day to realize that his toga of office was covered with the innocent blood of American youth. God forbid that this, the greatest democracy on earth, should ever fall prey to a foreign foe as the result of internal dissension, political aspirations, or the efforts of an undesirable and despicable "fifth column" element. May we, the beneficiaries of the foresight of the founding fathers in establishing the greatest democracy on earth, be equal to the occasion by observing these fundamental preventives of war.

DEMOCRACY CHALLENGED

Democracy is challenged by totalitarianism. We have seen a crushed Germany and a secondary power—Italy—under the leadership of ruthless dictatorships build gigantic war machines by the simple method of basing their whole economy around the building of those war machines. While France, England, and America were pursuing the peaceful pursuits of normal existence, these dictators were building up their armed forces for warfare. While we have built schoolhouses and spent billions for the more abundant life, they have built war machines. That their national economy would have fallen of its own weight and their nations have gone bankrupt without proceeding along the lines of aggression for which they had prepared is of no moment. We in America must of necessity—not of choice—prepare to meet that war machine with an equal or superior one. When we will have to meet it, if at all, is a debatable question. But if we are not prepared to meet it, our error will be fatal. All of the patriotism, all of our resplendent courage, all of our magnificent achievements in building the greatest model of human government in the history of the world, will avail us nothing if we fail to meet the challenge which has been thrown at us. God forbid that the descendants of Washington, of Lee, of Jackson, and of Jefferson should be found wanting. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9633. An act to enlarge and extend the power and jurisdiction of the Board of Education over degree-conferring institutions operating within the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5138) entitled "An act to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 8285. An act to limit the importation of articles, products, and minerals produced, processed, or mined under process covered by outstanding United States patents; to define unfair trade practices in certain instances, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8692. An act to amend the act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9877) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam, providing for the application of revenues from said project, authorizing the operation of the Boulder power plant by the United States directly or through agents, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. JOHNSON of California to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

Mr. VINSON of Georgia submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will explain the conference report, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman also explain the amendment adopted by the Senate in paragraph (c) of section 14?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am going to explain it all right now.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matters inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "similar equipment, with or without advertising or competitive bidding upon determination that the price is fair and reasonable, and deliveries of material under all orders placed pursuant to the authority of this section and all other naval contracts or orders and all Army contracts and orders shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over all deliveries for private account or for export: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every three months to the Congress the contracts entered into under the authority of this section: Provided further, That contracts negotiated pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be contracts for the purchase of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market within the meaning of section 9 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45): Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall relieve a bidder or contractor of the obligation to furnish the bonds under the requirements of the Act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793; 40 U. S. C. 270 (a) to (d): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under the authority granted by this subsection to negotiate contracts; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under the authority of this subsection, or any War Department contract entered into in the form of cost-plus-a-fixed-fee, shall not exceed 7 per centum of the estimated cost of the contract (exclusive of the fee as determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be).

"(b) After the date of approval of this Act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the Act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

"(1) to pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 8 per centum (in lieu of the 10 per centum and 12 per centum specified in such section 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year;

"(2) that any profit in excess of 8.7 per centum of the cost of performing such contracts except prime contracts made on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis as are completed by the contracting party within the income taxable year shall be considered to be profit in excess of 8 per centum of the total prices of such contracts; and

"(3) that he will make no subcontract which is within the scope of such section 3, unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 4. In the case of every contract or subcontract for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or any portion thereof which is entered into (whether before or after the date of approval of this Act), the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, after agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, shall certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to (a) the necessity and cost of special additional equipment and facilities acquired to facilitate, during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the completion of such naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or portion thereof in private plants and (b) the percentage of cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be charged against such contract or subcontract. For all purposes of section 3 of the Act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended, such certification shall be subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe, but shall be binding upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, unless within five days after receipt of such certification, he make formal objection thereto to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War as the case may be. The part of such cost chargeable against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification, shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be considered to be a reduction of the contract price of the contract or subcontract. The amount charged against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be applied against and reduce the cost or other basis of such special additional equipment and facilities as of the date of installation thereof: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall report to the Congress, every three months, the cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be borne by the Government under each contract.";

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard and their field services shall be eight hours a day or forty hours per week during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the head of the Department concerned may prescribe, and where additional employees cannot be obtained to meet the exigencies of the situation, these hours may be exceeded: Provided further, That compensation for employment in excess of forty hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate shall be paid only to monthly, per diem, hourly, and piece-work employees, whose wages are set by the Act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat. 587), as amended or modified; and also to professional and subprofessional employees and to blue printers, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, supervisory planners and estimators, and supervisory progressmen, and assistants to shop and plant superintendents of the C. A. F. service, as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; U. S. C. 5, ch. 13), as amended: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for one day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries: Provided further, That the President is authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, for the War and Navy Departments and for the Coast Guard and their field services, during the period of the national emergency declared by him on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482; U. S. C. 5, 26 (a)), if in his judgment such course is necessary in the interest of national defense, and any regulations issued pursuant to the Act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161; U. S. C. Supp. V, title 5, sec. 29 (a)), may be modified accordingly: And provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe regulations to establish such uniformity among the War and Navy Departments and the Coast Guard and their field services in regard to hours of work and compensation for overtime of their civilian employees as he may deem necessary in the interest of national defense.

"(b) During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the law prohibiting more than eight hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the Act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual naval project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this Act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the Native and Alien Schedules of Wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this Act.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary of the Navy finds it impossible to make contracts or obtain facilities to effectuate the purposes of this Act in the procurement or construction of items authorized in connection with national defense he is hereby authorized to provide out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for such purposes, the necessary buildings, facilities, utilities and appurtenances thereto on government owned land or elsewhere, and to operate them, either by means of government personnel or otherwise: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the compensation to the owner of such plant or facility: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress, every three months, the contracts entered into under the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment in section (b), insert the following:

"(b) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as the case may be are hereby requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the respective Chairman of the Committees on Military Affairs and the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of each contract, order, or agreement covering exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exchanged for other military or naval equipment, munitions or supplies, and a copy of each contract, order or agreement shall be furnished regarding any other disposition of military or naval equipment, munitions and supplies by which the title passes, either de jure or de facto, from the United States, or by which delivery of material thereunder is deferred, where the original cost of such military or naval equipment, munitions or supplies exceeded or exceeds $2,000. The copies of each contract, order or agreement herein referred to shall be transmitted to the respective Chairmen of the Committees not later than twenty-four hours after such contract, order or agreement is made, and the Chairman of each Committee shall consider such contracts, orders or agreements confidential unless a majority of the members of his Committee shall direct the particular transaction to be made public."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 12, 13, 16, 17, 23, and 24: Modifies House provision to specify any national emergency to be the emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist.

On amendments Nos. 3 to 8, inclusive: Modifies House language to include the Secretary of the Treasury for Coast Guard contracts.

On amendments Nos. 9 and 10: Modifies House language to provide report to Congress every 3 months instead of the beginning of each regular session.

On amendment No. 11: Designates subsection (a) to section 2.

On amendment No. 14: Modifies House language to include the Army; to provide a report be made to Congress every 3 months; clarifies contracts that may be made under this authority; prohibits cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracts, but allows cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract; limits profit on cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract to 7 percent of estimated cost of contract.

This amendment amends section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934, to limit the profit on contracts to 8 percent on contracts or 8.70 percent on cost of performing contracts.

On amendment No. 15: Modifies House language to include the Army in contracts for aircraft.

On amendment No. 18: Modifies House language to provide means by which contractors will know what can be allowed as a credit in determining excess profits.

On amendment No. 19: Modifies Senate provisions by refusing to allow time and one-half for overtime to per annum employees except those specifically stated—namely, professional and subprofessional employees and a few employees of the C. A. F. group, such as blueprinters, rotaprint operators, inspectors, supervisory planners, and estimators, etc. It denies overtime compensation to the clerks, stenographers, typists, etc.

On amendment No. 20: Modifies House language so as to include the War Department in reemploying retired civilian personnel.

On amendment No. 21: Modifies House provision relative to the procedure in removing a civil-service employee when national security is involved.

On amendments Nos. 22 and 25: Modifies House provisions to include employees of the Coast Guard who may be allowed to work for pay during their leave period and to make the section applicable to those who cannot be spared without detriment to the national defense.

On amendment No. 26: Extends House provision on limit of cost of vessels to include any other project whose cost is limited by statute as may be necessary to expedite national defense; it removes monetary limitations and appropriations for group IV employees; authorizes employment of additional personnel and payment of attendant expenses. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to use available appropriations to make contracts or obtain facilities to effectuate the purposes of the act and to take steps to obtain additional necessary facilities and to operate them.

On amendment No. 27: Eliminates House language no longer necessary due to Senate amendments.

On amendment No. 28: Authorizes Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury to modify existing contracts as may be necessary to expedite military and naval defenses.

On amendments Nos. 29 and 32: Modifies House provision to terminate certain provisions of this act on June 30, 1942, instead of for 3 years.

On amendment No. 30: Provides that the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, acting by direction of the President, shall be equivalent to Presidential approval required by act of April 25, 1939.

On amendment No. 31: Limits the extent to which aliens shall have access to certain plans and specifications and the work thereunder. It provides the penalty for willful violation. It also provides a penalty for aliens who obtain employment on certain classes of contracts by willful misrepresentations.

On amendment No. 33: Authorizes the President to suspend provision of the Walsh-Healey Act when necessary in the public interest.

On amendment No. 34: Prohibits the disposal of any military or naval weapon, ship, boat, aircraft, or other military supplies without certification of the Chief of Naval Operations or the Chief of Staff of the Army that such material is not essential to the defense of the United States. It provides that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall notify the chairman of the respective congressional committees the details of any transfer of any such material or equipment within 24 hours when the value exceeds $2,000 with copies of the contracts, orders, or agreements. This amendment is not to be construed to repeal or modify existing law relative to restriction on sending a vessel of war out of jurisdiction of the United States when the United States is a neutral during war.

On amendments Nos. 35 to 40, inclusive, comprising all of title II of the act: Provide for housing for military personnel (except officers) and for civilian workers under the War and Navy Departments and for workers in national defense industries, including their families. The two defense departments and the United States Housing Authority are authorized, jointly and severally, to provide such housing wherever needed by our rapidly growing defense program. No funds are provided, but any funds available to U. S. H. A. may be used. All projects will be subject to the approval of the President and a determination by him that an acute shortage of housing exists in the locality which impedes the national-defense program.

Low rentals will be charged, within the financial capacity of the workers, and in the case of the War and Navy Departments, the rentals reserved will be sufficient to return to the U. S. H. A. the cost of the project. Projects now under construction by U. S. H. A. may be devoted to the national-defense program.

The existing 450 public agencies located in all parts of the country will be utilized in expanding housing facilities.

Recruitment of personnel is already being hampered by lack of housing at many places, including the Panama Canal, Hawaii, Charleston, S. C., Vallejo, Calif., etc., and in the vicinity of isolated industrial plants.

The Housing to be provided is not only urgently necessary during the present emergency, but will thereafter represent permanent assets to the Nation. It will materially assist in keeping worthy American citizens and their families out of the slums.

CARL VINSON,
LEONARD W. SCHUETZ,
M. J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD the bill as agreed to in conference in its entirety, leaving out the Senate amendment numbers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the opinion of the President of the United States such course would be in the best interests of national defense during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury in the case of Coast Guard contracts, is authorized to advance, from appropriations available therefor, payments to contractors in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price, upon such terms as such Secretary shall prescribe, and adequate security for the protection of the Government for the payments so made shall be required. The Secretary concerned is further authorized in his discretion to make partial payments on the balance of the contract price from time to time during the progress of the work, such partial payments not to exceed the value of the work already done, but to be subject to a lien as provided by the act of August 22, 1911 (37 Stat. 32; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 582), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make partial payments for work already done under public contracts": Provided, That the Secretary concerned shall report every 3 months to the Congress the advance payments made under the authority of this section.

SEC. 2. (a) That whenever deemed by the President of the United States to be in the best interests of the national defense during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to negotiate contracts for the acquisition, construction, repair, or alteration of complete naval vessels or aircraft, or any portion thereof, including plans, spare parts, and equipment therefor, that have been or may be authorized, and also for machine tools and other similar equipment, with or without advertising or competitive bidding upon determination that the price is fair and reasonable, and deliveries of material under all orders placed pursuant to the authority of this section and all other naval contracts or orders and all Army contracts and orders shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over all deliveries for private account or for export: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every 3 months to the Congress the contracts entered into under the authority of this section: Provided further, That contracts negotiated pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be contracts for the purchase of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market within the meaning of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45): Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall relieve a bidder or contractor of the obligation to furnish the bonds under the requirements of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793; 40 U. S. C. 270 (a) to (d)): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under the authority granted by this subsection to negotiate contracts; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under the authority of this subsection, or any War Department contract entered into in the form of cost plus a fixed fee, shall not exceed 7 percent of the estimated cost of the contract (exclusive of the fee as determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be).

(b) After the date of approval of this act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

(1) to pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 8 percent (in lieu of the 10 percent and 12 percent specified in such section 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year;

(2) that any profit in excess of 8.70 percent of the cost of performing such contracts (except prime contracts made on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis) as are completed by the contracting party within the income taxable year shall be considered to be profit in excess of 8 percent of the total contract prices of such contracts; and

(3) that he will make no subcontract which is within the scope of such section 3, unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended by the acts of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926), and April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 560; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 496), and as made applicable to contracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army by such act of April 3, 1939, shall, in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into after the date of approval of this act and during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, be limited to contracts or subcontracts where the award exceeds $25,000.

SEC. 4. In the case of every contract or subcontract for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or any portion thereof which is entered into (whether before or after the date of approval of this act), the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, after agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, shall certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to (a) the necessity and cost of special additional equipment and facilities acquired to facilitate, during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the completion of such naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or portion thereof in private plants and (b) the percentage of cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be charged against such contract or subcontract. For all purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended, such certification shall be subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe, but shall be binding upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue unless, within 5 days after receipt of such certification, he make formal objection thereto to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be. The part of such cost chargeable against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be considered to be a reduction of the contract price of the contract or subcontract. The amount charged against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be applied against and reduce the cost or other basis of such special additional equipment and facilities as of the date of installation thereof: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall report to the Congress, every 3 months, the cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be borne by the Government under each contract.

SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard and their field services shall be 8 hours a day or 40 hours per week during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the head of the Department concerned may prescribe, and where additional employees cannot be obtained to meet the exigencies of the situation, these hours may be exceeded: Provided further, That compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate shall be paid only to monthly, per diem, hourly, and piece-work employees, whose wages are set by the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat. 587) as amended or modified; and also to professional, and subprofessional employees and to blue printers, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, supervisory planners and estimators, and supervisory progressmen, and assistants to shop and plant superintendents of the C. A. F. service, as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; U. S. C. 5, ch. 13), as amended: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries: Provided further, That the President is authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, for the War and Navy Departments and for the Coast Guard and their field services, during the period of the national emergency declared by him on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482; U. S. C. 5, 26 (a)), if in his judgment such course is necessary in the interest of national defense, and any regulations issued pursuant to the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 29 (a)), may be modified accordingly: And provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe regulations to establish such uniformity among the War and Navy Departments and the Coast Guard and their field services in regard to hours of work and compensation for overtime of their civilian employees as he may deem necessary in the interest of national defense.

(b) During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy, and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended.

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 468), and section 204 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 404), any person heretofore or hereafter retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, may be reemployed in the service of the War and Navy Departments: Provided, That there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of such person and credited to his account as provided in section 12 (a) of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, the regular deductions prescribed by the said act: Provided further, That upon separation from the service for any cause such person may elect to receive a refund of the total deductions so withheld together with interest at 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each year, or receive credit for the additional service in the computation of any annuity awarded thereafter: Provided further, That payment of the annuity of such person shall be suspended during the period of such employment: Provided further, That during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), shall not apply to any civil-service employee of the War or Navy Departments or of the Coast Guard, or their field services, whose immediate removal is, in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, warranted by the demands of national security, but nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or suspend the proviso in that section. Those persons summarily removed under the authority of this section may, if in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, subsequent investigation so warrants, be reinstated, and if so reinstated shall be allowed compensation for the period of such removal at the rate they were receiving on the date of removal: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal any such person shall have an opportunity personally to appear before the official designated by the Secretary concerned and be fully informed of the reasons for such removal, and to submit, within 30 days thereafter, such statement or affidavits, or both, as he may desire to show why he should be retained and not removed.

SEC. 7. The act of March 14, 1936, entitled "An act to provide for vacations to Government employees, and for other purposes" (49 Stat. 1161), is hereby amended by adding, after section 7, a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Employees of the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment and of the Coast Guard may, during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, be employed during the time they would otherwise be on vacation without deprivation of their vacation pay for the time so worked. Employees who forego their vacations in accordance with the provisions of this section may be paid, in addition to their regular pay, the equivalent of the pay they would have drawn during the period of such vacation. The provisions of this section shall be applicable only to employees whose services at the time cannot, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, be spared without detriment to the national defense."

SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual naval project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the native and alien schedules of wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) Whenever the Secretary of the Navy finds it impossible to make contracts or obtain facilities to effectuate the purposes of this act in the procurement or construction of items authorized in connection with national defense, he is hereby authorized to provide, out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for such purposes, the necessary buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto on Government-owned land or elsewhere, and to operate them, either by means of Government personnel or otherwise: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the compensation to the owner of such plant or facility: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress, every 3 months, the contracts entered into under the provisions of this subsection.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized to modify existing contracts, including Coast Guard contracts, as the Secretary concerned may deem necessary to expedite military and naval defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 10. Hereafter, the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, acting by direction of the President, shall constitute approval by the President as required by section 4 of the act approved April 25, 1939 (53 Stat. 590, 592), necessary to the validity of any contract entered into under authority contained in said section.

SEC. 11. (a) No aliens employed by a contractor in the performance of secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts shall be permitted to have access to the plans or specifications, or the work under such contracts, or to participate in the contract trials, unless the written consent of the head of the Government department concerned has first been obtained, and any person who willfully violates or through negligence permits the violation of the provisions of this subsection shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(b) Any alien who obtains employment on secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts by willful misrepresentation of his alien status, or who makes such willful misrepresentation while seeking such employment, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) For the purpose of this section, the term "person" shall be construed to include an individual, partnership, association, corporation, or other business enterprise.

SEC. 12. The provisions of all preceding sections of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

SEC. 13. Section 6 of the act approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), is hereby amended by adding "Provided, That whenever in his judgment such course is in the public interest, the President is authorized to suspend any or all of the representations and stipulations contained in section 1 of this act."

SEC. 14. (a) Notwithstanding the provision of any other law, no military or naval weapon, ship, boat, aircraft, munitions, supplies, or equipment, to which the United States has title, in whole or in part, or which have been contracted for, shall hereafter be transferred, exchanged, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any manner whatsoever unless the Chief of Naval Operations in the case of naval material, and the Chief of Staff of the Army in the case of military material, shall first certify that such material is not essential to the defense of the United States.

(b) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, are hereby requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the chairman of each Committee on Naval Affairs of the Congress of the United States a copy of each contract, order, or agreement covering exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exchanged for other military or naval equipment, munitions or supplies, and a copy of each contract, order, or agreement shall be furnished regarding any other disposition of military or naval equipment, munitions, and supplies by which the title passes, either de jure or de facto, from the United States, or by which delivery of material thereunder is deferred, where the original cost of such military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exceeded or exceeds $2,000. The copies of each contract, order, or agreement herein referred to shall be transmitted to the respective chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs not later than 24 hours after such contract, order, or agreement is made, and the chairman of each committee shall consider such contracts, orders, or agreements confidential unless a majority of the members of his committee shall direct the particular transaction to be made public.

(c) Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify sections 3 and 6, title V of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 222; U. S. C., title 18, secs. 33 and 36).

TITLE II

SEC. 201. In connection with the national-defense program the Navy and War Departments and the United States Housing Authority are hereby authorized to cooperate in making necessary housing available for persons engaged in national-defense activities, as hereinafter provided. "Persons engaged in national-defense activities" (as that term is used in this title) shall include (i) enlisted men with families, who are in the naval and military service (excluding officers) and employees of the Navy and War Departments who are assigned to duty at naval or military reservations, posts, or bases, and (ii) workers with families, who are engaged or to be engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national-defense program. No project shall be developed or assisted for the purposes of this title except with the approval of the President and upon a determination by him that there is an acute shortage of housing in the locality involved which impedes the national-defense program.

SEC. 202. (a) Projects may be initiated hereunder by the Navy or War Department to provide dwellings on or near naval or military reservations, posts, or bases for rental to the enlisted men and employees of the Navy and War Departments prescribed in section 201. Such projects shall be developed by the Navy or War Department or by the Authority, whichever the President determines is better suited to the fulfillment of the purposes of this title with respect to any particular project. If the development of such project is to be undertaken by the Navy or War Department, the Authority is authorized to aid the development of the project by furnishing technical assistance and by transferring to such Department the funds necessary for the development of the project. Any project developed for the purpose of this section shall be leased to the Navy or War Department by the Authority (which shall have title to such project until repayment of the cost thereof to the Authority as prescribed in such lease) upon such terms as shall be prescribed in the lease, which may be the same terms as are authorized by the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, with respect to leases to public housing agencies. All the provisions of said act which apply to the development of projects by the Authority shall (insofar as applicable and not inconsistent herewith) apply to the development of projects by the Navy or War Department. Notwithstanding other provisions of this or any other law, the Department leasing a project shall have the same jurisdiction over such project as it has over the reservation, post, or base in connection with which the project is developed.

(b) The Navy or War Department, in connection with any project developed or leased by it, and the Authority, in connection with any project developed or assisted by it, for the purposes of this title, may acquire real or personal property or any interest therein by purchase, eminent domain, gift, lease, or otherwise. The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the acquisition of any real property by the Navy or War Department or by the Authority for the purposes of this title or to the project developed thereon, and the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, sec. 303b), shall not apply to any lease of any project developed for the purposes of this title or of any dwelling therein. Condemnation proceedings instituted by the Authority shall be in its own name and the practice and procedure governing such proceedings by the United States shall be followed, and the Authority shall likewise be entitled to proceed in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421), and an act of Congress approved March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415). If the Authority acquires land in connection with a project to be assisted for the purposes of this title, it may convey such land to the public housing agency involved for a consideration equal to the cost of the land to the Authority. The Navy and War Departments and the Authority may negotiate, contract, and fix such fees as they determine are reasonable for the services of architects, engineers, surveyors, appraisers, title examiners, and real-estate negotiators in connection with specific projects developed by them under this title. The Secretaries of Navy and War are hereby authorized to make available to the Authority any land that is needed for a project to be developed by the Authority and leased to the Navy or War Department and to execute such leases, agreements, and other instruments with the Authority as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

SEC. 203. In any localities where the President determines that there is an acute shortage of housing which impedes the national-defense program and that the necessary housing would not otherwise be provided when needed for persons engaged in national-defense activities, the Authority may undertake the development and administration of projects to assure the availability of dwellings in such localities for such persons and their families, or the Authority may extend financial assistance to public housing agencies for the development and administration of such projects. Such financial assistance to public housing agencies shall be extended (except as otherwise provided herein and not inconsistent herewith) under the provisions of, and in the same manner and forms as provided in, title I of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, with respect to other housing projects.

SEC. 204. Any contract made for financial assistance under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, may be revised so as to provide that the project involved will be assisted for any of the purposes of this title. The Navy or War Department or the Authority, in the administration of any project developed for the purposes of this title, shall fix rentals for persons engaged in national-defense activities and their families which will be within their financial reach, and the Authority, in any contract for financial assistance or any lease of such a project, shall require the fixing of such rentals. Projects developed by the Navy or War Department, or developed or assisted by the Authority, for the purposes of this title shall not be subject to the elimination requirements of sections 10 (a) and 11 (a) of said act or to any provisions of section 9 of said act which would require any part of the development cost thereof to be met in any manner other than from funds loaned or furnished by the Authority. Funds expended for the purposes of this title shall be excluded in determining, for the purposes of section 21 (d) of said act, the amounts expended within each State. Except as otherwise provided herein or as may be inconsistent herewith, all the provisions of title I of said act shall apply to this title. During the period when the President determines that in any locality there is an acute need for housing to assure the availability of dwellings for persons engaged in national-defense activities, dwellings in a project developed or assisted in said locality which are devoted to the purposes of providing housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities shall not be subject to sections 2 (1) and 2 (2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, and during such period such projects shall be deemed projects of a low-rent character for the purposes of any of the applicable provisions in title I of said act.

SEC. 205. The Authority may use for the purposes of this title any of the funds or authorizations heretofore or hereafter made available to it. The provisions of title I of this act shall not apply to this title.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. As you recall, it was before the House some days ago. It passed the House on the 28th day of May. The objective and purpose of the bill is to expedite ship construction. The main point in the bill is that it relates to the form of contract. The House conferees agreed to this provision:

That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under the authority granted by this subsection to negotiate contracts.

What we are really doing there is getting away from the old cost-plus system of contracts. In addition thereto we have this language:

But this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under the authority of this subsection, or any War Department contract entered into in the form of cost-plus-a-fixed-fee, shall not exceed 7 percent of the estimated cost of the contract (exclusive of the fee as determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have had this morning some telephone calls from manufacturers in Ohio who are interested in this particular section. They bring up the question of whether or not anything is to be done relative to the writing off of expansion facilities that will be necessary to take care of these contracts, or if the limitation of 7 percent will mean that they cannot afford to build additional plants that are necessary, or to do the experimental work that is necessary to take care of this Government work.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman's question does not bear directly on what I was reading, but in general it probably may be said that it does. There is a section, however, that deals with that situation by permitting advances to be made, and the Navy Department and the Bureau of Internal Revenue are trying to reach a decision as to whether or not they shall be charged against the particular contract or whether they shall be charged on an amortization basis. The 7 percent referred to here simply means that if a negotiated contract is entered into for the building of a ship the Navy Department estimates how much that ship will cost, for instance, $25,000,000, and at that time it fixes the fee. The fee cannot exceed 7 percent of the estimated cost. As to the facilities that the manufacturers have to construct to enable them to carry out their contract, the Treasury Department and the Navy Department adjudicate before the contract is entered into what can be charged against the contract and what cannot be charged against the contract.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have been given to understand that the new tax bill that will be presented later in the fall will probably make provision for amortizing or depreciating property that it is necessary to install.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Now, what we are trying to do is to be fair and square to the contractor and at the same time be fair and square with the Government.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And I think we have done that and on these negotiated contracts the House can understand that by this cost-plus-a-fixed-fee plan we will save hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have asked these questions simply to clarify the record.

Mr. MAAS. And this will materially speed up the program by saving about a year.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Another important matter that the House should understand is that under the law that is oftentimes referred to as the Vinson-Trammell Act, which deals with profits, the ceiling on what a contractor can make on a Navy contract is 10 percent. All over that is recaptured and paid back into the Treasury. We have changed this, and I think rightly so, by reducing it from 10 percent to 8 percent. So every man can understand that, when a contract has been awarded as the result of competitive bidding, the maximum amount that anyone can make, including aviation for the Army which heretofore was 12 percent, has been brought down now to 8 percent.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does that mean that he is guaranteed 8 percent, or that he cannot make more than that?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. He is not guaranteed anything. That is the ceiling and that is all he can make. If he makes over 8 percent the excess is recaptured and paid into the Treasury; and I may state that under this law some $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 on the first auditing of these shipbuilders' accounts has been recaptured and paid back to the Treasury.

The other matter that is of importance, as referred to a moment ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], is this provision:

Nothwithstanding the provision of any other law, no military or naval weapon, ship, boat, aircraft, munitions, supplies, or equipment, to which the United States has title, in whole or in part, or which have been contracted for, shall hereafter be transferred, exchanged, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any manner whatsoever unless the Chief of Naval Operations in the case of naval material, and the Chief of Staff of the Army in the case of military material, shall first certify that such material is not essential to the defense of the United States.

So you see the protection that this amendment has thrown around ships, munitions, and airplanes. As long as they are essential for the defense of this country they cannot be sold.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota rose.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Now, what is the provision that the gentleman from South Dakota wanted to inquire about?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to a subsequent paragraph in the section that the gentleman has already mentioned.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. What section is that?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Section 14, paragraphs (b) and (c). I think the gentleman read paragraph (a).

Paragraph (b), as I read it from the RECORD, is an amendment considered in the Senate and provides that in case any sale is made, the Secretaries of War and Navy, respectively, shall make a report.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have explained that.

Section 2 provides that if any profit in excess of 8.7 percent of the cost of performing such contracts—except prime contracts made on a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee basis as are completed by the contracting party within the taxable year—shall be considered to be profit in excess of 8 percent of the total contract prices of such contracts.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think possibly I did not make myself clear. Under the section the gentleman was referring to just before I interrupted him there is another paragraph which I hoped the gentleman would call attention to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is amendment No. 14.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; and in amendment No. 14 there are paragraphs (b) and (c), and the reason I want to call attention to that is that subparagraph (c) states:

Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify sections 3 and 6, title V, of the act approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That means that all of these subcontractors have got to agree to these provisions as well as the original contractors.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; and, as I understand, paragraph (c) also provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal the act of June 15, 1917, to which reference has been made as placing a bar against the sale or disposition of vessels to belligerents.

Mr. MAAS. That remains in the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. I may state to the House, so there will be no misunderstanding, that this bill relates to the War Department, the Coast Guard, and in the measure there is a title permitting the Housing Authority, the War Department, and Navy Department to get together with reference to building houses in the industrial centers where they have a shortage of houses today, and this has been worked out by the Housing Authority, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, and it is satisfactory to the Departments.

If there are no further questions, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on conservation and the public domain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10100, with Mr. RAMSPECK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes. It is, of course, unnecessary for me to dwell at length on the swiftly moving events in Europe. We are all awake to their full significance.

First, let us look into the situation that now confronts the United States. Then let us look into the situation that may confront us tomorrow, and finally consider the developments that the next few years may bring.

At the present we have to consider a German Navy which has demonstrated its bold efficiency in overseas expeditionary operations in the occupation of Norway, in the face of a greatly superior British Fleet.

The ports of Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France have now become bases for this fleet. It does not appear that it will be long before bases on the west coast of Africa will also become available to Germany's Navy. The possibility that the bases of Spain and Portugal will soon be added must be borne in mind.

The combatant tonnage of the German Fleet is about 485,000 tons, built and building.

Italy, the axis partner to Germany, has a combatant tonnage of about 700,000 tons. If this tonnage is added to that of the German Fleet, a combined axis fleet of 1,185,000 can be formed.

If the British Fleet is forced, through lack of repair and overhaul facilities, to leave the eastern Mediterranean, adequate oil supplies and other supplies by sea become available to the axis. The effect of the British blockade would then be very much reduced.

The French Fleet may remain with Britain, it may be sunk, it may be divided, it may be surrendered. The combatant tonnage of the French Fleet is about 792,000 tons. If surrendered to Germany, the various units of the French Fleet could be put in effective operation by German crews from time to time over a period of 12 months following the surrender. If this entire French Fleet were added to the axis, the combined combatant tonnage at the disposal of the axis would be about 1,977,000.

So much for the present and the immediately prospective future; so much for facts now on our doorstep that can no longer be ignored.

Looming as grave possibilities are the defeat of England, the loss of the British Fleet, or the surrender of the British Fleet. The combatant tonnage of the British Fleet is 1,995,000. If this amount were added to the German, Italian, and French Fleets, and, after 6 to 18 months, brought into effective operation by German crews, the total combatant tonnage would be 3,972,000 tons.

The Japanese Fleet has, in sight, a combatant tonnage of about 1,390,000. If this strength is added to the fleets of Germany and Italy the total combatant tonnage would be 2,575,000. If we consider the further addition of the French and British Fleets the total would be 5,362,000.

These are totals now in sight, or that could be in sight under the conditions assumed. But we must also consider additions that can be made to any of the axis combinations listed above during the building periods in which additions are made or can be made to the United States Fleet, as a result of expansion authorizations and appropriations either already on the books or here recommended. The axis now has at its disposal the shipyards and munition factories of Germany, Italy, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium, France, and possibly Spain. The axis may get British shipyards. Japan, of course, has its own shipyards.

Just how much building capacity this total is now, or how much it can be expanded into, would be difficult to estimate. But it would not perhaps be too wide of the mark to say that the capacity exceeds that of the United States perhaps five times.

During the past few years there has been considerable Nazi propaganda, Nazi economic aggression, and Nazi penetration in general into South America. There appears to be much evidence at the present time that Nazi agitation in these regions is boiling.

With victory approaching, the axis navies will have eliminated restraining commitments in Europe. They will have increasing naval strength, and will have west European and West African bases which will provide them springboards for operations in and across the Atlantic.

As of May 1, the built and building combatant tonnage of the United States is—under-age and over-age—1,905,205 tons. The authorized under-age combatant tonnage of the United States, as a result of the passage of the recent Expansion Act, H. R. 8026, is 1,724,480.

The gloomy possibilities that I have outlined may or may not be all realized. Some undoubtedly will be. Under practically any possible combination of circumstances it is imperative that we mobilize for an increase of naval armaments to the maximum degree possible.

It has become obvious that we must arm as rapidly as possible to meet our naval-defense requirements simultaneously in both oceans against a combination of powers concerting action against us. Our aim must always be to have forces sufficient to enable us to have complete freedom of action in either ocean while retaining forces in the other ocean for effective defense of our vital security. Anything less than this strength is hazardous to the security of the Nation.

This bill provides an increase in the authorized under-age tonnage of combatant ships by 1,325,000 tons as follows:

	Tons
Capital ships	385,000
Aircraft carriers	200,000
Cruisers	420,000
Destroyers	250,000
Submarines	70,000
Total	1,325,000

Proportionate increase in auxiliary ship tonnage, 100,000 tons.

While the above total tonnages at first glance may appear large, it cannot be definitely stated whether or not it will provide parity with possible coalition of powers such as actually exist today. The continuance of the development of world conditions along the lines indicated may necessitate an even larger expansion.

While it is true that the keels of the combatant ships cannot be laid immediately, nevertheless the preparation of material can parallel the rapid development of new construction facilities. This will enable us to complete new ships at the earliest possible time. Any delay in authorizing the new ships will, under the circumstances, result in a delay in their completion.

In presenting its program for the expansion of the Navy, the Navy Department has stated its desire that the numbers of the ships in each type should not be made public. The Navy Department feels, and your committee agrees with the Department, that it is contrary to the interests of the United States to broadcast any further in advance than is necessary the country's detailed rearmament plans.

Accordingly, the bill sets forth the additional authorized under-age tonnage of the various categories of combat ships only. The numbers of each type are not set forth. The total number will, however, be about 200 ships.

Section 3 authorizes the appropriation of funds not to exceed $150,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities at either private or naval establishments necessary for building or equipping vessels in this or previous programs. This provision is of very great urgency not only for the purpose of increasing our construction capacity as rapidly as possible, but for the construction of additional plants, located, if possible, in less exposed areas. These additional plants would place us in a position in which we would not have to depend on a single plant, as in the case of a single naval gun factory.

Section 5 of the bill authorizes the expenditure of not more than $25,000,000 for the procurement of patrol craft. This has reference to small vessels for protective effort around our harbors, a type of craft in which we are now very deficient, and which can be constructed in large numbers at small boat yards not capable of building larger ships. This section 5 also provides for the authorization for the procurement of 100,000 tons of auxiliary vessels. The construction of auxiliary vessels, or the acquirement and conversion of merchant vessels for auxiliary naval purposes has been to a large extent shoved aside during the course of years. We are now short of auxiliaries. As we increase our naval combatant strength and our naval aircraft strength, we must parallel these increases with additional auxiliary craft.

Section 6 of the bill is intended to remove from the maximum production of naval aircraft a possible obstacle in existing legislation. The act of 1934 required that 10 percent of naval aircraft be produced in Government factories. The 10,000-plane program recently passed by the Congress contemplates production of naval aircraft at a rate which will be more than 10 times greater than the maximum capacity of the existing Government plants. It is clearly not the intent of Congress, and not in accordance with the imperative needs of the country, that any such legislative restriction should operate to such a disadvantage to the country's naval-aircraft program.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the Washington Gun Factory at the foot of Pennsylvania Avenue is the only naval gun factory in the United States. By this bill we authorize the Secretary, by the approval of the President, to build in the interior of the country, beyond the Allegheny Mountains, out in the steel regions, where labor is available, additional gun factories; and it is certainly highly in the interest of national defense that we have them no longer concentrated along the seaboard.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. We were informed in our committee that the gun factory to which the gentleman has referred is the only naval-gun factory in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. In this bill we have authorized the appropriation of $15,000,000, not only to increase the present plant, but to construct others essential to carrying out this program, because as I have pointed out to you with this combination of powers, it is absolutely essential that this Government be prepared in its first line as early as possible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's informative address. As I understand it, this bill calls for 385,000 tons of capital battleships.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That means about 10 ships of 35,000 tons, or about 9 of 45,000 tons.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It all depends upon the tonnage. Either way you divide it would be correct, if that was the correct tonnage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I understand it, it takes at least 52 months to build one of these ships, and on most of these shipbuilding contracts they are running about 5 months behind the 52 months' schedule.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is contemplated and hoped that the time can be speeded up whereby these ships will be completed within 36 months.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I express the sincere hope that the gentleman is correct, but if we can judge the future by the past, it will take from 4 to 5 years to construct these capital battleships, which, in my judgment, is entirely too long.

Mr. VINSON of Virginia. The gentleman is correct, so far as normal peacetime construction is concerned, in the way in which they have been built, due to the fact that the bottleneck is at the armor plant, and we have been unable to get the armor, but by the provisions of this bill, and by the development of the Charleston, W. Va., armor plant, it is hoped that we can cut the Gordian knot, and get rid of the red tape, and break the bottleneck, and build these ships, in less time than heretofore.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will be good enough to yield further, permit me to say that I have no desire to be critical. I have always voted with the gentleman in matters of national defense. I have never at any time voted against a naval-defense program or any defense program in the sea, the air, or on land. There has been in the past a serious doubt in my mind as to the advisability of constructing too many large, expensive battleships, but I have resolved all doubts in favor of the views of the gentleman and his committee. It occurs to me, however, that instead of having 385,000 tons of capital battleships, that will take from 4 to 5 years to construct, that serious thought should be given to the suggestion to construct more and better pocket battleships, destroyers, and airplane carriers, and to greatly strengthen our air forces on land and on sea.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We, of course, build our Navy according to what other navies are doing. Germany is now building four new great battleships. She has just seized two that the French are building at Brest, and Japan is building battleships. We are forced to construct our defense along lines other nations are doing, and, therefore, it is imperative that we continue to build battleships as long as any other nation does. On the other hand, we are building airplane carriers, and we are providing in this bill for some 15,000 aviators and some 15,000 planes, and we are doing everything possible to work out a well-balanced national defense program for the Navy, because each unit must play its part if the team is to be effective.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, let me add that I am sure all Members interested in adequate national defense appreciate very much not only the information that he is giving, but also the splendid patiotic service the distinguished and able chairman is rendering. I may add that no man in America knows more about the naval-defense needs and its program than does the distinguished gentleman from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I thank the gentleman. In reply I desire to say in all sincerity that no Member of this House is more loyally supporting the President's defense program than is the able and distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma. Not only do I commend the gentleman from Oklahoma for his loyal and consistent support of national defense, but the State of Oklahoma is to be congratulated on sending a gentleman of his caliber to help represent it in this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman also point out to the House the further necessity for this program in this respect, that although we have a larger Navy, for instance, on the Pacific than the Japanese, if events would be such that we would have to split our Navy, then the Japanese Navy would be the largest navy on the Pacific coast.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right. Let the House understand what we are driving at here. This now becomes a hemispheric navy. The Congress has made it mandatory that it is the duty of the United States to defend this hemisphere, and by the bill which we passed recently it makes it absolutely imperative that we have a navy of this size. We not only must defend the continental limits of the United States, but we must defend the Monroe Doctrine. We must defend our insular possessions and we must have a navy in either ocean as large as that of those combinations to which I have called your attention in showing what the combinations could be.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. PACE. In connection with the statement of building a balanced navy, why is it the naval authorities do not consider it necessary to have more submarines than are now authorized by this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The building of submarines by nations depend upon their geographical situation. Our defense is not the same as that of Germany or England or France. We have a coast line which extends from Alaska to Cape Horn, on the Pacific, and this long coast line on the Atlantic. We are 3,000 miles away from the nearest navy across the Atlantic. We are six or seven thousand miles away from Japan. Therefore our defense is different and based upon a different viewpoint than that of countries in Europe, where, for instance, the English Channel separates France from England, or Holland or Norway or territories of that character, where submarines can be effectively used. However, submarines cannot be as effectively used in the ocean as in European countries, but, nevertheless, this program will give us some several hundred submarines.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAMSPECK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10100, had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate still further insists upon its amendments Nos. 35 to 39, inclusive, to the bill (H. R. 9007) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes"; and that it asks a still further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6328. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a));

H. R. 7865. An act to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, and acts amendatory thereof; and

H. R. 9791. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) entitled "An act to expedite the strengthening of the national defense."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2842. An act to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the Court of Claims in a suit instituted by George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, further disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. TARVER, HOUSTON, SHEPPARD, HARE, ENGEL, and KEEFE.

PATENTS FOR LAND HELD UNDER COLOR OF TITLE

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7736) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after "in", insert "Monroe County in."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to state that the minority Member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who was interested in this matter, informed the Chair that he had no objection to this request.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter by Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, of the National Council of Negro Women of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMPORTATION OF ARTICLES, PRODUCTS, AND MINERALS PRODUCED, PROCESSED, OR MINED UNDER PROCESS COVERED BY OUTSTANDING UNITED STATES PATENTS

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8285) to limit the importation of articles, products, and minerals produced, processed, or mined under process covered by outstanding United States patents; to define unfair trade practices in certain instances; and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the importation hereafter for use, sale, or exchange of a product made, produced, processed, or mined under or by means of a process covered by the claims of any unexpired valid United States letters patent, whether issued heretofore or hereafter, shall have the same status for the purposes of section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as the importation of any product or article covered by the claims of any unexpired valid United States letters patent."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to limit the importation of products made, produced, processed, or mined under process covered by unexpired valid United States patents, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAVAL EXPANSION

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10100.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10100, with Mr. RAMSPECK in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, this, of course, is a very important bill, but it is one I think that we all recognize we must accept as absolutely essential.

The entire defense policy and program of this Nation today is dependent upon the Panama Canal. To permit the entire safety and future of our great Nation with all that we have at stake to rest upon such a thin thread as a canal is altogether too dangerous. The security of the Nation and the hemisphere itself is involved in depending upon the safety of a canal. This is taking an unwarranted risk. Whether we like it or not, for 40 years the defense of the United States and its national policy has been dependent upon Great Britain. Unwritten or in any other way, we have had an understanding that the United States would take care of the Pacific and Great Britain would take care of the Atlantic.

The Monroe Doctrine could never have been enforced if it had been challenged at any time in the past 40 years under any other arrangements. We now see what a dangerous position that puts us in. Leaving out any question of sentiment in connection with aid to the Allies, we find ourselves today being told that we must save the British Empire in order to save our own defense, because we have no fleet in the Atlantic.

The time certainly has come when it must be clear to us all that the United States to remain independent and free must depend only upon itself for its defense. Since we are dependent upon a canal, the use of which at any time may be denied to us by sabotage or by air attack—and I frankly say to you that there is no system of defense that can be devised by mankind that can protect the Panama Canal, not even with all the antiaircraft guns you could put there and all the airplanes you could support there, the way war has come to be waged today, with wave after wave of enemy planes coming over—one plane landing one bomb on one gate of one lock, and the Canal is lost to us for the transit of our fleet from one ocean to the other.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. How many planes do we have at the Panama Canal now?

Mr. MAAS. The last time I was down there I counted 18 Army bombers and 12 pursuit planes.

Mr. REED of New York. When was that?

Mr. MAAS. In March.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. The gentleman is well aware that we have got to make our naval dispositions regardless of the number of planes in the Canal Zone. It is very questionable whether we can keep the Canal open for the use of our fleet in any desperate struggle in which this country might become engaged.

Mr. MAAS. I think that is correct. The defense of the Canal, of course, is not going to rest primarily on planes based on the Canal. They must be so based that they reach 1,000 miles at sea to keep enemy aircraft carriers from getting close enough to the Canal to get planes over the Canal Zone during daylight hours.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. Does not the gentleman feel that we are up against a hopeless problem in trying to keep the Canal open if a serious war should come?

Mr. MAAS. Absolutely, and even if we did not have the problem of keeping the Canal open we would still have the problem of distance. Distances in the Pacific are so great as against distances in the Atlantic that our fleet might be 10,000 miles away in the Pacific, leaving the Atlantic coast subject to attack from naval forces based only 3,000 miles away in Europe. Our fleet in the Pacific might not be able to get into the Atlantic in time even though there were no question of keeping the Canal open. It is absolutely necessary for us to protect ourselves in both oceans.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The gentleman and I together with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN] were at the Canal Zone in March and looked the situation over very carefully. As the gentleman has just pointed out, the defense of the Canal is not the defense based on the Canal Zone itself but more probably on a defense based 1,000 miles out to sea. The Members of this House should realize as some of us do all too well that if an enemy aircraft carrier could get within 1,500 miles of the Canal, a defense based on the Canal itself would not be sufficient to protect it.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Not only must we have a defense based 1,000 miles away from the Canal in one direction, but in two directions, for it could easily happen that while we were intercepting an enemy aircraft carrier 1,000 miles away on one side of the Canal another enemy aircraft carrier could come up on the other side of the Canal and destroy it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sure the gentleman is extremely glad the amendment to section 7 appears in the bill prohibiting the sale of ships to foreign countries without the consent of Congress. The sale of ships to foreign countries is dangerous. This is a thing that has troubled me a good deal, and something in which I am very much interested. It is vital that our own national defense be not weakened.

Mr. MAAS. I am glad the gentlewoman from Massachusetts called attention to section 7, because it is one of the most important things to the defense of this Nation. This provision was adopted unanimously by the committee when it was offered by the chairman. It provides that hereafter no vessel, ship, or boat now in the United States Navy or being built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or be chartered or scrapped, without the consent of Congress.

I wonder if the Members of this House realize that one of the reasons why France and England are in the desperate condition they are today—France has capitulated and England is in the most critical condition in its history—is because they shipped to Spain the very vital weapons so needed for their own defense that they left themselves woefully undefended, as they had not made provision to replace those weapons before they themselves became engulfed in the war.

Do the Members realize that if England and France had conserved their own guns, tanks, and airplanes instead of sending them for use in the Spanish Revolution there might have been a different story in Europe today? We must not permit ourselves to fall into that same trap. There can be no surplus of war materials in this country, because there is actually a deficit in them. There cannot be a surplus and a deficit at one and the same time of the same commodity. There is a deficit today in every category and every type of weapon needed in this country.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Is it not a fact that in 1922 we destroyed 11 capital ships, the largest and most formidable vessels that were ever built?

Mr. MAAS. That is perfectly true.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We destroyed 29 battleships—18 in service and 11 under construction.

Mr. MAAS. We must see that that will not happen again.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does the gentleman think this provision—that is to say, section 7 of H. R. 10100—will prevent any more treaties by which the United States might repeat our folly of 1922, when, as the gentleman says, the United States destroyed 11 capital ships, the largest and most formidable that were ever built, whereas the other naval powers merely tore up blueprints?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I think it will. While it is true a treaty may be ratified by the Senate, nevertheless, this provides that no vessel of the Navy can be disposed of in any manner, not even scrapped, without the consent of the House, as well as the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That is the gentleman's understanding of the meaning of the provisions of section 7 in this bill?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I would like to have the RECORD show that there cannot be any more disarmament treaties of that sort.

Mr. MAAS. It is our intention to say that there can be no such disarmament treaties without the consent of the House as well as the Senate hereafter.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman is admittedly an authority on this subject.

Mr. MAAS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I was interested a few moments ago when, in answer to a question asked by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr. VINSON of Georgia] stated that we had at this time the strongest Navy in the world. I would like to have the gentlemans' observation along that line.

Mr. MAAS. I believe that is quite correct. Today the United States has the strongest Navy of any single power in the world, but we must remember that we will never be faced by a single power. We must prepare to defend ourselves against a combination of fleets, because while our Navy is superior to any single navy, in fact it is quite inferior to even such a coalition that could be brought against us in the Atlantic, even if we had our entire Navy in the Atlantic, and any combination added to the Japanese Navy in the Pacific would be superior to our entire fleet if it is kept in the Pacific.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Referring back to that time in our history when we pursued a disarmament program, the gentleman will agree with me that any destruction that may have been made in the way of ships was due to agreements that had been made with other nations, will he not?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. And that there was a general world sentiment favoring disarmament?

Mr. MAAS. Oh, yes; and it was thoroughly agreed to by both parties in this country at that time.

Mr. DITTER. Not only in this country, but other nations of the world, realizing the futility of war, banned together in the hope that war might not recur. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. DITTER. I am correct in saying that one of the purposes of the last war was to end wars?

Mr. MAAS. That is what I thought when I went into it anyway.

Mr. DITTER. That was probably the inspiration out of which the disarmament program sprung. Then as to agreements I believe I am right that they grew out of treaties, did they not?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. And certainly the gentleman in his observation a moment ago did not intend to convey to the House the impression that we could override constitutional limitations and that the House would have a part in the making of treaties if such treaties were projected in the future?

Mr. MAAS. We will have this right when the pending measure is adopted, because while a treaty may be made and ratified by the Senate, to implement it will require action by the House thereafter if it involves sinking of any ships.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. If the other body goes on record at this time in favor of this provision in the pending bill, then the other body is certainly powerless to agree to any treaty in later years that does not incorporate these provisions?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Is it a fact there are 35 fewer fighting ships today than there were 6 years ago?

Mr. MAAS. The figures are so confusing it is hard to say unless I knew the entire basis of your figures and whether you are talking about under-aged or total number of ships, or just what. The ships are becoming over-aged constantly, therefore the number at any one time may appear to decrease, but that does not mean we have fewer ships in the Navy. We may have fewer so-called treaty ships, which means ships under 20 years, or 26 years in the case of capital ships. This does not mean that the total number of ships, both over and under age, is less, however.

Mr. ENGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. Is it not a tragic situation that we are confronted with war, and despite the fact that we have the largest Navy in the world, our foreign policy has been such that we are compelled to build against the world; that the only friends we have are those who are being defeated in the present European conflict?

Mr. MAAS. How is the gentleman certain they are our friends? That has not always been the case, at least. We have several times been at war with each of those countries. I think it is very unfortunate that we have ever permitted our defense system to rely upon some other government. Here we are announcing the policy that from now on the United States shall stand upon its own feet in its protection and in its defense.

Mr. ENGEL. I am for the bill; but does the gentleman advocate a policy of building in the future against the entire world?

Mr. MAAS. If necessary to defend ourselves against the world; yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Referring to the gentleman's statement concerning the protection of the Canal by outposts, I should like to ask if the gentleman does not believe, after his recent trip to the Canal Zone, that we should secure a post in the Galapagos Islands, off Ecuador, and also another in Trinidad?

Mr. MAAS. I certainly do. I believe that Trinidad may be almost the key in that part of the defense, and it is almost vital to us that we have a base in Trinidad. Individually, I would go to almost any extreme to get such a base in Trinidad.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. As I understand, this is merely a bill of authorization?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Were any statements made in the committee as to when the department might ask for appropriations under this authorization?

Mr. MAAS. They have assured us that they intend to ask for an appropriation as soon as possible and to actually start this program within 6 months.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In response to the question just asked, may I state that just as soon as this bill becomes law after the recess it is contemplated to ask for a deficiency appropriation of $175,000,000. The major portion of it will be used in developing facilities throughout the country for the purpose of carrying out this building program.

Mr. MAAS. I want to discuss several features of the bill. The committee added 75,000 tons of aircraft carriers. This is to provide three aircraft carriers for both training Marine squadrons aboard carriers and for operating as carriers for marine air squadrons in event of war. It is going to be essential that the Navy have at least three carriers over and above the actual number needed for air support of the fleets themselves to be assigned for Marine Corps operations in connection with the missions of the Marines in support of fleet operations. The main mission of the Marines is to support the fleet in securing advance naval bases, and then in holding such bases after the fleet moves on in its main operations.

To hold such bases an increasingly important element is aviation. The aviators and airplanes that must be left in support of such advance naval bases must be over and above the need of pilots and planes operating in support of the fleet itself. Therefore there must be separate aircraft carriers to supply Marine air support in taking advance bases, and to keep transporting Marine squadrons as replacements in the task of holding such bases.

I shall offer a committee amendment to raise the limit of naval planes from 10,000 to 15,000, with authority to make any necessary plans in excess of that number if the national defense requires it. This is necessary because of the increasing importance of aviation in successful naval operations.

To be successful a fleet must not only dominate the sea, but also the air. The war in Europe has certainly demonstrated this. To be all-powerful in our own defense we must therefore have the most powerful fleets in the world and the most powerful air fleets in the world.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Regardless of what one's attitude may be toward our foreign policy, the program provided for in this bill is necessary and we should really be for it.

Mr. MAAS. Yes; regardless of any of the mistakes that have been made in the past by any administration in foreign policy or defense, the bitter fact confronts us that this is absolutely essential to the defense of this Nation, and we must do it now regardless of what has happened in the past. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be now read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authorized composition of the United States Navy in under-age vessels as established by the acts of May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401), and June 15, 1940, Public Law No. 629, Seventy-sixth Congress, is hereby further increased by 399,600 tons, as follows:

(a) Aircraft carriers, 79,500 tons.
(b) Cruisers, 198,000 tons.
(c) Destroyers, 80,100 tons.
(d) Submarines, 42,000 tons: Provided, That each of the foregoing increases in tonnage for aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines may be varied upward or downward in the amount of 20 percent of the total increased tonnage authorized herein so long as the sum of the total increases in tonnages of these classes as authorized herein is not exceeded.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after "June" strike out "15" and insert "14."

Page 1, line 7, strike out "three hundred and ninety-nine thousand six hundred" and insert "one million three hundred and twenty-five thousand."

Page 2, beginning in line 1, strike out down to and including the word "exceeded" in line 12, and insert the following:

"(a) Capital ships, 385,000 tons;
"(b) Aircraft carriers, 200,000 tons;

"(c) Cruisers, 420,000 tons.
"(d) Destroyers, 250,000 tons;
"(e) Submarines, 70,000 tons: Provided, That each of the foregoing increases in tonnages for capital ships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines may be varied upward or downward in the amount of 30 percent of the total increased tonnage authorized herein so long as the sum of the total increases in tonnages of these classes as authorized herein is not exceeded."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been listening attentively to all these remarks and comments made on both sides regarding this authorization bill. Because I read something between the lines, I rise to comment and make a few observations.

In the first place, there is no opposition to this measure. Everybody joins in support of it and I believe we will have a unanimous vote on it. However, there have been some things injected to indicate that possibly the responsibility for this condition rests elsewhere than where it belongs. I read from a document I got from the Congressional Library, known as the Campaign Book of the Democratic Party, Candidates and Issues, 1936, and in the Democratic Party platform of 1932 appears the following:

that the people in time of peace may not be burdened by an expenditure fast approaching a billion dollars annually.

In other words, there is criticism there of the previous administration because it appropriated as much as almost a billion dollars for national defense.

Further in this book I find the following, in the platform of 1936:

There has been no deviation with respect to the platform's deviation dealing with the sanctity of treaties and the maintenance of good faith and good will in financial obligations. Adherence to the World Court was recommended to the Congress. The Pact of Paris remains an instrument of national policy.

Further, I read on the back cover of this booklet this statement from a speech of President Roosevelt:

We can keep out of war if those who watch and decide have a sufficiently detailed understanding of international affairs to make certain that the small decisions of each day do not lead toward war, and if, at the same time, they possess the courage to say no to those who selfishly or unwisely would let us go to war.

I call your attention to these statements because this is the place to do it, and because I feel that possibly some reference may be made to the statements on the floor here at the convention next week, or the convention 3 weeks hence.

I further wish to call your attention to the words of a great President, Calvin Coolidge, who once said:

A country loaded with debt has lost its first line of defense.

To those who would say that the country was not ready for a greater defense program, let me quote an authority whom you enjoy quoting.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing his remarks to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman knows that I am proceeding in order, because I have moved to strike out the last word.

In November 1935, the Gallup poll showed that 70 percent of the people were in favor of a bigger Army and 72 percent in favor of a bigger Navy.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment, and may I ask the word that the gentleman has moved to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BENDER. In 1938 a similar poll showed 82 percent of the people were for a bigger Army.

Mr. PARSONS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be permitted to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. In November 1938, according to the Gallup poll, 82 percent of the people of this country were for a bigger Army and 86 percent for a bigger armed force.

Now, let me call attention to the fact that in 1933 the Federal debt was $22,000,000,000. Today it is $45,000,000,000, or an increase of $23,000,000,000, of which only $8,766,000,000 has been appropriated and expended for national preparedness.

Recapitulation of expenditures—not appropriations—for national defense from 1933 through 1939 shows spent:

On the Army, $2,445,833,534; on the Navy, $3,402,541,099. This is a total of $5,848,374,633.

Figures show expenditures for national defense from 1933 through 1939 and appropriated for 1940 and 1941, as follows:

Fiscal year	Navy	Army	Total
1933	$349,361,924	$268,417,426	$617,779,350
1934	297,029,280	243,329,151	540,358,431
1935	430,477,860	273,485,711	703,933,571
1936	529,031,665	382,654,683	911,686,348
1937	548,801,242	374,260,148	923,061,390
1938	588,828,834	421,985,682	1,010,814,516
1939	659,040,284	480,900,733	1,139,941,017
1940	722,389,092	656,898,000	1,379,287,092
1941	851,751,000	687,693,000	1,539,444,000
Total	4,976,681,181	3,789,624,534	8,766,305,715

These billions of dollars were taken from the taxpayers. What defense have the taxpayers received for these billions?

THE ARMY

The largest peacetime appropriations in our history for the Army show a deplorable situation. We find our Regular Army to consist of only 183,447 officers and men. Add a National Guard of 197,188, and a Reserve force of 116,175, and we have a grand total of 496,810.

For this small Army we have spent and appropriated $3,789,624,534 since 1933. In the past 16 years, 1925–40, a total of $6,169,000,000 of "preparedness money" has been consumed by the Army alone, including its air force.

Of the more than $6,000,000,000, noted above, well over five billions was spent only for upkeep. In fact, only $854,526,000 of it went for real preparedness—new aircraft, new tanks, antiaircraft and antitank guns, semiautomatic rifles, field guns, machine guns, trucks, tractors—in the whole 16 years. While we thought we were building up a real modern Army, we were merely housing, feeding, and clothing an Army that wouldn't make a patch on a European army's pants.

Of the $854,526,000 spent for new defense equipment, $509,900,000 went to the Army Air Corps, and $344,626,000 to the ground forces. The balance of the $6,000,000,000 was spent for clothing, housing, and upkeep.

FOURTEEN CENTS FOR DEFENSE; 86 CENTS FOR UPKEEP

In other words, out of every dollar of the six billions preparedness money spent upon our well-fed, well-clothed little Army in 16 years, 86 cents was expended for its comfort and contentment—only 14 cents for actual national-defense equipment. Ponder on that, Mr. Businessman.

Remember also that the Reserve Army Corps of 116,175, included in the total, is made up of 113,177 officers and only 2,998 men, and the Reserve officers practically maintain themselves, receiving little or nothing from the Government.

How about tanks—that powerful factor of modern warfare? This semicivilian American Military Establishment has about 350 tanks, of which only 28 are modern. What would happen to such a handful of tanks as against the cavalcade that has been ripping through the Allied armies? The administration says "the defense expansion program contemplates a total of 928 light and heavy tanks." Two and a half billion dollars gone—and officialdom contemplates.

Another diversion of money from modern equipment is shown in the large-scale Army maneuvers which the War Department recently ordered "because of world conditions." This spring's activities called for an expenditure of $18,000,000. Investigation reveals that 50 percent of this, or $9,000,000, was spent for transporting troops to the maneuvering area.

THE NAVY

Expenditures for the Navy from 1933 through 1939 total $3,402,541,099, plus appropriations of $1,574,140,092 for 1940–41, making a grand total of $4,976,681,191. What do American taxpayers have to show for these billions?

THIRTY-FIVE LESS FIGHTING SHIPS

According to Navy Department records, as presented in the 1939 Statistical Abstract of the United States (p. 149), we had 457 fighting ships in 1934, 436 in 1935, 416 in 1936, 424 in 1937, and 422 on January 1, 1939—a decreas of 35 fighting ships.

Yet the President in his radio fireside chat of May 26, 1940, told the people:

> Between 1933 and 1940—7 fiscal years—your Government will have spent one and a half billion dollars more than it spent on the Navy during the 7 years before 1933.

The point is that for the $2,700,000,000 appropriated during the years 1933 to 1938, inclusive, no strengthening of the Navy occurred. All hope of protection and defense is in the future. All results to be had from these billions depends upon ships on order, laid down, expected to be delivered, and so forth.

The positive fact remains that we had 35 less fighting ships in 1939 than we had in 1933, in spite of the gigantic expenditures recited by the President.

AIR FORCE

Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of the Army General Staff, tells our Washington representatives that "America faces a monumental task to overcome the deficiencies of past neglect" of its air forces. Which means that most of the hundreds of millions appropriated for that purpose during the defense-expenditure spree of the past 9 years has not been used for the purposes it was intended.

The President, in his recent Sunday evening fireside chat on preparedness, said, "In 1933 we had 1,127 useful aircraft—in the Navy—and today we have 2,892 on hand and on order." This is misleading and is not the kind of candor and frankness with which to win the confidence of the American people. What are the facts?

The number of planes on hand for the Navy is 1,755, and on order, 1,137. Read Admiral John H. Towers, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, told the Naval Affairs Committee that the Navy "will have only 1,902 combat planes by July 1, 1941."

Major General Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, testified that of the 2,752 planes in the Army Air Corps, "only 52 planes are fit for modern war," and that of the remaining 2,700 "perhaps a half dozen could be rendered fit."

Fifty-eight fighting planes in the Army, and Germany has 18,000.

Furthermore, of the 2,752 planes on hand in the Army, over 2,000 are training ships, leaving only 863 combat ships, all of which are obsolete. A combat plane today, under the Army's own specifications, requires self-sealing fuel tanks, heavy armor, and guns of light artillery caliber. In neither the Army nor the Navy does the United States have one such plane, save in an experimental phase.

As to planes "on order," the whole delivery schedule for American planes is now further delayed by the recent order giving the Allies priority on all American military production desired by them. Thus, the 3,837 planes "on order" are not in fact in production for our own use should the Allies elect to call for them.

ARTILLERY

Regarding artillery the President said:

> In 1933 we had only 24 modern infantry mortars in the entire Army. We now have on hand and "on order" more than 1,600.

Germany made the 105 millimeter howitzer its basic defense weapon. The United States, on May 1, last, did not have a single one of these weapons on hand. The 105 is heavier than the famous French 75, primary weapon of both the French and United States Armies, and throws twice as heavy a projectile the same distance. Maj. Gen. Charles M. Wesson, Chief of Ordnance, says the Army plans to replace about one-third of the 75's in each division with 105's. This calls for an initial supply of 120, with a final requirement of 300.

The Army so far has ordered just 48 of these howitzers, with delivery more than a year away.

Concerning antiaircraft guns, the President said:

> In 1933 we had only 355 antiaircraft guns. We now have more than 1,700 * * * on hand or "on order."

We actually have on hand 448 3-inch guns and 15 37-millimeter guns—a total of 463. The other 1,237 are "on order." The situation, therefore, is this—we had 355 guns in 1933 and we have 463 today. Yet from 1933 to 1940 expenditures by the Army and Navy for "defense" has totaled $5,847,374,623.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, when the President of the United States addressed the Congress in joint session on May 16 with regard to our national defense he used these words:

> Let us examine, without self-deception, the dangers which confront us. Let us measure our strength and our defense without self-delusion.

Later in the same address he said:

> Our task is plain. The road we must take is clearly indicated. Our defenses must be invulnerable, our security absolute.

I find my text in those two passages from the President's message. The American people are unanimous in their desire to have an impregnable defense for this hemisphere. I am determined they shall have it. It is important that our people know the facts and not be deceived as to our real strength in defending ourselves from foreign aggression.

The first factor to be considered is, of course, our military and naval facilities. The devastating war in Europe has shocked the American people to a realization of our lack of preparedness. Congress has never been reticent in giving the President all the funds he requested these last 8 years for the Army and Navy. Yet we find ourselves today totally lacking the essential equipment for adequate national protection. We find ourselves trying to accomplish in a few months what should have been done during the last several years.

It was no secret that Hitler was building the largest air force in the world and that he was developing a highly mechanized army. Indeed, he openly boasted about his superiority in air. Chamberlain was not impressed. Daladier was not disturbed. It was not until Munich that Great Britain and France began to awaken to the potential power of an air force and a mechanized army. Today the people of Great Britain and France are paying a very dear price for the neglect and lack of foresight on the part of their governments.

They have appealed to the United States for airplanes, for antitank guns, for tanks, for antiaircraft guns, for equipment with which to combat Nazi mechanized power on land and in the air. But there has been very little that the American people could do. Our own Government had been lacking in foresight. Roosevelt, like Chamberlain and Daladier, could not be convinced that a new method of warfare had developed. It was not until the actual invasion of France that our administration experienced a great awakening. We are now feverishly trying to recapture precious time that has been lost in establishing the kind of defense we should have. Our essential equipment is not on hand but only on order.

Take antitank guns, for instance. The War Department estimates our requirements to be 1,556. We have only 218 on hand; 526 are on order, and deliveries will not be completed until June of 1941.

We have on hand only 100 light tanks and 18 medium tanks. On order we have 724 of the former and 176 of the latter.

I do not intend to burden you with statistics, taken from the official records, of the different equipment we actually have on hand. It is no secret that our antiaircraft protection is inadequate. It is no secret that we are only really beginning to build up an air force.

In his message to Congress the President stated, "The American people must recast their thinking about national protection." That we must "recast our thinking" on the essentials for an impregnable defense I thoroughly agree. But it is somewhat disturbing to me, as it must be to the people generally, that it has taken the administration so long to recognize the need to "recast our thinking." Why has it taken these recent developments in the European war for those in charge of our Government to discover the power of an air force and mechanized units?

It cannot be said that the potential power of such a force has not many times been stressed by individual Members of Congress. I cannot recall a single Army or Navy authorization or appropriation bill debated on this floor but that the question was raised as to why more funds were not being allotted to tanks, airplanes, training of pilots and antiaircraft gunners. During the 6 years I have been a Member of Congress it has been my privilege to serve on the Committee on Naval Affairs. Time and again the question was asked at the sessions of this committee as to why it would not be more advisable to concentrate on aircraft development. But in every instance we were always assured that exactly what was requested by the Administration was exactly what was needed.

Let me read to you one paragraph from the minority report filed on March 7, 1938, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and myself, setting forth our views on the naval authorization bill, H. R. 9218, of that year. This paragraph, setting forth our objection to the bill, will be found on page 16 of that report:

> This bill limits naval aircraft when the importance of aircraft for defense is increasing with revolutionary rapidity and other nations are spending 10 times what we are for experimentation in aircraft development for defense.

On many occasions I have endeavored to focus attention on the need for aircraft development. Other Members of this House have done likewise.

Some of you may recall that on June 27 of last year I spoke somewhat at length on the degree to which the airplane had revolutionized warfare, the necessity of our developing this weapon of defense, and the necessity of moving our aircraft industries inland. If you will permit, I should like to read a few paragraphs from my remarks at that time:

> The airplane has revolutionized warfare. It has enlarged the field of battle to such an extent that the classification of combatants and noncombatants no longer exists. With the increased range, increased speed, and increased capacity of aircraft, I think it may be accurately said that the emphasis in modern warfare is gradually shifting from the objective of penetrating the enemy's lines to the objective of destroying the sources of production which sustain those lines. The airplane has produced a weapon of war for destroying a nation's will to survive, and its chief offensive power lies in its ability to spread consternation among a people and destroy their key-defense facilities.
> We need not cite the statements of Army officers and military strategists as authority to prove the thesis that the airplane today, and to a greater extent several years from now, is the most vital weapon of a nation's armament strength.

Those were my expressed views before the Nazi invasion of Norway and before the Nazi invasion of France. The experiences of the present war have served to confirm my conviction. But the point I wish to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is that the administration could not be convinced. It is for that reason that we find ourselves today without the essential equipment for an impregnable defense. It is for that reason that our necessary defense equipment is largely on order rather than in existence. If, therefore, we "measure our strength and our defense without self-delusion," as the President suggested, we have to conclude that today our country is unprepared.

And there are other factors important to national defense to be considered aside from the Military and Naval Establishments. National defense involves more than the number of men under arms and in reserve. It involves more than the size and nature of the fleet and the air force. When we think of national defense, of being prepared for what the future may bring, we must get into the habit of thinking of more than men and equipment. We must consider our ability to finance a war.

With remarkable speed and admirable cooperation, Congress has been enacting legislation to enlarge our Military and Naval Establishments, to repair the deficiencies in matériel and personnel. We want our people to have peace and security. And our people are willing to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary.

It must be recognized that financial preparedness is as important as military preparedness. No country can be successful in a war unless it has the ability to finance its military and naval machinery. It behooves us to establish a sound fiscal policy. Unless we do this all our military and naval preparations may come to naught.

At the present time our national deficit approximates $45,000,000,000. This does not include the indirect obligations of the Federal Government. And we will shortly have to add to the debt the billions we are now appropriating for warships, planes, sea bases, air stations, guns, and all the other items imperative for our safety. In order to meet this need the Congress included a provision in the recent tax bill to increase the statutory debt limit $4,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, we simply cannot continue to follow the policy of deficit accumulation. We are headed for financial chaos. At this session of Congress we made certain changes in the permanent income-tax law and we levied a general tax increase of 10 percent. But only around $1,000,000,000 additional will be realized, and sources of Federal taxation are tapped virtually to the limit.

If we are to realize a truly adequate national defense so earnestly desired by our people, we must be willing to remain in session so that we may revise the entire tax structure, and at the same time give consideration to ways and means for reducing the cost of government. Ninety-two percent of the additions to the public debt during the last 7 years has been due to excess spending for purposes other than national defense. There are innumerable places where money can be saved.

There is still a third factor in connection with our national defense to be considered. I refer to our capacity to produce. It is self-evident that our entire preparedness program, as well as our ability to meet the needs of defensive warfare, must depend upon private enterprise. A recent report by Brookings Institution states that the deficit financing policy of the administration, the taxation policies, and regulatory policies have stopped the flow of capital into productive channels. It is quite unnecessary for me to take the time to enumerate the various laws now on the statute books that have discouraged industrial progress in the United States.

One of the reasons why France was not prepared to resist the ruthless Nazi invasion was the fact that her economic power was weakened by the policies of the Blum government. During the last several years our Government has been following those same policies and making the same mistakes. Business has been harassed. Strife between employees and employer has been encouraged. Private investments in new enterprises have been discouraged. In a word, our economic system has been so disrupted by governmental policies that our country lacks the sustaining power necessary to defend itself properly.

Mr. Chairman, we do not have an impregnable national defense. Let us not deceive ourselves. We are unprepared on the military and naval fronts. We are financially unprepared. We are industrially unprepared. It is a disturbing picture. To make large appropriations for the Army and Navy is not enough. We must put our economic house in order. We must establish a competent government.

The people of the United States appreciate the great dangers confronting us. They ask that we do not become involved in the war in Europe. They want peace. They ask that we make certain we have the strongest defense it is possible to establish. They want safety. I pray that when the war clouds of Europe have lifted that the United States will point the way to a new order, where the blessings of liberty and the blessings of peace will be enjoyed by all men. Let this great Republic of ours be impregnable. The responsibility rests with us. [Applause.]

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, the stark tragedy of the collapse of the great French Republic, with all its far-flung world empire, is a source of grief and sorrow to every friend of free government throughout the world. Today, the sands of democracy are running fast, and it may well be that, within a short space of weeks, government by the people will be found nowhere in the Old World. Only in the Western Hemisphere has democracy so far escaped the blighting breath of the beasts of war and destruction so wantonly loosed by the self-appointed dictators of great peoples in Europe and Asia. We of America have just witnessed the horrible agony of death administered to a sister republic by a pack of international wolves, who, working together, planned for the larger to attack the Low Countries, and in that way lure France from the protection of the cover of her great defensive line to make a brave but hopeless effort to save the little neutrals, whose own refusal to consult with the French staff prior to actual invasion, brought about their destruction and subjected their would-be savior to flank attack and pursuit, only to find Italy, whose very existence as a united nation free of German control was effected by the aid of France, but under totalitarian control and playing the ignoble part of a full-grown jackal ready to jump upon the reeling form of hopeless freedom. A tragedy to civilization—a black and bloody page in the history of the world.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we look no further than the effect of this awful mischief, we shall leave our own and all democratic institutions open to the same unhappy fate. The contemptible attack of Benito Mussolini could not have destroyed France had not Hitler's mechanized legions already rained death from the skies and sprayed destruction along the highways of the north. But France had a great army of brave and well-trained men, commanded by able officers. She had a powerful fleet, a matchless system of fixed defenses. She was a wealthy and powerful land. How, then, can we explain her present loss and suffering? Whatever we may think of the advisability of the course followed by a portion of her leaders in their decision to accept an ignoble and cruel peace in what seems to us to be a useless and unavailing effort to save further loss, we cannot say that the French soldier did not give a brave account of himself so long as he had any of the means with which to combat the mechanized terror he was forced to face.

We therefore see stark force victorious. We see clearly that no living man, no matter how brave, can long stand up to such overwhelming superiority of equipment. But do we realize that, but for those bleeding and broken forms that once were men but which now lie unburied in northern France, our own boys might be now meeting these machines of death practically barehanded? Thanks to their sacrifices, we are being given an opportunity to prepare to meet this Central European terror with the only force that it respects—armed might equal to its own. It will, however, take even our great industries months of intensive work to turn out the engines of war which the pressure of unrestrained international madmen makes essential to our own defense. In the meantime, there lies just one little group of islands, about one-third the size of my native State, between America and this maelstrom of destruction. On the British Isles there are 45,000,000 free men who are determined that the fate of France, of Belgium, of Holland, Norway, Denmark, of Poland, of Czechoslovakia, and all the rest shall not be reenacted there. They have the will to resist. They have the fighting heart. They are engaged, not simply in the defense of their lives. They are defending much more. They are the immediate defenders of their loved ones, of their homeland, of their free institutions. And not simply of their own free institutions, but of free institutions everywhere. They hold the last outpost of liberty in Europe, and they constitute the last barrier between the all-absorbing and destroying ambition of the dictators on the one hand and the American Republics on the other.

The need for improvement of our own defenses is no longer a matter of discussion. The most ardent isolationist, as well as the most sincere pacifist, must now recognize that we must prepare for national defense as we have never done before. The preparation must involve not only the building of a great air fleet, of tanks, artillery, of a 2-ocean Navy, and of greatly augmented forces of trained troops. It must also include adequate defense against enemies at home as well as abroad. It must include preparation to detect and destroy all disloyal and subversive groups, whether native or alien.

Though there is no dispute as to these needs, is it not crystal clear that the very first step in our own program of national defense, the defense of America, if you please, must be directed toward the securing of time—time to carry out the ambitious programs we have envisioned? Are we as well prepared today as was Poland last September? Can we be as well prepared 3 months hence as was France 3 months ago? Yet these great nations were not well enough prepared. They had the men, just as we do, but they did not have the machines. We likewise lack machines. We have no need to fear America's ability to provide them, but it will take time. And only the British—and some French remnants—are holding the dike while we make the needed preparations.

I trust, therefore, that there can be little disagreement with the vital importance of rushing every possible material aid to the last bulwark of democracy. I speak not from any sentimental or philosophical standpoint, but solely from the standpoint of American self-interest. If one doubts that self-interest requires America to send all possible aid, short of men, to Great Britain at once, let him answer the question "Why do we arm at all?" To that question there can be but one answer. We arm because the dictators are armed, and they are coming in our direction. They are moving westward and we see clearly that they are not being stopped. We arm because Germany and Italy have conquered France and may conquer England. If that danger did not exist we would not arm as we are doing. If you feel that there is no danger to America in the steady march of the dictators, then you should not have voted for the vast armament appropriations which you and I so recently supported. There is no other reason for these expenditures.

Next, what do we expect to do with our armaments? What is our purpose? It is to defend ourselves, not somebody else but ourselves, against certain consequences that would follow a totalitarian victory. We arm against German possession of the British Fleet, against German control of Canada, against German possession of British West Indies, close to our shores, and to the Panama Canal; we arm against German or Italian menace to us by way of Latin America. In short, we arm for one purpose and reason only. We arm to be able to prevent consequences which would follow a totalitarian victory over Great Britain.

Now, if we are to prevent the consequences of such a victory, would it not be better for us to take all possible steps to prevent such a victory? Must we sit idle and see the last obstruction removed from the path to America? Must we stand by while Germany gains the fleet she needs to complete and round out her equipment to cross to our side of the Atlantic? Is it not better, far better, for us to make available to Great Britain every material resource at our command, now? To help supply this sister democracy with the arms she will need to defend her shores? Certainly, so long as Britain fights on, America is safe, and American industry is being given the time it so desperately needs. The best way, possibly the only way, for America to arm herself is to arm Great Britain. This does not mean sending American troops to Europe.

Our great President is right. We must redouble our efforts to get what airplanes, tanks, and other armament we have into British hands before it is too late. A 1939 model airplane will do America more good in England in June 1940 than it will as an out-of-date "crate" in the United States in June 1941.

I recognize full well that there is a possibility that, even with our supplies, Great Britain may be defeated. She fights against great odds. I recognize that even after extending aid to the limit of our ability we may later have to defend ourselves, but such aid will not have weakened us. On the contrary, by using our factories now to make arms for Great Britain we shall get them speeded up into quantity production in the shortest possible time. By sending existing equipment we shall be able to make it most effective at the moment, and shall strengthen our own force by replacing it with new material. And, in any event, we shall have gained the thing we need most—time.

Therefore, the first step in American armament must be aid to Great Britain. We can only hope that this will give us time to take the second step—the development of an armament industry. This Congress has already made available vast funds for the construction of needed equipment, but we must all realize that money alone never stopped a tank or brought down an airplane. That money must be converted into arms. That takes time. You cannot walk into a department store and buy a dozen modern bombers, or even a 60-ton tank. Nor can these things be ordered for delivery next week. To produce such machines our factories must have time to install new tools and equipment and train their workmen. We have the greatest industrial plants in the world. We have the executives and the laborers needed to do this tremendous job. But we need time. We will not need as much time as if we were undertaking a peacetime job. We know that our great industrial leaders like Henry Ford, W. C. Knudsen, and their fellows stand ready to and are even now transforming their plants into armament works. We know that American labor recognizes the gravity of the situation and we may confidently expect the sincere and wholehearted cooperation of labor. Mr. Chairman, we can and we will do the job of rearmament and do it in a big way—the only way that will be of any value—if we can but have the needed time.

The American people and the American Government fully recognize the need of arms. We are not delaying. We are now working strenuously to enlarge our forces and to increase our productive capacity. The Congress and the President have acted, but all that we have done is not enough. We must make the home front safe. We must know that the men and industries now struggling to give us our industrial production are not stabbed in the back by the now well-known "fifth column." We must deal sternly and promptly with all those who would undermine our Government or who would sabotage our industry. We must promptly deport those aliens who take advantage of the hospitality we offer. To accomplish this purpose, Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill which this House has already passed, and which I sincerely hope may receive favorable action by the Senate without delay. We cannot, however, assume that all of the disloyal elements are composed of aliens. Let us bow our heads in shame, but let us nevertheless realize that there are American citizens, both native-born and naturalized, who, like Hacha and Quisling would gladly betray our country for a few pieces of silver, just as Judas Iscariot betrayed our Lord 2,000 years ago. We must be on guard at every cross road. We must drive the snakes out of the garden lest they make ineffective our preparations against foreign aggression, but in so doing we must be equally careful that we do not in the name of liberty commit the very crimes of intolerance which we so condemn in others.

To summarize, America must prepare at once. To do so, we must do these things:

First. We must give all possible aid to the last-remaining European democracy as she fights to give us the time we need.

Second. We must rush the actual fabrication of needed airplanes, tanks, guns, and other needed equipment. We must enlist and begin to train the men to handle this equipment. To do this we must cut all red tape, let vast contracts with existing plants, train the necessary labor, as well as soldiers, sailors, and aviators; supply the needed raw materials, and allow nothing to stand in the way.

Third. We must protect ourselves against the traitor, the spy, and the foreign sympathizers. To do this we must keep ever on the alert, training hundreds and possibly thousands of G-men to combat their activities. We must make our preparedness all-inclusive.

While we prepare with the purpose of maintaining peace, not with the purpose of engaging in war, we must never overlook the fact that in this new cruel world of dictators and armed might, only by making prompt and adequate preparation for war can America hope to avoid war. May our purpose always be to avoid war, but if we are forced into war, let us know that our troops will be trained and possessed of adequate and modern equipment. Let us be practical. Let us recognize and profit by the mistakes of others. Let American statesmen be guilty of no Munich. Let American labor be guilty of no such sabotage as wrecked French industry for several years prior to the outbreak of war. Let American capital forego any thought of war profits. Let all American citizens recognize their responsibility to protect the home front from spies and traitors such as betrayed Norway and Holland. Let us do these things and we will not find our boys subjected to the terrors of a retreat from Flanders. Let America, indeed, walk softly but let us never forget to carry a big stick. [Applause.]

The clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to construct such vessels, including replacements authorized by the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503), as may be necessary to provide the total under-age composition authorized in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, including not to exceed $50,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities at either private or naval establishments for building or equipping any ship herein or heretofore authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 9, strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$150,000,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 11, change the period to a comma and insert: "$50,000,000 for essential equipment and facilities for the manufacture of ordnance material at either private or naval establishments, which shall include the authority to purchase land, erect buildings, and acquire the necessary machinery and equipment, and $20,000,000 for the expansion of facilities, which shall include the authority to acquire land and erect buildings for the production of armor at either private or naval establishments."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia to the committee amendment: On page 3, in line 15, insert, after the word "land" the words "at such locations as the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President may deem best suited to the purpose" and insert after the word "buildings" the word "thereon."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 3, line 11, delete the word "ship" and insert in lieu thereof the words "complete naval vessel or portion thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This, Mr. Chairman, is an extraordinary bill, being put through under extraordinary circumstances, but these are extraordinary times. Events require this action. I doubt that there will be a dissenting vote. This speaks well for the important House Committee on Naval Affairs, upon which I have had the privilege of serving during my tenure in this body.

This committee has worked hard for many months. The necessity of increase of naval activity has been apparent to its members, both Republican and Democratic for years. We set ourselves to that task. Through the fine cooperation of the Department itself, we have set in motion legislation these past years, the culmination of which gives us now the finest and one of the largest navies in the world. The House and Senate have backed us up admirably. Congress has not been asleep to the Navy's needs. Recent events require a greater program and a speeding up of the program in motion. The past months have seen the committee devoted to that duty. The opposition charge that we have been neglectful of the naval needs of this country is wholly without foundation. The Republican members of this committee, for whom I have the profoundest respect, whose patriotism cannot be questioned, will bear testimony that such a charge is not correct. The defense effort has been wholly nonpartisan. I think the House will agree that I have some knowledge on this subject.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the distinguished gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the whip of the House.

Mr. BOLAND. I served some time with the gentleman on the Naval Affairs Committee. I know of the gentleman's devotion to the cause of adequate naval defense; particularly has the gentleman, at least during my service, been insistent for the building up of the defense of the Pacific Northwest area. I remember the fight conducted by the gentleman from Washington for the establishment of the Alaskan bases, a section of the country heretofore, and prior to his service in Congress, without defense establishments of any character.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BOLAND. Is not the gentleman from Washington now the ranking majority member of that committee from the Pacific coast and chairman of the important subcommittee of yards and docks?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am, and may I enlarge a little upon the gentleman's reference to the Alaskan bases to show what has been done. The committee, and the Congress, and the Navy have now in process of construction some very adequate and fine bases in Alaska as well as Puget Sound. They are——

Mr. BOLAND. Yes; the gentleman has been very insistent about Puget Sound. There are some new drydocks being built there, are there not? I remember the gentleman from Washington's activity for their approval way back during the close of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. I intend to speak of them later. But the Alaskan bases are now rapidly rounding into shape. The committee and the Congress authorized and appropriated for the bases at Sitka and Kodiak some time ago. This session saw the passage of bills and money forthcoming for additional bases at Unalaska and Anchorage. Few Members here realize the proximity of the Japanese bases to the coast of Alaska, the encroachment of Japanese fishing on the Alaskan coast; and now the Russians are eyeing a naval base and intend to construct one, on their territory within a stone's throw of Alaska. Therefore, it seems to me that the establishment of the first two bases at Sitka and Kodiak were farsighted upon the part of the committee. The new bases round out the picture. Twelve million will be spent at Anchorage, more than that at Kodiak, which base has been under construction for some time; six or seven million will go into Sitka, and an auxiliary base will be built at Unalaska, completing the defense arc from Panama to Hawaii to the Aleutians. The committee and the Navy have been working on this for some years. The Hepburn report advocated this. The bases are to be combined air, submarine, and destroyer bases. Puget Sound will be the mother base.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the able gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Washington will recall that over 3 years ago I advocated to the House the speeding up of the air program of the Navy. I introduced and sponsored a bill for 10,000 additional airplanes and 5,000 additional pilots. I remember the gentleman's strong endorsement of this measure and his work to aid in its passage. This was long before events had shaped up in Europe and the world. I think that now this House will agree that we were right.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I recall that and that same farsighted program advocated by the gentleman from Masssachusetts is now conceded necessary.

Some of us have not been asleep to these defense needs. I can speak, I believe, authoritatively about the Pacific Northwest area. Take Puget Sound, for example.

The Puget Sound Navy Yard has been the recipient of congressional attention long before my service in this body. It grew in efficiency and adequacy along with the general development of the Navy ever since the beginning of this administration. But since 1936 it has experienced an enlargement unparalleled until today it is one of the most efficient and adequate navy yards in the world. At one time in early 1936 less than 2,500 men were employed there. Today, there are close to 7,000 workmen in the yard. These are civilian employees. Thousands of naval officers and men move in and out the yard every year. A torpedo station nearby has been added to. I have advocated manufacture of torpedoes there for the west coast. That will come. Now the station can repair any and all torpedo parts. A large ammunition dump lies close to the base. It is being added to.

The Puget Sound base has the finest harbor, protected by bays and the Sound, in the country. Deep water makes it admirably suited for capital ships. Since 1936 two large battleship drydocks have been added. One a cruiser dock and the other the latest, most up-to-date dock in the world. It is to be dedicated soon. Concrete for the other dock is beginning to pour this month. One, the largest, cost over four million. Its construction employed thousands of workmen. It can take the largest ship the Navy has afloat. The other is designed for enlargement. We are working on a third. These docks will make the yard available for repair of all capital ships and aircraft carriers in the Pacific Fleet.

One of the finest machine shops in the country adjoins the docks. Repair work can be done at a minimum expense and speed. In the past 2 years that has been added to. The foundry has been enlarged. Electric lines have been made handy. Without going into too much detail, Mr. Speaker, with what has been done at the yard and what is contemplated, the Puget Sound Navy Yard is one of the finest in the country for either construction and repair and one of the few yards available for large ship construction.

Its now present pay roll is the largest single pay roll in the whole State of Washington. I need not tell my people what this means to the economic conditions of the section. The little up-to-date city of Bremerton, where the yard is located, experienced one of the greatest growths of any city in the country the past few years, according to the census.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that no one can challenge that record for Puget Sound and Alaska in the matter of defense. These are things that have been going on since my membership on this committee. I appreciate the fine cooperation and aid of the other members. Possibly these things have not been given enough publicity. But they are there. Recent events, as has been well stated here today, call for further enlargement and better adequacy to the Navy's needs in the Pacific. Millions have already been spent.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the dean of the House.

Mr. SABATH. I am not so familiar with the gentleman's activity on the Naval Affairs Committee, but the naval activity in the Puget Sound area will speak, I think, for it; but I think the gentleman should mention briefly another activity in the area, the Sand Point air base.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am glad the gentleman from Illinois mentioned that.

More proof of the pudding that we have not been deaf and have been working in the area, and I do not wish to bring these things up to in any way minimize the importance of other defenses in other naval areas of the country, for the committee has considered all parts in their defense efforts, but I speak of these merely because I participated in detail on these bases. After all, national defense is a national matter and not sectional, and the committee these past few years has attacked the problem with this in mind, but I can say that the Puget Sound area was given special consideration because of the lack of defenses there in the first place, its growth is, however, also indicative of the growth in other sections. It continues to be focal point in national defense.

Seven years ago the Sand Point naval air base was merely a bad landing field with only one small hangar. It was without adequate repair facilities. Today it is not the largest but the finest air base in the country. People in my home town are amazed at its growth in the past 3 years.

The field is enlarged. It is the mother base for the Alaskan squadrons. Machine and repair shops have been built, and so forth.

The pay roll alone in the thirteenth naval district runs well over a million a month. More has been spent in this section the past 4 years than in any comparable district.

The Naval Affairs Committee is proud of its activity and the results toward the adequate defense of this country. I am proud of my membership on the committee. We have been helping build the Navy to be second to none. Recent happenings have made us realize that even more than that is necessary. We can no longer rely upon any balance of sea power. We must build so as to protect ourselves from any combination of naval powers. It is not sufficient to have just sea power stronger than any one nation. It must be stronger than any combination of nations. Although we have the largest Navy in the Pacific, if we had to split it to form an Atlantic squadron, the remainder, in those waters, would be insufficient to cope with, say, Japanese power. That is why this House should be for this further expanse. We have gone over this thing carefully; we believe we are advising the Members soundly, and surely consistent with recent events in the world.

These things cost money. We believe this is the best insurance for America. It is unfortunate we have not had more time to sound out public opinion, but the public, I believe, are willing and ask this be done. They have overwhelmingly approved of the program of the past years referred to by myself heretofore. At least, I am convinced the people of my State have approved of my efforts along these lines. And so——

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do.

Mr. McGRANERY. I know the gentleman is an authority on naval defense, and I value his opinion. He has spoken of these matters of—built and to be built. I call his attention to section 7 of the bill. Is the gentleman in favor of that?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Not only in favor of it, but the committee gave this matter considerable thought before it was placed in the bill. We believe the restriction necessary. If we are going to build ships we should reserve them for our own use. The section is specific; it reads:

No vessel, ship, or boat now in the United States Navy, or being built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or to be charted or scrapped without the consent of Congress.

And so, Mr. Chairman, the United States sets out this week to build the greatest Navy in the history of the world. Two hundred additional ships with a total tonnage of 1,250,000, taking about 6 or 7 years to complete.

Its effect would give us a two-ocean Navy. A fleet of perhaps about 700 ships capable of meeting simultaneous attacks in both oceans. It will be larger by far than the British Navy and larger than projected fleets of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis, even with the French Fleet. It does not contemplate as yet the defeat of the British Fleet and its being added to the axis fleets. We have added more than 75,000 tons of aircraft carriers than originally asked for. We have boosted the naval plane limit from 10,000 to 15,000.

Considerable expansion of shipbuilding facilities are required. The testimony before the committee is to the effect that the Bureau wants most of the new facilities in the private yards of the Pacific coast. Too little shipbuilding has taken place there——

Mr. WALLGREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WALLGREN. I am glad the Department feels that way about the west-coast yards; you have been urging that for some time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; we all, on the committee from the Pacific coast, as well as yourself here on the floor. The Department now realizes this need. It is my understanding that immediately upon the passage of this authorization that the Department will ask the Appropriations Committee for about one hundred and seventy-five million to be used to expand the ways and facilities of the west-coast yards. Admiral Robinson, head of the Bureau of Ships, testified before the committee that they had surveyed the West and found three immediate yards that could be enlarged at minimum cost to make way for this ship construction, one in Seattle, one in San Francisco, and one in Los Angeles. Others in these sections can be used with a little more time. The Navy, under this appropriation, would finance the private yards for ways, and so forth, in part or in whole, and the yards in these strategic localities could begin and become experienced in the building of these necessary fighting ships. It provides an excellent opportunity for the basis of a revival of all shipbuilding on the west coast, especially Puget Sound.

The bill also provides authorization for the building of such small craft as the President may desire and sets aside $25,000,000 for this. These torpedo boats are, and have become, a vital part of naval warfare. They could be built in the small yards around Puget Sound, as my colleague from Washington well knows. I believe we have made the program as available for the Puget Sound shipbuilders as possible. I hope they take advantage of the law. We need this work out there. It can be started within 6 months, at least, the enlargements to the private yards. We need the private activity in Puget Sound to supplement the navy-yard activity.

The program in tonnage compares with the available figure of the other contemplated navies of the world, as follows:

	Tons
United States	3,745,000
Great Britain	2,101,804
Japan	1,457,734
France	819,000
Italy	717,738
Germany	578,444

These totals are as of May 1940. Germany is building swiftly, and Japanese totals are incomplete, as no official information is being released but should be fairly accurate.

By ships, the totals for us are as follows:

	Built	Building	Projected	Total
Aircraft carriers	5	2	12	19
Battleships	15	10	9	34
Cruisers	35	10	50	85
Destroyers	219	48	156	423
Submarines	95	25	68	188
Total	369	95	295	749

We have been moving toward this objective for many months. Its completion will leave no stone unturned for the protection of America. We urge your support, and I know the House will vote this bill promptly. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, because this statement has been comprehensive in nature, and because I believe the people of the country should be informed on this important naval program, especially those in the section of the great Pacific Northwest, I am going to have additional copies printed from the RECORD and sent to those interested, and I know this House and the Naval Affairs Committee will welcome opinions from those citizens. Copies will be available for Members of the House as well as the committee report and the hearings.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we hear so much about armament today, I want to draw your attention to the fact that the fleet at the present time is undermanned. We have not enough officers even for the peacetime organization. There is no effort being made at the present time to increase the facilities at the Naval Academy in order to get more officers.

I shall not take very much time, but I want to draw your attention to just a few of the things that I think should be attended to immediately.

The second statement I want to make has to do with the gun factory. All of the large guns mounted on the vessels of the fleet are manufactured in the Naval Gun Factory here at Washington. I deem it advisable at this time to say that the gun factory will have to be doubled, at least, in order to take care of the needs of the increased fleet we are providing for here today.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the bill provides for such facilities, but puts them back in the mountains for protection?

Mr. IZAC. I have not seen any effort made at the present time to build another naval gun factory at another point.

Mr. MAAS. It is provided for in this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Section 3 is the one that authorizes and provides for it, and I just offered an amendment that the location of it, and the location of what activities are necessary, shall be by direction of the Secretary, approved by the President of the United States. The testimony shows that it is the thought of the Navy Department to try to utilize the Charleston armor plant in connection with the building of the gun factory, because it is essential, and we may have to build one or two more and may have to build them in other sections of the country. That is the reason we put in section 3, to expend $150,000,000 for the expansion and carrying out of the program.

Mr. IZAC. Another point I would like to mention is the fact that you have but one place in this country where you can manufacture torpedoes. It is true, of course, that we have Alexandria now, but with the fleet in the Pacific it seems to me vital we have close to the Pacific another torpedo station to turn out torpedoes for the fleet on the west coast.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, the Pacific coast Representatives are vitally interested in the statement that I am about to make. The Department officials stated that by this expansion program they hope to be able to develop and bring back to life the shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast from Tacoma, Wash., down to San Diego.

Mr. IZAC. I thank the gentleman, and, of course, that satisfies me.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not also true that there is likely to be a shortage of clothing for the increased Navy personnel. That will make a great deal of employment.

Mr. IZAC. I believe that will give employment to people in all sections of the country, and does not vitally affect any one section.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It affects all sections. I understand that much more clothing is needed.

Mr. IZAC. Yes. The gentlewoman is correct.

Mr. CHURCH. I might also inform the gentleman from California that in this $4,000,000,000 naval authorization bill it has to be recognized that it is necessary to place many of these activities in the interior of the country, away from the seacoast.

Mr. IZAC. But, of course, the gentleman will agree with me that we do not expect to have the ships themselves go up into the mud flats of the interior.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The allocation and contracts for construction of the vessels herein authorized shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions provided by the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 503), as amended.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, at the end of the bill insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 5. The President of the United States is hereby further authorized to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of—

"(a) Patrol craft at a total cost not to exceed $25,000,000; and

"(b) One hundred thousand tons of auxiliary vessels of such size, type, and design as he may consider best suited for the purposes of national defense."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Following section 5, as amended, insert:

"SEC. 6. The provisions of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 504), requiring not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, procured subsequent to that act to be constructed or manufactured in Government aircraft factories or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government, shall not operate to curtail procurement so long as production at the said Government plants and factories is maintained at the limit of their capacity as determined by the Secretary of the Navy."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: After section 6, insert the following committee amendment:

"SEC. 7. No vessel, ship, or boat now in the United States Navy or being built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or be chartered or scrapped, without the consent of the Congress."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio to the committee amendment: On page 4, line 19, after the word "built", insert "or hereafter built".

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will prevent any vessel now in the Navy or being built "or hereafter built" from being disposed of without the consent of Congress. It will prevent not only the present but the future weakening of our national defense for the benefit of other countries.

I am supporting the "two-ocean Navy" authorized by this bill, although it is my hope and expectation that the full program will never need to be completed. I feel we are overpessimistic as to the threat to our safety involved in present developments abroad. On the other hand, we dare not be unprepared for the worst possible outcome, and we are therefore prudent in thus authorizing a Navy that will make us independent of all other nations in maintaining our hemisphere defense.

If future events do not bear out our present fears for our safety, if the world within a year or so turns again toward peace, we can then consider the curtailing of this program. If the sea battles which may be fought shortly in European waters prove that the vessels now authorized should be changed, the Navy will have the time and the power to do this under the provisions of this bill. If the worst comes to the worst, we have by this bill prepared ourselves to meet any possible combination of enemies in any ocean.

I was part of the Naval Limitations Conference in 1921–22. I believe that we acted wisely then, helped to create an era of peace and saved billions of dollars. If the opportunity should again arise when America, strongly armed, could take the lead in bringing about peace and disarmament, I hope we shall do so once more. I feel that this bill places us in a strategic position for either war or peace and I hope that we will use this position to promote peace rather than war.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAAS: Page 4, after line 21, add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire or construct naval airplanes and spare parts, and equipment, as may be necessary to provide and maintain the number of useful naval airplanes at a total of 15,000: Provided, That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, the total number of airplanes authorized herein is not sufficient to meet the needs of the national defense, he may, with the approval of the President, make such plans for procurement as the situation may demand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say for the RECORD, so that there will be no further question about it at some future date, that with regard to the committee amendment in section 6, with respect to the construction of 10 percent of aircraft at Government factories, it is the intention of the Naval Affairs Committee, and it will be the intention of the Congress in the passage of this bill, that the Navy Department shall use the full facilities of the Philadelphia naval aircraft factory and maintain maximum production at all times. I would like to put that in the RECORD. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment as amended will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10100) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 538, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 9007.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the statement in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 36, 37, 38, and 39.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and at the end of the matter so restored insert the following: ": Providing further, That this section shall not apply to positions in the Civilian Conservation Corps outside the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

M. C. TARVER,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
BUTLER B. HARE,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Managers on the part of the House.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
PAT MCCARRAN,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Managers of the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments:

On No. 35: Restores language inserted by the House requiring apportionment on the basis of population of non-civil-service positions in the agencies provided for in the bill, amended so as to exempt field employees of the Civilian Conservation Corps from the operations of the provision.

On Nos. 36, 37, 38, and 39: Corrects section numbers.

M. C. TARVER,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
BUTLER B. HARE,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Was this bill increased by the Senate over what the House appropriated?

Mr. TARVER. That is a subject matter that I discussed with the gentleman when the first conference report was adopted, and I gave him at that time the exact figures. This conference report has no relation to the amount of money included in the bill at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6328) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)), with a Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

After line 7, insert:

"Section 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"'d. No duties collected prior to June 26, 1938, under paragraph 1115 (b) of this Act shall be refunded, unless the claimant establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, or to the satisfaction of the trial court, under conditions set forth in section 902 (a) and section 902 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1936, that he bore the burden of such duties.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7865), to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, and acts amendatory thereof, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

(1) Page 1, line 8, strike out [2] and insert: 1.
(2) Page 2, line 12, strike out [3] and insert: 2.
(3) Page 2, line 18, strike out [limiting] and insert: limited.
(4) Page 3, line 5, strike out all after "act" down to and including "act", in line 7.
(5) Page 3, line 8, strike out [4] and insert: 3.
(6) Page 3, line 10, after "licensee," insert: and.
(7) Page 3, line 11, strike out [by it].

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9791) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, insert the following: "Title I."

Page 9, line 5, strike out the word "this act" and insert "the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, approved August 28, 1935, as amended by this title."

Page 9, line 22, strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

Page 9, line 25, strike out the word "nonassembled."

Page 10, line 14, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

Page 10, line 16, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

Page 12, line 5, strike out the word "act" and insert the word "title."

Page 12, line 7, insert a new title, as follows:

"TITLE II

"AMENDMENT—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1939

"Section 2 (d) of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved July 26, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"'(d) Exemptions from tax: There shall be exempt from taxation under this title the following organizations: Corporations, including any community chest, fund, foundation cemetery, association, teachers' retirement fund association, church, or club, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, educational, or social purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation; and labor organizations, trade associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, citizens' associations, or organizations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, farmers' associations organized and operated on a cooperative basis exempt from income tax under section 101 (12) and (13) of the Internal Revenue Code; banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and companies, incorporated or otherwise, which guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, all of which pay taxes upon gross premiums or earnings under existing laws of the District of Columbia; voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents, if (1) no part of their net earnings inures (other than such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (2) 85 percent or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of making such payments and meeting expenses; and corporations organized under act of Congress, if such corporations are instrumentalities of the United States.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 10106, to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article III of title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, is amended by adding after section 14 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 15. Credits, securities, and other intangible personal property within the District not employed in carrying on any business therein by the owner shall be deemed to be located at the domicile of the owner for purposes of taxation under this title, and, if held in trust, shall not be deemed to be located in the District for purposes of taxation under this title solely because of the trustee being domiciled in the District: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to property owned by alien decedents, and that nothing herein contained shall affect the taxation by the District of any property owned by alien decedents which, at the time of the death of such decedents, shall be under the jurisdiction of the District or over which the District has control."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8172. An act to amend section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, relative to the Alaska salmon fishery.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. OVERTON, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, and Mr. SHEPPARD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6572. An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9822) entitled "An act to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate requests the House to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3464) entitled "An act to amend the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 283. Joint resolution authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce.

COMPENSATION OF FORMER EMPLOYEES OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9491) relating to compensation of former employees of the Railway Mail Service in certain positions and reinstated prior to August 14, 1937.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY]?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what this bill is and what it does?

Mr. SWEENEY. The bill seeks to correct an injustice done an individual who was separated from the Railway Mail Service some years ago. She enjoyed a position in grade 4, Railway Mail Division. When she was reinstated as a result of investigation she was put back in grade 2, because Congress, in the meantime, had modified the Reclassification Act.

This bill involves no money. It simply corrects an injustice and has been reported with the full consent of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the thirteenth paragraph of section 7 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 621), as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following new proviso: "And provided further, That former employees of the Railway Mail Service reinstated to stenographic positions prior to August 14, 1937, may be promoted successively to their grade at the time of separation from the service, but not to a higher grade than grade 4."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio speech by me to be delivered this evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a recent editorial from the Binghamton Press.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL]?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the report.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 16, 18, 27, 38, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 14, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 57, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 75; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For payment to Preston L. George, William S. Houston, John G. Nalley, and William H. Wannall, messengers on night duty during the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, $450 each; in all, $1,800, to be paid from the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year 1941."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$3,000,000" proposed in said amendment insert "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$16,200,000" proposed in said amendment insert "$15,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

"Enforcement of Tea Importation Act: For enabling the Federal Security Administrator to carry into effect the provisions of the Act approved March 2, 1897 (21 U. S. C. 41–50), entitled 'An Act to Prevent the Importation of Impure and Unwholesome Tea,' as amended, including payment of compensation and expenses of the members of the Board appointed under section 2 of the Act and all of the necessary officers and employees, both in Washington and in the field, fiscal year 1941, $30,094: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1940, no tea, or merchandise described as tea, shall be examined for importation into the United States, or released by the Collector, under said Act unless the importer or consignee of such tea or merchandise, prior to such examination, has paid for deposit into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, a fee of 3.5 cents for each hundred weight or fraction thereof of such tea and merchandise."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Appraisers Stores Building, Houston, Texas: The limit of cost of the Appraisers Stores Building Project at Houston, Texas, is hereby increased by $75,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure "$75,000,000" proposed in said amendment insert "$50,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$13,980" proposed in said amendment insert "$7,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided, That no part of this sum allocated for expenditure in connection with the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle shall be used in any State without the request of the Governor of such State"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "to remain available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"All moneys available on July 1, 1940, under the appropriation "Construction of Buildings, Utilities, and Appurtenances at Military Posts" may be used in connection with the purposes of such appropriation for the employment of personnel at the seat of Government or elsewhere without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law relating thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Not to exceed 5 per centum of any of the appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1941 may be transferred with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to any other of such appropriations, but no appropriation shall be increased more than 5 per centum thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 20 and 32.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I am gratified to note that the Senate has placed in this bill the sum of $500,000 to be used for investigating the possibilities of producing rubber in the Western Hemisphere. As I stated to the House last Thursday, I felt that we were adopting a short-sighted policy in refusing to appropriate any funds in the deficiency bill for rubber development. I congratulate the House conferees on having agreed to the item and trust that it will be wisely used.

However, it is regrettable that some portion of the funds has not been earmarked for investigating the possibility of producing rubber commercially in this country from the guayule rubber plant. As I have previously pointed out to Members of this body, the development of the guayule rubber plant might go a long way toward helping to solve the farm problem in the United States. Guayule is a native of Mexico and can be successfully grown in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and California. Further investigations might prove that it can be profitably grown in other States. If proven commercially valuable, it could well replace many thousands of acres now growing surplus crops. Certainly its possibilities should not be ignored.

I can see no good reason for spending all of the sum appropriated in either South or Central America. I trust that the Department of Agriculture will see fit to use a portion of the appropriation in the United States for guayule development. We may be taking a long step toward reducing crop surpluses, providing employment, and raising a supply of one of the most vital materials essential to our national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I note with a great deal of gratification that the conferees have agreed to one-half of the sum inserted by the Senate for the control and eradication of the white-fringed beetle. The Budget estimate was $600,000, and, as I understand the conference report, the amount carried or approved in the report is $300,000. That amount in all probability will be insufficient. May I ask whether or not it is the thought of the conferees that if additional money might be necessary for this purpose it will be provided from the general funds for insect-pest control and eradication?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman that the conferees have no information as to just what funds may be available by the Department of Agriculture for that purpose, but inasmuch as the Congress will be in session here, we hope that the $300,000 will be sufficient to at least start the program.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, the gentleman realizes that some $3,000,000 have been appropriated by the Congress for insect control and eradication and that money is subject to being used for the specific purpose of beetle control and eradication.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the Department has the funds, they may be used for that purpose.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. How much did you allow to chase that beetle?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just one-half of the Budget estimate. We saved $300,000 toward balancing the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: On page 11, after line 5, insert:

"Work Projects Administration. The appropriations for the Work Projects Administration for the fiscal year 1941 shall be available for the prosecution of projects, subject to the approval of the President, for training for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national-defense purposes."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted, insert the following:

"WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

"Subdivision (3) of subsection (b) of section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1941, is hereby amended by inserting the following after the word 'training', 'for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national defense purposes,'."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty of bringing up a matter of this kind on this occasion, but this is the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of in legislation. We have provided on pages 9, 10, and 11 a total of $17,000,000 for vocational training of those who register for it in the technical high schools and other schools of the country. This money will produce machinists, toolmakers, and other skilled workers.

The proposition on which you will soon vote is to let the W. P. A. send its employees to that school and pay them while they are going to school. This means that side by side with the boys who are going to school regularly and who are not getting paid for it will be these W. P. A. employees, most of them beyond the age where they can learn the job right, and they will be getting paid for going to school. Did you ever hear of anything quite so ridiculous? It will demoralize the entire vocational training program to produce toolmakers, machinists, and so on. It does seem as though the Congress ought to have some sense about the way it legislates and not agree to such a proposition as this. I hope the motion will be rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is the most salutary provision in the entire bill. It does not cost an extra penny. It provides no additional charge against the Treasury. It will provide training for W. P. A. workers which will be useful to them in finding private employment. It not only provides work relief and relief for their families, but it provides training that will make them useful citizens after they leave W. P. A. In addition, it utilizes facilities which would otherwise be idle and it gives these workers training such as they can get nowhere else outside of vocational schools.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a letter on the subject from the Director of the Work Projects Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

JUNE 22, 1940.

The Honorable CLARENCE CANNON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CANNON: Reference is made to your request for information in connection with the desirability for legislation which would make it possible for the Work Projects Administration to train workers for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national-defense purposes. This legislation, as you know, was provided for by the Senate in Senate amendment No. 4 to House Joint Resolution No. 544, which was later stricken out in conference.

In connection with the operation of a training program of this nature by the Work Projects Administration, I would like to state briefly the methods I propose to follow.

First, I propose to utilize to the fullest extent possible, in cooperation with the United States Office of Education, the available facilities of the presently established public vocational schools. The facilities of these schools, including the trained personnel, can be utilized for the purpose of training during the summer months that are just ahead to a greater extent than in any other period during the year. It is, therefore, important that the training program get under way quickly in order that the Federal Government may take full advantage of the facilities of the established vocational schools.

Second, there are literally hundreds of thousands of persons who are either now employed by the Work Projects Administration or are eligible for such employment who, with a limited amount of training, can be developed into a group of trained workmen ready and qualified to perform useful services in industries which are engaged in production for national-defense purposes. The work histories, work habits, and abilities of these persons are known to the Work Projects Administration, and this Administration is in a position to select the best qualified personnel from this group for assignment to the training program.

It would be my intention to establish, on the same basis as other work projects are set up, a training project to which selected persons from the relief rolls would be assigned. By doing this it would be possible for the Work Projects Administration to accomplish a dual purpose, that of providing employment to needy unemployed persons and, at the same time, to provide training which would equip needy unemployed persons to secure jobs in occupations in industries which are vital to the national defense.

There is no doubt but that industry, within the next few months, will demand a large reservoir of trained labor from which their needs may be filled. The Work Projects Administration has the raw material which, with a limited amount of training and retraining, can be developed into potential employees in industry. I am convinced that this job of training should be instituted immediately in order that the Federal Government may take full advantage of the vacation period of the vocational schools during the summer months and utilize the facilities of these schools to the greatest extent possible.

I wish to assure you that no additional appropriation will be required or requested to finance the proposed training, inasmuch as the funds expended would accomplish the dual purpose of payment of wages to needy unemployed persons as well as provide training in occupations which are vital to the national defense.

Very truly yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON,
Commissioner.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does this program provide that the high schools and colleges which have been giving industrial and vocational training shall continue with increased emphasis because of increased financial aid?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; and it uses their facilities, their laboratories, and their equipment at times when they would not otherwise be in use.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I must say that it is a most wholesome thing to plan to use the machinery, the plants, and shops we have already prepared in peacetime to magnify this work in the present crisis. Such training is highly important now, and we should make use of existing facilities.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I think it will meet with the approval of every citizen who is interested in making the

W. P. A. not merely a temporary stopgap but a stepping stone to a useful profession.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There seems to be a little confusion between the thought expressed by the gentleman and that expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. This does not apply to high-school training or vocational training in the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It applies to vocational training in the W. P. A. through the employment of laboratories, equipment, and facilities of schools at a time when they are not in use for the usual school purposes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does this compel the school authorities in any community to accept the W. P. A. workers in the vocational divisions of the high schools?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No; it will be W. P. A. training, separate from the vocational schools but using their facilities.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We have made appropriations for vocational education to train the boys in the high schools. Now, with respect to this W. P. A. project, are you going to pay the individuals that go into the schools under this proposal, while the boys in the high schools who are working under the vocational educational program get the same training yet get no pay for it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The only difference is that the men who, if you do not pass this authorization, would otherwise spend their time at unskilled work and who otherwise would leave the W. P. A. with no proficiency except the knowledge they had when they went there, will be able when they leave W. P. A. to go immediately into industrial life, equipped to take up a skilled or semiskilled vocation.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does this refer to W. P. A. workers or C. C. C. workers?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It applies to employees on the Work Projects Administration, and will contribute more than any other one feature to rehabilitating and preparing these men for self-support and qualifying them for American citizenship.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 119, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 32. Page 22, after line 21, insert the following: "Pink bollworm and thurberia weevil control: For an additional amount for the control and prevention of spread of the thurberia weevil and the pink bollworm, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, 1941, $380,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KLEBERG moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 32 and concur therein.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the 5 minutes, but I desire to lay before the membership here a situation which deserves serious consideration. There have been occasions when matters involving insect pests have been referred to with all sorts of facetiousness. The measure proposed here is one which does not involve a pest which has come into this country and fastened itself upon it, but one which we desire to keep out of the country, one which history shows that in the country where it functions it has been more destructive than all the pests combined that affect the cotton-producing industry of this Nation and elsewhere.

In days like this, when we are appropriating for things that we feel are imminent, we should be reasonable enough in such an hour to meet this situation, especially when those who have urged these appropriations have complied with every requirement, including statements from doctors and messages from the President and from the Budget Director recommending such legislation. We should not on this occasion overlook the fact that now, with the problem of preparing this Nation for national defense, it will be necessary to continue to try to take up the slack with respect to employment, and cotton as an agency for employment, Mr. Speaker, is the most important single product produced by man.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, and I hope in order to expedite the adoption of this conference report and in order to prepare for the defense of the cotton industry of this country, this motion will prevail.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the committees of the House are at a great disadvantage in defending these appropriation bills. We come here on the 1st of December, a month ahead of the rest of the Members of the House, although we would much rather stay at home with our families in the preholiday season. We come here on the 1st day of December and we stay and hold hearings day after day on these appropriation bills under trying conditions.

To begin with, the departmental representatives who appear before these committees asking for money have every advantage. They demand more and more money every year for more and more diverse purposes. We have no way of checking the accuracy of their statements or the weight of their opinions. We have to take their ipsi dixit and while the vast majority of them are sincere, we find every session some that were mistaken in their conclusions and in many instances which I could cite if there were time, we are the victims of deliberate fraud. We endeavor as best we can to make a fair appraisal of the needs of the Government and hold the appropriations down to the minimum required by the project and administer it as wisely as possible. But always we are under a heavy handicap in our efforts to protect the Treasury, and if we do make mistakes, the mistakes inevitably are in making the appropriation too large rather than too small.

Having finally arrived at as equitable a bill as we can write we must then run the gantlet of the whole committee and then the bill is reported to the House. Here we are assailed from every side by Members who want to load the bill with appropriations for their districts or their States or their industries. It is their duty to represent their constituency and we have no complaint when they ask for these appropriations but that does not lessen the burden and responsibility of the committee to keep the bill as free as possible from unjustified charges against the Treasury. And too often it is difficult to escape the conviction that there are interests which are thinking more of what they can get out of the Government than of what service they can render the Government. In all these debates we wage an unequal struggle against coalitions formed for mutual assistance in putting over appropriations which by themselves would not be agreed to. So invariably there are millions of dollars in every general appropriation bill that ought not to be there. Every one of these appropriation bills we have passed this session carries large sums in excess of the actual needs of the service.

Then we come to the floor of the House and again we have to fight to protect the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the membership of the House should be a little more charitable toward the members of the Committee on Appropriations. We do not want to cut these appropriations. We do not want to deny our colleagues who come in and ask for things in which they are interested.

We would rather be in your favor; we would rather go along with you; we would rather be good fellows than crabs. For while Members as a rule understand, too frequently Members whose appropriations are denied make a personal matter of it. "Oh, well, the committee just does not like me and that is the reason they do not put my project in the bill."

There is no ground for such opinion. Even meritorious proposals must be rejected, not because the money would not be wisely spent, but because we have only so much money to spend and we cannot include everything. If we put in everything that is asked, any one bill would of itself exhaust the entire Treasury. There is nothing personal in these bills. We have no personal interest to serve by denying appropriations. But there must be a limit somewhere.

Then the bill goes to the Senate and the Senate adds everything anybody can suggest and we have to go to conference and fight it all over again. The pending amendment is a case in point.

This item has been before this House four different times and four different times the House has voted against it, and here in the last minute of the last hour of the last day, they come in again with the same old moth-eaten request for an appropriation which the House has four times defeated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is up to the House. We have tried to hold these appropriations down within some limit of reason. Try as we may, they are mushrooming at an alarming rate. The agricultural appropriation bill, for example, has grown in 2 decades over 1,500 percent.

In 1920 the bill carried only $33,000,000 and today we have appropriated for the same purpose $1,534,000,000.

In 20 years, by just such amendments as this, you have helped to raise it from $33,000,000 to $1,534,000,000. At that rate what are we coming to? Where is the end? Somebody must sit on the lid, and the members of the committee have to do that if it is done at all.

If you have any regard for a balanced Budget, if you want the Government conducted on a business basis, if you wish to maintain our form of government you will have to keep us out of national bankruptcy. We ask you to stand by the committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I represent the greatest cotton-producing district in the United States. In that district we have such extremely cold weather in most winters that the pink bollworm cannot well survive, though about half of my district is under quarantine; but in the great majority of the cotton-producing counties of the South the pink bollworm can survive the winter. Believe me, he is the most devastating pest that ever hit a cottonfield. In view of climatic conditions my district would probably profit if the pink bollworm should destroy competing cotton areas.

You have heard about this idea of penny-wise and pound-foolish. It is a foolish thing, in my opinion, for the Congress and for the House of Representatives to turn down this item. The President says we need it, the Budget says we need it, and the Senate says we need it, and everybody who is familiar with the cotton-growing conditions in this country knows that we need this item in order to protect the economic security of millions of men in many communities throughout the South.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. The item adopted by the House just preceding this item had no Budget recommendations or support. I feel somewhat offended with being charged by the gentleman who just spoke against the amendment with raiding the Treasury, when I see instances such as that to which I have just referred.

Mr. MAHON. I trust the House will agree to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KLEBERG), there were—ayes 32, noes 118.

So the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to further insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this completes the action of the House on the deficiency appropriation bill, with the exception of this amendment, which has just been acted on. That has to go back to the Senate for their action. If the Senate should recede, that completes the action. If the Senate should insist, the bill has to come back for further consideration of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. PITTENGER for 2 days on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 83

Resolved, by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, June 22, 1940, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, July 1, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further resolution.

House Resolution 545

Resolved, That notwithstanding the recess or the adjournment of the House until July 1, 1940, the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to receive messages from the Senate and the Speaker be, and he is hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills and found truly enrolled.

The resolution was agreed to.

MARINE WAR-RISK INSURANCE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6572) to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance, and for marine-risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

(1) Page 1,, line 10, after "commerce," insert: due to extraordinary risks arising under existing war conditions.

(2) Page 2, line 25, strike out [war property] and insert: war, property.

(3) Page 4, after line 23, insert:

"SEC. 225. In the event of disagreement as to a claim for losses or the amount thereof, on account of insurance under this subtitle, an action on the claim may be brought and maintained against the United States in the district court of the United States sitting in admiralty in the district in which the claimant or his agent may reside, or in case the claimant has no residence in the United States, in a district court in which the Attorney General of the United States shall agree to accept service. Said suits shall proceed and shall be heard and determined according to the provisions of an Act entitled 'An Act authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes', approved March 9, 1920, as amended (known as the Suits in Admiralty Act), insofar as such provisions are not inapplicable and are not contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle."

(4) Page 6, line 16, strike out [law."] and insert: law.

(5) Page 6, after line 16, insert:

"SEC. 228. All the provisions of this subtitle shall expire by limitation March 10, 1942, or sooner upon a proclamation by the President that the extraordinary condition upon which it is predicated is passed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, what is the amendment, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLAND. I would ask the gentleman not to object. The amendments are rather restrictive in character.

Mr. DITTER. I wonder whether the gentleman would explain the amendments as they came over. Probably we might be able to adjust them.

Mr. BLAND. The amendments put on by the Senate are restrictive in character. This is a bill for marine insurance. The first amendment makes the operation of the bill due to extraordinary risks under existing war conditions so that it meets the objection that the Government might be going generally into the insurance business, which is not intended.

The second amendment is purely a matter of punctuation.

The third amendment is a section that was in the bill reported to the House, and deals with procedural matter as to suits and things of that kind. It was favorably reported. There was never any objection made to it, and by inadvertence it was omitted from the bill that was passed. That is restored.

The last amendment is a new section that has been placed on the bill in the Senate that limits the operation of this bill to March 10, 1942. It provides that all the provisions of this subtitle shall expire by limitation on March 10, 1942, or sooner, upon a proclamation by the President that the extraordinary conditions upon which it is predicated are passed.

So that, with these amendments, they meet all the objections, even those urged here upon the floor.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. I believe my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] would like to interrogate the gentleman on certain features of the bill. I wonder whether he would yield to him for a moment?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. As much as I regret it, I cannot sit on the floor of the House and give my consent to pass this bill by unanimous consent, and permit the Government to go into unlimited subsidized competition in private insurance fields, with the sky the limit, as to the amount of public money which can be spent.

Mr. BLAND. This is not going into subsidized competition. It is simply to provide legislation whereby, if the condition arises that this insurance is needed, the Government can supply it and commerce can move.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Has the Maritime Commission definitely and positively informed your committee that they do not intend to go into the general insurance business and unfairly compete with private business?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. They only intend to use this authority in an emergency, most generally for the purpose of reinsurance?

Mr. BLAND. That is the purpose.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And the Senate amendment limits the date as to the operation of the act, thereby indicating that it is a temporary program by reason of uncertain world conditions?

Mr. BLAND. That is true. It fixes the date at March 10, 1942, and possibly earlier.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the statement of the very distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], who is one of the ablest Members of the House, and in view of the fact that the bill now has a limitation, I, as a humble Member, will withdraw my objection to the consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Is there any immediate necessity for this legislation?

Mr. BLAND. No one can tell what conditions may be in which there is needed marine insurance and reinsurance, and if marine insurance cannot be obtained, commerce cannot move on the waters. There is immediate necessity in being prepared to take care of any condition that may arise.

Mr. THILL. This country is not at war at the present time.

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

Mr. THILL. We do not expect to get into the war, nor do we expect to send our ships into war zones or regions.

Mr. BLAND. We do not; but although we have been building up marine insurance for the last 20 years, we have not yet built it up sufficiently in this country to take care of all our needs for coverage. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection. I urge upon him that it is more for the benefit of the exporters and importers of America than it is otherwise, so that their commerce may move. Without insurance, commerce does not move on the seas.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. THILL. There is no intention, then, to put our ships into war zones?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely not.

Mr. THILL. And then make the Government carry the insurance on these ships, assume the risks, and pay the losses?

Mr. BLAND. I can assure the gentleman that that is not the intention.

Mr. THILL. With that assurance and understanding, I will not press my objection.

Mr. BLAND. I thank the gentleman very much.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALASKAN SALMON FISHERY

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill (H. R. 8172) to amend section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, relative to the Alaska salmon fishery, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 5, strike out all after "amended" where it appears the second time down to and including "thereon" in line 13, and insert: "By inserting after the word 'border' in the first sentence of said section a comma and the following: 'and except by hook and line for either personal or commercial use.'"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment does exactly what the House intended to do, but does it in a slightly different way. We wanted to give the trawlers an opportunity to operate and not be bound by the weekly closed period.

The amendment is acceptable to the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. And I understand that the minority members of the committee approve the suggestion.

Mr. BLAND. Both these bills have the approval of the minority members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a detailed procedure as to how the W. P. A. will operate under the vocational-training plan.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will again stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker. Five minutes' notice will be given by the ringing of the bells.

Thereupon (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 8:58 o'clock p. m.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, under a previous order of the House I was accorded the privilege of addressing the House for 10 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]?

There was no objection.

WARREN K. RABY, LIKE THE UNIFORM HE WORE WITH CREDIT, WAS "TRUE BLUE"

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, June 23 of this year marks the anniversary of the passing of Patrolman Warren K. Raby, an officer of the law who served faithfully the people of Detroit for a period of a little more than eleven years. I rise at this time to pay tribute to a man who has rendered a full measure of distinguished service and who has served the Police Department in accordance with the highest and noblest traditions.

He was a soldier who valiantly fought the unending battle with the thug, the gangster, and the racketeer. He defended the home and the fireside of every citizen within the borders of the city of Detroit. He has acquitted himself with valor on countless occasions. He was modest and reticent about his brave exploits. Yet, in spite of his silence and modesty, the greatness of his heroic acts reached his superior officers and through them relayed to the highest authority within the department. The Commissioner of Police then and there issued a "citation for meritorious service." Six times, for acts of bravery beyond the ordinary requirement of the service, Warren K. Raby has been cited and properly decorated. He was permeated with the highest code of the bluecoat. Every thought and every act of this valiant policeman was actuated by the highest motives and traditions of the department; he stood on guard against the might of the underworld, a challenge to their encroachment upon the rights of upright and decent citizens.

Uppermost in his mind and in his heart at all times was the defense of the rights of our people, and the maintenance of peace. He was a soldier in the truest sense. Upon his manly breast were pinned citations for merit and valor. He performed his duties faithfully and well. His record was spotless. As a husband and father, as a policeman and citizen he was in every sense of the word a gentleman. Like the uniform which he wore with credit, he was true blue.

On the fateful day of June 23, Warren K. Raby left his wife and baby to assume his place in the defense line, never to return. A true soldier, he always followed orders implicitly and promptly. It was in the line of duty that he forfeited his life for the people of Detroit. Seated alone in a scout car, he heard the report of a daylight burglary. There was no time to wait for his colleague, who at that particular moment was at lunch and properly absent. The urge to act without delay and to carry out orders prompted his stout heart to move forward into battle. One less brave and virile would have hesitated, but not Patrolman Warren K. Raby. Memorizing the description given by the screeching radio voice, he determined to do or die. He headed off the thug and his gangster moll and even when he faced extreme danger, he was not only brave and generous with his adversary but chivalrous in the extreme.

It would be of no avail, Mr. Speaker, to recite in detail all that happened in the few brief moments excepting to say that the cowardly thug, with a contemptible and worthless hag as a shield, without warning or provocation, opened fire upon this noble servant of the law. Patrolman Raby asked no quarter and gave none when he discerned the true character of his adversary. Mortally wounded though he was, Patrolman Raby whipped out his service revolver and blazed away to end the career of another worthless scoundrel who preyed upon the honest people of a great community. Patrolman Warren K. Raby answered the last command. He was rushed to a hospital. He died the death of a hero.

Seldom is a privilege to eulogize accorded a Member of Congress, because only on rare occasion does a comparable act of nobility and heroism occur and come to our attention. I could go on at length extolling the character, the virtues, the service, and the accomplishments of Patrolman Warren K. Raby. It is sufficient to say that unto the end he was faithful to the service, faithful to the people of Detroit, and that at all times he was actuated and prompted by the noblest and highest ideals. His actions were exemplary. They were an inspiration and symbolic of all that is good and great within the Police Department.

He was a tender and loving husband, a devoted and provident father, who loved his baby girl, Roberta. He loved her with all of the tenderness and devotion of a typical American daddy and as usual she waited for him on this tragic day. For her there was special significance attached to this day for everything was packed and ready for a weekend of childish fun and frolic. There was no way to explain the tragedy—there was no way to assuage the crushing blow or to dispel the sorrow which came to this little girl, who is as sweet and as loving as yours and mine. The little home at 595 Philip Avenue, which until now was so happy and bright, became overcast with the pall of tragedy and sorrow. The happy family consisting of Lucille Raby, the loving wife and mother, and the lovely daughter, Roberta, just six years old at the time, was shattered by the irreplaceable loss of the husband and daddy. He had gone to his reward, he had given his all to the service, to the Department, and to the people of Detroit, and it is intended here and now, Mr. Speaker, that this act of bravery and heroism should be entered upon the RECORD of the Congress of the United States as an inspiration and as a mark of deference and recognition, which is rightfully due the memory of the late Warren K. Raby. He was more than an ordinary citizen, he was more than an ordinary patrolman—he was a symbol and an example worthy of emulation. He was actuated by the highest ideals of a genuine American. Acts such as his should be recorded for posterity and brought to the attention of others so that they might stimulate those left behind to continued and greater efforts. While I am about it, Mr. Speaker, may I take this occasion to say that in instances such as this when the book of life has been closed in tragedy, we, as citizens, must ever remember our obligation and responsibility to these peacetime soldiers who are carrying on a relentless and bitter war against the roving and predatory armies of the underworld. A tribute such as this would be meaningless, it would be but a brassy tinkle, if it did not to the fullest extent arouse in our hearts a desire to reward such actions.

This anniversary should awaken in our minds and in our hearts the responsibility which we, as citizens and as taxpayers, owe to the faithful personnel of the Police Department as a whole. Warren K. Raby was an individual and, in this instance, a noble symbol and an example, but he was not an exception in the true sense of the word. The record of the Department is inscribed with many names of heroic officers who gave their lives for the people. A few of these I shall insert in the permanent RECORD as soon as they are available. There are a thousand more potential Warren K. Rabys in the police department today who are ready to bare their breasts to the bullets of the gangsters and the underworld thugs. Never a day passes when these men in blue, in the discharge of their routine duties, do not risk their lives and the happiness and security of their loved ones, for the benefit of the people of Detroit. Therefore, I say that my remarks today would be meaningless if we did not arouse ourselves from our stupor long enough to provide properly for those who fall by the wayside and, in similar and generous manner, provide for those who have rendered useful and faithful service over a period of many years and are retired. A pension system superior to any in the world should be evolved by the city of Detroit and should be maintained in perpetuity. It should be based upon sound, actuarial advice. It should be a retirement system not only a name but actuality. To conform with my ideas, the plan must be more than a mere pension system. It should provide for retirement which will guarantee the comfort and the happiness of the recipient. Extraneous considerations should not be permitted to dominate or even influence the retirement plan. Scientific calculations and actuarial advice should be the guiding force upon which a retirement plan should be built. Maximum support of the people of Detroit will, I am sure, be marshaled behind any substantial and generous plan which might be perfected. While this discussion applies to the police pension fund and to the acts of heroism in the Police Department, it applies in every respect with equal force to the firemen, where examples of heroism are as lofty and proportionately as numerous.

It is rather late to attempt to analyze the cause and the reason for the pitiful condition of the municipal pension fund. It would be utterly useless to try to place the blame for its insolvency upon any individual official or department at this time. It is perhaps just as well that this responsibility be not fixed. Since, however, we have learned that the municipal retirement fund has become insolvent, it now becomes the responsibility of every taxpayer and every citizen of Detroit, who should demand the reestablishment of this fund on a sound, permanent, and a generous basis.

I am willing to stand my share of the burden and, as a taxpayer and citizen, I am not an exception. The generous people of Detroit are willing to pay their fair share of the cost of creating and maintaining such a retirement fund. It must be made permanent; it must be made financially solvent at all times; it must be made to withstand the maximum possible drain, regardless of consequences or costs. It is one thing to extol posthumously the virtues and the heroism of members of the Police Department or of the Fire Department, but it is the practical, the Christian, the American way to reward not only valor and heroism, but faithful service among those who, having fulfilled all expectations during the required span of active service, become superannuated and retire.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an announcement of a golf game that is going to be played on July 4, and the benefits will all go to the Red Cross. I give notice to all Members to attend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, for the benefit of the American Red Cross, the ever faithful helper of humanity, which organization deserves at all times and especially in these days of distress and suffering the fullest cooperation of all Americans, a golf tournament and entertainment will be held on Thursday, July 4, at the Indian Spring Country Club, to which you are all cordially invited to attend.

It is most fitting that this benefit be held in the suburbs of the Nation's capital where the leaders of our Government may cooperate with those who are donating their services to this great cause which is sanctioned by the Red Cross and who will receive 100 percent of the profits. Certainly we can show our appreciation for the splendid work which has been done and will be done in the future by the American Red Cross by attending this affair at a very nominal admission of $1.

Headliners in golf have offered their services and will come to Washington to participate in this event—Gene Sarazen, Horton Smith, Paul Runyon, Jimmy Thompson, Tony Penna, Bobby Cruickshank, Dick Metz, and Henry Picard. Nationally known entertainers will appear on the day's program to assist in making this benefit the most successful ever held for the American Red Cross.

It is highly commendable of the Indian Spring Country Club to throw open their gates on Independence Day to every man, woman, and child who are always willing and ready to do their small part in assisting the Red Cross to accomplish their most worthy work in any emergency or crisis which befalls the Nation or the world.

Indian Spring Country Club extends a most cordial invitation to you all to take advantage of this opportunity to see nationally known golfers in action as well as entertainers amidst pleasant surroundings and at the same time to lend your support to the aid of the Red Cross. This affair which is less than 2 weeks away deserves the sympathetic and wholehearted cooperation of every American citizen. Decide today that you will be present on Independence Day at the Indian Spring Country Club to assist in making the benefit affair for the American Red Cross the most successful that has ever been held in the Nation's Capital.

Needless to say, it is a privilege to be given this opportunity to participate in a benefit for such a far-reaching and worthy cause. The high motives impelling the holding of this affair in Washington might well be followed in other communities throughout the United States on this Fourth of July and thereby give every American citizen an opportunity to participate in assisting the Red Cross to carry on their miraculous work particularly at this time when the demands are so heavy not only for service but for materials and supplies. It is only by the continued financial and moral support of every citizen of this country that this ever-necessary and worth-while work can be carried on by the mother of humanity—the American Red Cross.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks and to include an address by George W. Wheeler, of Bell, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TENEROWICZ asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement from the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, Mr. O. John Rogge, the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the investigations conducted by the Department of Justice in Louisiana, has just reported and makes the statement:

> Our investigations have not disclosed any criminal conduct on the part of any responsible official of the Work Projects Administration.

In view of the prominence which was given to conditions in Louisiana in the report of the committee investigating the Work Projects Administration, this statement is particularly pertinent at this time, and I quote the entire statement, as follows:

STATEMENT OF O. JOHN ROGGE, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, CONCERNING THE OPERATIONS OF THE WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION IN LOUISIANA

In the course of our investigations in Louisiana during the last year we have received numerous complaints alleging violations of the penal laws of the United States with respect to the operations of the Work Projects Administration. These complaints have chiefly charged the illegal diversion of labor and materials of the Work Projects Administration to private uses.

All cases coming to our attention were referred to the Division of Investigation of the Federal Work Projects Administration, which has its headquarters in Washington and is responsible directly to Col. F. C. Harrington, Commissioner of Work Projects. This Division has also made independent investigations of the operations of the Work Projects Administration in Louisiana. The actual investigative work was carried on under the supervision of Mr. Paul Hansen, a member of said Division of Investigation. Under his direction, a total of 158 cases were investigated in Louisiana during the period from June 1, 1939, to June 1, 1940. The various grand juries of the eastern and western districts of Louisiana participated in these investigations, with the aid of representatives of this Department.

A number of indictments were returned by the grand juries of the two Federal districts against various persons for violations of the Emergency Relief Act or the mail-fraud statute of the Federal Criminal Code. The largest group of indictments involved the use for illegal purposes of W. P. A. labor and materials that were to be used in connection with the construction program of Louisiana State University. These indictments involved the illegal diversion of W. P. A. materials from W. P. A. projects at the University to the personal use of individuals in the construction of private homes and for the benefit of subcontractors who had construction contracts with the university and were to be paid from university funds.

The persons who were indicted in these cases were George A. Caldwell, who was employed by the university as superintendent of its construction program, his assistant, Eugene Barksdale, and a number of contractors and supply men, who were alleged to have colluded with Caldwell in the wrongful diversion of such labor and materials. Caldwell has pleaded guilty to the indictments against him and is now serving aggregate sentences of 4 years in the penitentiary. Barksdale was fined $500 on a guilty plea to his indictment. A number of the other cases where indictments have been returned have already been disposed of by pleas of guilty, and, in one case, by a dismissal of the indictment by the Government.

The indictments which have been filed have almost exclusively involved private persons, although certain minor employees of the Work Projects Administration may have been implicated. Our investigations have not disclosed any criminal conduct on the part of any responsible official of the Work Projects Administration.

The investigations of complaints with respect to the operations of the Work Projects Administration in Louisiana will continue in accordance with the regular routine wherever justifiable. The matter of the alleged misuse of W. P. A. labor in connection with the manufacture of certain asphalt for private benefit is still under investigation. In addition to the indictments that have been returned, the Government is endeavoring to recover the value of materials and labor wrongfully used for private purposes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, except for the fact we have to wait for a few minutes on a message from the Senate, I would not detain my colleagues at this hour of the night, but inasmuch as we have to wait I would like to say this in the closing hours of the session before we take a recess.

In the last few critical weeks of this Congress, responding to the call to service, in my judgment, has written a notable chapter in legislative achievement. Laying aside partisan feeling, new dealers, conservative Democrats, Republicans, and what have you, have become Americans [applause] and have responded to the bugle call of service. Under the leadership of the Commander in Chief we have provided for America as best the legislative branch could provide for her defense and security. This Congress has appropriated the funds. It has made possible the legislative machinery. It is now up to the administrative branch of the Government to translate that into speedy action. [Applause.]

The Appropriations Committee of the House, acting with a degree of unanimity that is most commendable, has received, considered, and reported to the House and piloted through the House more than $5,000,000,000 of appropriations for the defense of America and the Western Hemisphere. In many instances, Mr. Speaker, we have foregone careful, minute scrutiny and inquiry that ordinarily would have accompanied such mountainous appropriations, but we felt there was an emergency and that in an emergency you have to trust people. We received the recommendations of the Army, Navy, and the other agencies, and we acted upon them. But I want to say now that we shall expect in days to come an accurate accounting from every agency of the Government for every red copper penny that this Congress has appropriated. [Applause.] And for whatever it may be worth, let the message go down to administrative heads that they may not infer from our speedy action that we are going to forego the right hereafter to demand an accurate accounting and to demand for the American people 100 pennies worth of defense for every dollar that we have appropriated to date. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we are taking this recess at a period when we are all conscious of the tremendous responsibility which rests upon the Members of the Congress as the elected representatives of the people. We have been complimentary of what the House and the Senate have done, and they well deserve that compliment.

To me the most magnificent, the most enheartening thing connected with the period is to see the American people who just a short time ago were careless of responsibility, like children at play, unwilling to give attention to matters of serious concern, respond now to the demands of the Nation. The most wonderful thing in this dark period is this people, standing stalwart, determined, conscious of danger, unafraid, a nation reborn. It is a great thing to see men and women and children of America becoming again fitted to live in a free government, to see the men, women, and children of America no longer considering the Government as an "it" thing, no longer speaking of Government responsibility as responsibility of "they," to see the people of this great country conscious of the fact that they are the Government. [Applause.] To see the sons and daughters of America, the people in the communities of this country, as they resolve, and we can tell by the letters they have written us, and to see those people determined that under God they are going to defend this country, preserve its liberties, and bequeath to their children an opportunity to live under a free government. [Applause.]

Tonight I pay my tribute to a people, my people, aroused, regenerated, and as I believe rapidly becoming fit to guide and to govern the great Republic. The most magnificent spectacle on the earth today is the American people rallying to the defense of free government and demonstrating again that they are fit to govern. We will go home and pay our compliments to our people, our people upon whom the hope of the ages for free government depends. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GARRETT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain communications I have received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, the recent disastrous developments in Europe are too tragic for a democratic, liberty-loving people to contemplate. We are shocked with surprise at the strength of the German forces and the weakness of the defense offered by the Allies. Like Napoleon, Mr. Hitler "seems to have robbed fortune of her secrets, and bewildered nations gaze in silence while he turns the streams of success according to his vacillating whims."

No one is able to furnish definite and satisfactory reasons for the success of one and the failure of others. It is true there are many suggestions and various reasons assigned, but the opinion of one informed person is just about as good as another. Some say that Mr. Hitler is a genius or a man of destiny and that his success is due to his personal magnetism coupled with his advanced implements of war in the hands of a better trained and more determined soldiery. Others say that the failure of the allied nations is due to the propagandized sentiment of peace at any price promoted and stimulated by organized agencies and influences of the Nazi government in recent years, and that this sentiment is responsible for the failure of the Allies to make the necessary preparation for their own defense. Coupled with this lack of implements of war the people had forgotten that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and as a consequence were dispossessed of that spirt of patriotism so essential in any army to wage a successful war.

There are others who say that the lack of preparedness on the part of the Allies can be attributed to the actions of the labor parties in England and France influenced and directed by communistic activities from other nations. They had propagandized the Allied nations to the point where they had reduced their armaments and the people led to believe that "war drums would throb no longer and the battle flags were all furled in the brotherhood of man and the federation of the world."

Regardless of what the causes or influences, there is no denying the fact that Mr. Hitler within the past half decade has equipped his country with every deadly device of warfare and has inspired his people to the point where they were ready and prepared for vengeance, whereas at the same time the Allies "slumbered and slept." The result is not surprising in the light of present-day information.

The thought that startles the people of this Nation is to realize that we have unconsciously drifted into the same boat with the Allied nations insofar as being prepared to defend our Government and its institutions against a powerful and ruthless invader. The question now is what are we going to do about it and how are we going to proceed? There is little doubt but that the Congress will vote for the appropriation provided for in the bill reported by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], because if I interpret the sentiment of the House the Members are willing to make whatever sacrifice is necessary to provide adequate defense to protect our Government and its cherished institutions from the invasions from any foreign foe, although I am convinced that the membership of the present Congress is decidedly opposed to this country becoming involved in any foreign war. [Applause.]

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair, to await a message from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 9:09 o'clock p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed, without amendment, to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 83. Concurrent resolution providing for a recess of Congress until July 1, 1940.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9007) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10104) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9575. An act to amend the Federal Aid Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

H. J. Res. 517. Joint resolution to clear title to certain real estate.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with House Concurrent Resolution 83, the Chair declares the House adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on July 1 next.

Thereupon (at 9 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 83, the House adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 9808. A bill to authorize exchanges of lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; without amendment (Rept. No. 2701). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JARMAN: Committee on Printing. House Resolution 513. Resolution authorizing the printing of the prayers of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives (Rept. No. 2703). Ordered to be printed.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1940

In accordance with the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 83, adopted June 22, 1940, the Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

Rev. Elnathan Tartt, Jr., rector of Grace Church, Canton, Miss., offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God and Heavenly Father, Thou who hast made all nations of mankind to dwell on the face of the whole earth and who dost will for all Thy children that peace of God which passeth all understanding: We humbly beseech Thee that, with tender pity and compassion, Thou wouldst look down upon the nations of the earth in this hour of their troubled confusion and great uncertainty. Instead of fear, give us faith; instead of despair, give us hope to meet victoriously the problems of our world crisis.

Teach us to know that war, social injustice, and the suffering of the innocent are unholy conditions which prevail today, not according to Thine own blessed will and purpose but that war and turmoil are the results of our racial hatreds, our unspeakable selfishness, and our cruel intolerance.

As colaborers with God and as brethren one of another, may we work together to right wrong, and to establish international brotherhood. May we recognize our responsibility to keep peace at home and to assist in restoring the peace of the world.

That we may find inspiration and strength for our task, grant unto us a vision of Jesus, the Prince of Peace, that in His light we may see light, and in His wisdom may not stumble; so shall we ourselves enter and bring many others into the experience of that abundant life of happiness, peace, and prosperity, which it is Thine alone, O God, to give, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The Vice President laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Ohio, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Whereas the United States Congress has been ordered by the President to adjourn by June 22, and

Whereas it has been said that the President has threatened to prorogue the Congress, and, if he does it will be the first time in America that such power has been used by any President; and

Whereas it is admitted America is faced with a grave national emergency; and

Whereas United States Senator JOHN THOMAS has just said:

"If adjournment should take place on June 22, no power on earth but the President could call us back.

"Until we are called back, the sole control over our foreign policy would remain in the hands of the President.

"The responsibility for the sole direction of the foreign policy of the United States is too much for one man to have."; and

Whereas, if the President should prorogue the Congress, such act would lend color to the belief that he desires dictatorial powers: Now be it

Resolved by the members of this house of representatives, That we hereby urge the Congress to continue in session indefinitely, and thereby function as is contemplated by our Constitution, our democracy, and our traditions.

We assert that those Senators and Congressmen who desire to leave Washington now should be kept home by the voters forever.

We urge the Congress to keep dictatorial powers out of the hands of any President, regardless of his party; be it further

Resolved, Copies of this resolution be sent to the President, to the Vice President, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to Senator THOMAS.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Screen Publicists and Advertisers Guild, New York City, N. Y., protesting against adoption of the so-called Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a recent executive session of the American Neurological Association, favoring the establishment of a central neuropsychiatric institute in the Public Health Service to carry on research work in nervous and mental diseases, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Ninth Ward Improvement and Protective Association, New Orleans, La., relative to interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate memorials of several citizens of the State of Michigan, remonstrating against taking any steps leading toward war, and also against participation of the United States in European war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Miami, Dade County (Fla.) Chapter, Committee to Defend America, favoring the prompt enactment of legislation to place an embargo upon the shipment of scrap iron to any country outside the Western Hemisphere, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution recently adopted by a public meeting at Springfield, Tenn., favoring the granting of all possible aid, short of war, to the Allies, the adoption of an adequate rearmament and national-defense program, and the stopping of "fifth column" activities in the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Marion Post, No. 661, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Salem, Oreg., favoring an investigation as to the alleged diversion of large quantities of Army, Navy, and Air Corps equipment to foreign nations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Spirit of Liberty Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation to require international organizations operating in the United States to register with the State Department, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of Ed Swigert, of Hannibal, Mo., remonstrating against the enactment of a draft law to establish military-training camps in peacetime, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Washington (D. C.) Committee for Democratic Action, protesting against the adoption of a universal compulsory training system of youth, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Greater Miami (Fla.) Chapter, Military Order of the World War, favoring the prompt enactment of a selective-service law for the armed forces, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Miami (Dade County, Fla.) Chapter, Committee to Defend America, favoring the prompt enactment of a military selective-service law and the training of a large citizen army without delay, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Mrs. Edward H. Sewall, of Redlands, Calif., praying for the adoption of a national-defense program without war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Twentieth Encampment, Department of Arizona, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Prescott, Ariz., praying for the enactment of pending legislation to aid small mine operators and claim owners, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Williamsbridge Post, No. 1070, American Legion, Department of New York, dated at Westwood, N. J., praying that Congress remain in session during the existing emergency, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the New York State Shoe Retailers Association, held at Syracuse, N. Y., favoring an adequate national-defense program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Harbor District Chambers of Commerce, in the State of California, endorsing an adequate national-defense program and the suppression of subversive activities, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Women's Welfare League of Dallas, Tex., favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program, and also that Congress remain in session during the existing emergency, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate several resolutions adopted by the American Legion Convention of the Fifteenth Congressional District, held at Mercedes, Tex., relative to making provision for sufficient beds in the local veterans' hospital, the suppression of "fifth column" activities, etc., which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a meeting of citizens at Braintree, Mass., endorsing the President's national-defense program and the rendering of all needed aid in the present war situation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by citizens of Ellis County, Tex., favoring an adequate national-defense program and the rendering of needed aid in the present war situation, etc., which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Lions Clubs of Springhill, La., Burlington, Vt., Carthage, Tex., Moundsville, W. Va., Kosciusko, Miss., and the convention of the New York State Lions Club, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program and the suppression of all subversive activities, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Coordinating Council for Peace; Ship Scalers and Painters I. L. W. U. Local 1-2; International Union United Auto Workers, No. 271 (C. I. O.); Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association of the Pacific Coast (C. I. O.); and the San Francisco Branch of the National Maritime Union of America (C. I. O.), all of San Francisco, Calif., favoring an adequate system of national defense and the preservation of all economic interests, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying that the United States keep out of war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying that the United States keep out of war and that no American troops be sent to foreign soil, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of Cissel-Saxon Post, No. 41, American Legion, Department of Maryland, favoring the adoption of an adequate national-defense program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying that peace be preserved through immediate preparedness, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying that the United States do all that it effectively and expediently can to insure the victory of the Allies, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AID TO THE ALLIES—PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, together with a letter and related papers, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the body of one of the petitions, with letter and related papers, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Believing that a victory of Hitler and his fellow dictators would be a direct menace to the United States and that his defeat would keep the threat of war from this side of the Atlantic:

We, the undersigned citizens of Maryland, call upon the Congress and Executive of the United States to make available to those forces that are still resisting the dictators in Europe all possible material aid for keeping up the fight, and to expand our industrial facilities for defense at once.

This does not involve sending an expeditionary force but arms and supplies.

MARYLAND COMMITTEE TO DEFEND AMERICA BY AIDING THE ALLIES,
Baltimore, July 1, 1940.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: We hand you herewith our petitions, signed by 17,947 citizens of Maryland, which, with those presented June 10, make a grand total of 41,522 signers. Appended is a list of 20 organizations who have volunteered unanimous official endorsement of the petition.

We respectfully request that you, as our representative in the Senate, read the short petition herewith to the Senate of the United States, and request that it be spread on the Journal of that honorable body, along with the figures recited above.

With deep appreciation of your consideration, we are,

Very respectfully yours,

KATHARINE JEANNE GALLAGHER,
ALEXANDER G. PORTER,
WM. D. WHITE, Delegation.

Agnes, secretary.

POINTS RELATING TO CONFIRMATION OF COLONELS KNOX AND STIMSON IN PRESENTING PETITIONS TO SENATOR TYDINGS, JULY 1, 1940

In urging the confirmation of Colonels Knox and Stimson to positions in the Cabinet to which President Roosevelt has appointed them, may I point out two all-controlling reasons which transcend any possible political considerations:

1. We must have complete unity of action in a time of national emergency. The appointment of two outstanding citizens of the opposition party will be a large factor in securing the needed support of all political elements.

2. We must recognize the elementary fact that the first step needed for keeping America out of war is to keep the threat of war away from America by doing everything practicable toward the defeat on the other side of the Atlantic of the only power whose victory would threaten the Americas. This fact Messrs. Knox and Stimson have clearly seen. Indeed, it is because they have recognized and called attention to this important element of defense that they have been attacked in some quarters. I feel certain that all of those who have signed our petitions and the vast majority of your other constituents will approve of an affirmative vote in the matter of these confirmations.

PETITION OF WE THE AMERICANS

Mr. REYNOLDS presented a petition from We the Americans, Philadelphia, Pa., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE THE AMERICANS,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 21, 1940.

To the Congress of the United States:

We the Americans, a national organization for the protection of constitutional government, having recorded our unanimous disapproval of our republic's participation in European affairs in any respect, affirming Washington's principle of no European entanglements and upholding the Monroe Doctrine, and demanding that no armed forces of the United States of America be sent to participate in the present European conflict and that our foreign policy be supervised and directed as required by the Constitution of the United States and not in the manner it is at present directed, and having resolved that we demand of our Government adequate and complete armament for the defense of our country from any and all possible enemies, together with an adequate Army and Navy personnel, and being resolved that each and every member of We the Americans actively fulfill his pledge "to combat every alien and foreign influence which may be destructive of our American form of government," and as actively to combat those who attempt to encroach upon our Constitution and to usurp our rights and liberties, hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America to take such procedure as will effectuate the purposes herein expressed.

Respectfully submitted.

WE THE AMERICANS, INC.,

President.

EIGHT-HOUR WORKING DAY

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I present a telegram addressed to me by E. F. Burke, secretary, Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association, of San Francisco, Calif., relating to a pending labor controversy in San Francisco as indicated in the telegram. I ask unanimous consent that the telegram be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 25, 1940.

Hon. SHERIDAN DOWNEY,
Washington, D. C.:

The Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association wishes to acquaint you with the following facts in relation to our present negotiations. The employers are utilizing the present war hysteria in an endeavor to break down the conditions we have enjoyed in the past by refusing to complete negotiations in good faith on our proposed agreements. We have been negotiating for the past 9 months and during that time were able to come to a mutual agreement on many points in dispute. At the present time the union finds itself in a position where there is one basic issue; that is our demand for an 8-hour working day, which was adopted by the United States Congress in 1892. We have been unable to arrive at an agreement on this point. This agreement terminates on June 30. If the present attitude of the shipowners continues a disruption of maritime commerce on the Pacific coast will inevitably result. The marine cooks and stewards want to prevent this happening and sincerely believe this situation can be avoided, provided the employers immediately cease using the war hysteria subterfuge to evade bona fide negotiations. We are therefore calling upon you to use your good offices to see that a satisfactory agreement is amicably contracted at an early date. Please insert this wire in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

E. F. BURKE,
Secretary, Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association.

RESOLUTION OF BURLINGTON (VT.) POST, NO. 2, AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. AUSTIN presented a resolution of Burlington Post, No. 2, American Legion, Department of Vermont, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the American Legion has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. Ernest W. Gibson, Sr., late a Senator from the State of Vermont;

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God to take from our midst our beloved comrade, Senator Gibson, member of the Brattleboro Post, No. 5, of the American Legion of Vermont; and

Whereas this comrade was well beloved by all who knew him for his courage, patriotism, and deep human interest in his comrades, which was exemplified by a devoted life of service to the members of the American Legion and to the veterans of all wars; and

Whereas Senator Gibson was a superior husband, father, soldier, statesman, and citizen, having served faithfully and well his home town, his State, and the Nation, both in peace and in war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Burlington Post, No. 2, of the American Legion, Department of Vermont, in special meeting held in the city of Burlington, this 21st day of June 1940, hereby extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved family in their great loss and our own high appreciation of his devoted service to our great organization; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded forthwith to the family of our departed comrade at Brattleboro, Vt., and that a copy of this resolution be spread upon our permanent records, and that copies of it be sent to the American Legion of Vermont and to the national organization at Indianapolis, Ind.

J. Howard O'Neill, chairman; Christie L. Merrill, Clarence E. Lynch, Dr. Allston L. Fogg, Edwin R. Forrest, James J. Carney, Stanley E. Whittle, Ray S. White, Sr., J. Glover Fletcher, resolutions committee, Burlington Post, No. 2, the American Legion, Department of Vermont.

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS—REFERENCE OF BILL TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Claims I report a resolution referring to the Court of Claims a bill now pending and ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 288) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2926) entitled "A bill for the relief of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims of the United States, in pursuance of the provisions of section 151 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C., sec. 257); and said court shall proceed to investigate and determine the facts and submit such report as may be required or warranted under the provisions of said act.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4175. A bill to amend section 61 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, by adding a proviso which will permit States to organize military units not a part of the National Guard, and for other purposes; and

S. 4176. A bill for the relief of First Lt. John Albert Goodpasture, Jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 9491. An act relating to the compensation of former employees of the Railway Mail Service in certain positions and reinstated prior to August 14, 1937; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 10100. An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT—PIPE LINES

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3753) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

EXPEDITION OF NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution for appropriate reference. It expresses the sentiment of the Senate that in the preparation of articles for preparedness both for the Army and the Navy the War and Navy Departments should insist on contractors putting on more than one shift of workmen, trying to utilize 24 hours rather than a shorter period. I ask that the resolution be appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 289) was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the program of strengthening the national defense should go forward with the greatest possible speed, and that all contracts entered into by the United States or any agency thereof for the purpose of carrying out such program should provide for utilizing to the fullest practicable extent the productive capacities of the contractors, including the employment of personnel in as many shifts as possible during each period of 24 hours.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH AT GRADUATION EXERCISES OF F. B. I. POLICE ACADEMY

[Mr. McKELLAR asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah at the graduation exercises of the fourteenth session of the Federal Bureau of Investigation National Police Academy, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR TRUMAN ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on national defense, delivered by him at St. Louis, Mo., on June 30, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

T. V. A.—EXPERIMENT IN DEMOCRACY—ARTICLE BY WILLIAM R. CLARK, O. P.

[Mr. NORRIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by William R. Clark, O. P., entitled "T. V. A.—Experiment in Democracy," which appears in the Appendix.]

WATER FOR CALIFORNIA—ARTICLE BY RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

[Mr. NORRIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Richard L. Neuberger entitled "Water for California," which appears in the Appendix.]

LETTER BY SENATOR HOLT

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by him, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

REPORT OF UNITED STATES DELAWARE VALLEY TERCENTENARY COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 856)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the request of the United States Delaware Valley Tercentenary Commission, which was established in accordance with the provisions of Public Resolution No. 102, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 5, 1936, and extended under Public Resolution No. 71, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved August 25, 1937, I transmit herewith the Commission's report setting forth the incidents and activities in connection with the celebration which was held at Wilmington, Del., Philadelphia, Pa., and Swedesboro and Salem, N. J., in the year 1938.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 1, 1940.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

NOMINATION OF WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Florida is given permission to address the Senate. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in the last 2 or 3 days there have been two names prominent in the headlines of the press of the country, and two photographs have appeared upon almost every front page. The first gentleman carrying the attention of the country was Adolf Hitler, and the second was the Honorable Wendell Willkie, Republican nominee for President of the United States. I take it, Mr. President, that a great deal of the adoration which has been extended to both those men arises from a recognition of the fact that both are masters of the modern technique called the "blitzkrieg."

We have in this Chamber those who have felt the sharp point of the "blitzkrieg" dagger at the Republican convention. While honorable Senators of this body went out to speak to the people in behalf of their candidacy for the high office of President, while they traveled thousands of miles, while they addressed hundreds of thousands of Republican and independent voters the country over, this master of the political "blitzkrieg" remained comfortably under the awnings of Wall Street and took over the control of the Republican Party from the inside, the way Wall Street is accustomed to take over another corporation—by negotiation and purchase. That is the way money—big money—works. And this was the best job of corporate reorganization Wall Street has done since the "good old American" days of 1929.

So I want to commiserate with the very able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] for the effort that he uselessly spent in trying to serve the American people in this high and powerful office. I hope that he will not lose sympathy for the normal political processes because they failed in his particular case, for there have been many others in his company.

The able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] traveled the length and breadth of this great Nation addressing himself to the voters, telling them what he stood for, what he proposed to do if there were conferred upon him the majestic powers of the Presidency of the United States, but he also learned that the political "blitzkrieg" does not condone the machinery of that process.

There was another able Senator upon this floor, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the champion of a great cause, the leader of a mighty phalanx which advanced upon that convention, receiving its impetus not from many little, sequestered offices where magic buttons may be magically pressed and the telephone line may communicate with fidelity, suggestion or direction to some obedient hearer, but from many sincere, loyal followers. They were proud of his illustrious name, for his father had adorned the Presidency of the United States and had lent the ornament of his great name to the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Following in the illustrious footsteps of his eminent parent, the able Senator from Ohio aspired, with laudable ambition, to serve, as his father had served, the people of the United States. The only mistake he made, Mr. President, was in not being up on modern political methods. But the eminent and honest Senator from Ohio need not feel badly, because it is tough to fight a billion-dollar utilities executive who was smart enough to say:

In my business it pays to have dandruff on your shoulders.

We have seen what happened to the Maginot line. The French thought it the best defense the world could conceive of, but it did not last long against the "blitzkrieg" of modern warfare. So I want to commiserate with our colleagues, to tell them that we have not lost faith in the processes they followed, and we hope in another day that the old American method will bear richer fruit than it did in this particular case.

But now, Mr. President, what the country is interested in is what has been said by this new champion of the Republican cause. I was not one of those who looked with misgiving or regret upon the holding of our political conventions. Instead of having to read the editorials of a thousand newspapers and to await Mr. Gallup's poll to see what Republicans were thinking about, instead of having to rely upon the divided counsel of our Republican colleagues here upon the Senate floor, I knew that the Republican convention would elect fresh from a Republican convention a new champion and that he would be able to speak as one with authority.

The American people could then turn their ears toward the appeal of his voice; they could listen to the magic of his solution of the country's problems. I was gratified, therefore, that the people who were in the Republican ranks would have an opportunity to adopt a platform, and to select a nominee who could be regarded by all as the responsible Republican spokesman.

Mr. President, that is all romantic history today. This colorful figure from Wall Street, in the company of his colleagues in that community, has now been adopted as the standard bearer of the grand old party. Of course, he is not so old as a member of that party; but it is an old party, and there are still many who think it is a grand party. So the prestige of republicanism, and the great name that republicanism is in this country, are now embodied and epitomized in Wendell Willkie.

Mr. President, Mr. Willkie has already declared himself to the American people. He says that his purpose is unity in America. What I ask, what other Senators on this floor are asking, what the American people are asking, is, What kind of unity, and unity at what price? Does unity mean the unity that Wall Street would impose on America by the adoption of its policies and its principles?

Now we are engaged in the greatest program of preparation this country has ever engaged in, in peacetime. It is absolutely necessary that every unit of this Nation's great economy be concentrated upon that single effort and objective.

I want to know what kind of unity Mr. Willkie thinks of when he says there must be unity in America. Does it mean the unity that will come from cooperation with the Government's program; or does it mean that the segments of industry will lay down their own terms upon which they will prepare America to defend herself?

Is he going to encourage or discourage industrial leaders like Henry Ford, who says, "I will have a foreign policy of my own. I will make planes for whomsoever I choose to make them. I will not follow the policy of the President and the policy of the Congress and coordinate my efforts with their Defense Council, who come and appeal to me to take a part. No. I will set myself up as a sacrosanct individual in this economy, and I will do what I like to do."

Is Mr. Wendell Willkie going to believe in that kind of unity, or is he going to mean to the Nation the kind of unity that comes from asking and demanding that every phase of our economy put itself as a willing servant at the command of the duly constituted Government of the American people?

Mr. President, when President Wilson's great program, the T. V. A. project, a defense project for this Nation, was proposed by the administration and adopted by the Government, did Mr. Wendell Willkie join in that great defense effort? Did he believe in unity at that time; or did he spend his energy day and night, in the matchless way in which he can exert himself, in trying to sabotage that kind of a defense program and that kind of unity?

We had in this body a Major Berry, who had a little stone quarry down in the Tennessee Valley. He wanted to sell that stone quarry to the United States Government. He asked a few hundred thousand dollars for it; and, as a result, he was denounced from one end of the country to the other for trying to hold up the Government and the T. V. A. program. And then what happened? A little bit later this new champion of unity, then the champion of disunity, made his chief objective the destruction of that program except it go forward on his terms. It was not enough that the Congress, the people's Congress—not enough that the President, the people's President—had laid down a utility policy for the Nation which he had tried to sabotage in Congress and lost. He employed in his efforts to destroy that program the same "blitzkrieg" methods, by sending tens of thousands of telegrams here, that he succeeded with in Philadelphia.

I say that was a case in which the people's representatives and the people's President laid down a defense program, and, instead of cooperating with that program as a matter of unity, he was the champion of those who willed to destroy it.

So, Mr. President, we have a right to ask, upon what terms does Mr. Wendell Willkie expect the American people to rally? I say the American people will rally to a program that offers an honorable unity; that pursues the democratic and the American way; but they will not unify themselves upon anything less honorable and less American than that kind of a unified program.

If private enterprise wants a kind of unity which will permit it to write the ticket, instead of the Government telling private enterprise—as they will some of these days, I am afraid, have to tell the boys—what to do and see that they do it, is Mr. Wendell Willkie going to say "no"?

If the Government cracks on the head some recalcitrant industrialist because he does not obey the Government's command, is Mr. Willkie going to believe in a policy of unity that would appease and soothe that disgruntled man, rather than challenging him to a unified effort in defending America? And if the Government decides to prepare in one way, and somebody decides that another way is better, is Mr. Willkie going to support the kind of unity that will come from the people's representatives and their policy, or the kind of unity that may be dictated by avaricious and greedy private enterprise?

If to prepare and defend America it becomes necessary for the Government to take over industries to make war materials, is Mr. Willkie going to agree to that, or insist on a unity which gives individual enterprise what it wants, whatever happens to the country?

Mr. President, when we speak about unity, I recall that a long time ago a Being was led up on a mountain top, and He was shown a rich valley below. The devil appealed to the Christ for unity. "Why struggle," he said, "when you can have all the soul can wish for?" But the Christ could not subscribe to unity in His day, because to admit into the councils of the church the demons of the underworld was not only to destroy any possibility of unity, but to contaminate in its inception the holy birth of Christ's church.

So the American people are entitled to know what is the program of Mr. Willkie for the defense of America, because that one thing stands up to challenge, more than all else, our concern.

I want to know, therefore, upon what terms does Mr. Willkie propose to unify America? I, for one, am not willing to let Mr. Thomas Lamont, who was instrumental in the management of Mr. Willkie's campaign at Philadelphia, write the ticket of Americanism upon which I shall be expected to join in unity, unless Mr. Lamont changes his whole background and political philosophy; and I am not willing to let a man who was the exalted leader of the group that wanted to destroy the cooperative effort under this Government which has given the greatest measure of benefit the masses of the people of this country have ever enjoyed say now with impunity, "That is the thing that is the danger to the American people—this bureaucracy that was written by the people's Congress"—while he lauds a bureaucracy which dwells in some skyscraper and weaves the pattern of life for millions of supposedly free Americans.

Mr. President, I have heard some of Mr. Willkie's speeches, and I pay tribute to the artistry with which they have been delivered, to the matchless glamor that has been exhibited, to a showman who is the equal of any that American politics has ever had—a man who is a master of the modern technique.
